"But it is another thing altogether, when those who have produced and accumulated are called upon to abstain from consuming until they have given food and clothing, not only to all who now exist, but to all whom these and their descendants may think fit to call into existence! Such an obligation acknowledged and acted upon, would suspend all checks, both positive and preventive; there would be nothing to hinder population from starting forward at its most rapid rate; and, as the natural increase of capital would, at the best, not be more rapid than before, taxation, to make up the growing deficiency, must advance with the same gigantic strides. The attempt would of course be made to exact labor in exchange for support. But experience has shown the sort of work to be expected from recipients of public charity. Where the pay is not given for the sake of the work, but work is found for the sake of the pay, inefficiency is a matter of course: to extract real work from day-laborers without the power of dismissal, is only practicable by the power of the lash.

"But, let them work ever so efficiently, the increasing population could not increase the produce proportionally: the surplus, after all were fed, would bear a less and less proportion to the whole produce and to the population; and the increase of people going on in a constant ratio, while the increase of produce went on in a diminishing ratio, the surplus would in time be wholly absorbed; taxation for the support of the poor would engross the whole income of the country; the payers and the receivers would be melted down into one mass. The check to population, either by death or prudence, could not then be staved off any longer, but must come into operation suddenly and at once; everything which places mankind above a nest of ants or a colony of beavers having perished in the interval! These consequences have been so often and so clearly pointed out by authors of reputation, in writings well known and easily accessible, that ignorance of them on the part of educated persons is no longer pardonable. It is doubly discredit-able in any person setting up for a public teacher to ignore these considerations, or to dismiss them silently, and discuss and declaim on wages and poor laws, not as if these arguments could be refuted, but as if they did not exist.

"No remedies for low wages have the smallest chance of being efficacious, which do not operate on and through the minds and habits of the people. While these are unaffected, any contrivance, even if successful, for temporarily improving the condition of the very poor, would but let slip the reins by which population was previously curbed; and could only, therefore, continue to produce its effect, if, by the whip and spur of taxation, capital were compelled to follow at an equally accelerated pace. But this process could not possibly continue for long together, and whenever it stopped, it would leave the country with an increased number of the poorest class, and a diminished proportion of all except the poorest, or, if it continued long enough as in modern Egypt, with next to none at all. For to this complexion must it come at last, when the natural checks to population are removed without substituting others.

"No one," says Mill, "has a right to bring creatures into life to be supported by other people." Yet there are abundance of writers and public speakers, including many of most ostentatious pretensions to high feeling, whose views of life are so truly brutish, that they see hardship in preventing paupers from breeding hereditary paupers in the workhouse itself. Posterity will one day ask with astonishment, what sort of people it could be among whom such preachers could find proselytes.

If a man cannot support even himself unless others help him, those others are at least entitled to say that they will not also undertake the support of any offspring which it is physically possible for him to call into the world. It would be possible, perhaps, for a State to guarantee employment to all who are already born. But if it should do this, it would be bound in self-protection, and for the sake of every purpose for which government exists, to provide and insist that no person should be born without its consent. If the ordinary and spontaneous motives to self-restraint are removed, others must be substituted. At least, restrictions on marriage, corresponding to those existing in Norway, Switzerland, and many parts of Germany (where young men are required to prove they have sufficient property to support a family before the consent of the authorities can be obtained), should be indispensable, as well as severe penalties upon those who have children which they are unable to support. "To give profusely to the people, whether under the name of charity or of employment, without placing them under such influences that prudential motives shall act powerfully upon them, is to lavish the means of benefiting mankind, without attaining the object," wrote Mill, in summing up upon this subject. But "guarantee to them a certain payment, either by law or by the feeling of the community; and no amount of comfort you can give them will make either them or their descendants look to their own self-restraint as the proper means for preserving them in that state. You will only make them indignantly claim the continuance of your guarantee, to themselves and their full complement of possible posterity. An effective national education of the children of the laboring class is the first thing needful. Without entering into disputable points, it may be asserted without scruple that the aim of all intellectual training for the masses of the people should be to cultivate common-sense, to qualify them for forming a sound practical judgment of the circumstances by which they are surrounded. Whatever in the intellectual department can be superadded to this is chiefly ornamental; while this is the indispensable ground-work on which education must rest. Let this object once be acknowledged and kept in view as the thing to be first aimed at, and there will be little difficulty in deciding either what to teach, or in what manner to teach it."

A. W. K.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

THE PRINCESS LOUISE is making arrangements for an Art School in Canada.

GEN. NEAL DOW, the veteran temperance reformer, is lecturing in Vermont.

MR. JOHN RUSKIN is said to be a student of snakes, and this fact will make doubly interesting the lecture which he will give in London on St. Patrick's Day,—the lecture being appropriately entitled, "A Caution to Snakes."

PROFESSOR PROCTOR says that he finds the interest in scientific matters much more widely spread in America than in England, more people attending lectures here and reading and thinking intelligently upon these subjects.

GEN. BENJ. F. BUTLER is to deliver a lecture, under the auspices of the Veteran Corps of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, at Steinway Hall, Sunday evening, March 14, in behalf of the Irish Relief Fund. His subject will be "The Irish Soldier."

T. W. CURTIS, of Meadville, Pa., has been recently doing Free Religious missionary work in Connecticut. He finds a growing tendency in the direction of organization; but he does not seem aware of other tendencies which render it dangerous just now.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE has just lost her mother, who has died at the venerable age of ninety-two. Mrs. Nightingale married in 1818 the late Mr. William Edward Shore, of Embley Park, Hampshire, and of Leahurst, Derbyshire, who assumed the name of Nightingale by Royal sign manual, on inheriting the estates of his maternal grand-uncle, Mr. Peter Nightingale.

PRINCE BISMARCK's life at his country house at Varzin is very quiet. He sees few visitors, rises and goes to bed early, and passes a good share of his time in reading French novels. He is said to be constantly having law-suits, the last being about some wild boars belonging to him which some thoughtless neighbor had killed. The veranda of the Prince's house makes it rather conspicuous, as it is painted a bright blue and white. At dinner, his two big dogs sit on either side of him, and at his conclusion are fed by the hand of their master.

PROF. HITCHCOCK, of Amherst College, lately told his students that brain-work, properly engaged in, was healthful to body and mind; but the brain might easily be overworked. Suicides follow school examinations in England, and ill-health accompanies them in our high schools. Children cannot use the brain more than three hours daily, and brain work is more hurtful here than in Europe. Let us educators then dispense with much of this intense cramming. Worry, speed, greed, and excess in our school-work are elements of disorder in the health of young pupils.

THERE IS A GOOD DEAL of significance in the fact that anti-Comstockism, free-lovism, and bigamy are so frequently associated. Mr. Charles A. Byrne, for example, the editor of a New York penny daily called Truth, whose principal distinction seems to be (like that of its namesake with the verbal extension) as untruthful as possible, and to devote a certain portion of each issue to fierce assaults upon Anthony Comstock, has just been arrested for bigamy. The trial was postponed for two weeks. The judge, however, decided that Byrne should deposit twenty dollars for the support of the woman, who claims to be his lawful wife, in the mean time, as she was entirely destitute.

PERHAPS one of the secrets of Buckle's great popularity with the boys of his acquaintance was that he was strongly convinced of the necessity of not burdening their brains with too much work. He had no faith in the efficacy of keeping them long at prescribed lessons, and was all in favor of encouraging them to acquire knowledge by other inducements. When he was consulted by parents,—and, indeed, whether he was consulted or not,—his advice was always toward the shortening of the hours of lessons and the extension of the hours of freedom. In this matter, he reasoned from his own experience, as John Stuart Mill did in his estimate of what a boy could profitably learn. His experience was very different from Mill's, but it was probably quite as unfit to be taken as a general rule of education.—The Academy.

MISS KATE FIELD has brought back from England a new idea. It is the plan of a Coöperative Millinery and Dressmaking Association. The project, though new here, is not so on the other side of the water, where similar establishments have been for some time in successful operation. Miss Field proposes to issue stock for the company to the amount of $250,000, a considerable share of which, it is stated, is already taken. The enterprise contemplates, in connection with the sales-rooms of the association, a lunch room and also a reading-room. That will certainly do much to add to the agreeableness and comfort of shopping. It will occasion some regret, however, that the movement is apparently wholly in the interest of the rich and well-to-do, in cheapening the price of articles purchased, and not at all in that of the working-people who produce them. If we are wrong in this conjecture, we simply ask for more light on the subject as to this particular.

AUERBACH, according to the Berlin correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, is of a very thrifty turn. He seldom loses an opportunity for profit. He has made by his writings, I understand, 300,000 marks, some $75,000—a large sum in Germany; and he has invested so judiciously that he has, counting his earnings, some 16,000 marks, or $4,000 a year. He edits and publishes here a popular almanac, which he finds remunerative, and looks after his least interest shrewdly and vigilantly. During the French war, he accompanied one of the German Princes to the field, and wrote army letters to one of the Berlin newspapers. He has lived at Mannheim, Frankfurt, Bonn, and Cologne; but of late years he has taken up his permanent abode here, seeing that the capital of the new German Empire is the best place for an author who has an established reputation. He long since surrendered his Judaism, and is now a rationalist, as most German men of letters are. His face denotes his Jewish parentage: he is far from handsome, but he has an amiable, pleasant expression, is reputed to be very kind-hearted and particularly fond of children. He dresses plainly, has simple tastes and demonstrative, unpolished manners. When he is walking meditatively through the Unter den Linden, he looks like a rural tradesman in Sunday clothes; but he imagines that all the world knows him to be Berthold Auerbach.

FOREIGN.

AMONG THE PRIVATE audiences recently given by the Pope was one for Monsignor Hostlot, who was the bearer of sixty thousand francs in gold from Cardinal McClosky.

A LADY'S MAID in Paris is under arrest for an attempt to murder her mistress for scolding. She tried vainly to tear out her tongue, and was about to throw her out of the window.

THERE ARE AT PRESENT in France no fewer than two thousand six hundred and fifty-eight parishes unprovided with pastors, and this notwithstanding all the efforts of the bishops to obtain candidates for holy orders, and although old priests anxious to retire from their cures are kept in harness. At the same time the Abbé Bougaud bewails the fact of there being some three thousand parishes in which there is neither church nor curé nor any regular services. The State, he says, will only build some thirty chapels of ease a year, and so this lamentable state of affairs will long continue. But, seeing the difficulty in obtaining priests, the government seems justified in not proceeding faster.

A CURIOUS HABIT of English ladies at the theatre is noted by a French contemporary. The fair English women, so says the Gallic writer, generally wear a large gold cross at the throat; and this cross is hollow, and is filled with some "precious cordial," sherry, Madeira, or brandy. Thus fitted, this religious symbol assumes an unexpected utilitarian aspect, and plays a serious rôle in the existence of the ladies of England. It helps them to satisfy their ingenious instincts of comfort, and allows them to take, without scandal before everybody at a ball or the theatre, one of those tonics which, it is said, the people of the North need to excite, awaken, and stimulate their nerves. This custom can be observed nightly at the opera.

PROFESSOR FRANZ FERDINAND BENARY, of the University of Berlin, whose death is announced by a cable despatch, was born at Cassel, March 22, 1805; studied theology and philosophy at Bonn and Halle, graduating as doctor of philosophy in 1827; concluded his theological and Oriental studies at Berlin, became an assistant professor there in 1829, and full professor of Biblical exegesis in 1831. He was one of the earliest thorough masters of the Sanskrit language, and refused an invitation to become professor of that language at St. Petersburg. He published at Berlin, in 1830, a Latin translation of the Sanskrit poem, "Nalodaya," accompanied by the original text and critical notes. He was author of a learned monograph on the "Levirate Marriages among the Hebrews" (1835), which procured him the degree of D.D. from the University of Halle, and contributed a large number of essays, reviews, and memoirs on Oriental subjects to the reviews. He was an elder brother of Prof. Albert Agathon Benary, of the Real Gymnasium at Berlin, who was one of the leaders of the popular movement at Berlin in March, 1848.

THE LONDON Telegraph in a recent number says: Those curious personal resemblances, which are not uncommon, have given rise to the popular belief that every man has his double somewhere in the world; and a superstition exists in Germany to the effect that he whom ill luck shall bring into contact with his "Doppelgänger" will do well to prepare himself for death, as such a meeting portends a proximate passage over the Stygian Ferry to both parties concerned. It appears that the double of an eminent professor of physiology at the Berlin University is a hair-dresser, whose shop is situate in the immediate neighborhood of that institution, and who, well aware of his likeness to the learned doctor, carefully copies the latter in dress, bearing, and demeanor. A few days ago, the professor was walking homeward from his lecture-room, when a gentleman, entirely unknown to him, stopped him in the streets, saying, "Follow me to my house. I want you to cut my hair!" The amiable professor, one of whose principles of life it has always been never to withhold from a fellow-creature any service that it might be within his power to render, meekly accompanied the stranger home, and there addressed himself to the task thus imperatively prescribed to him. Forlorn of professional scissors, he picked up a pair of shears used for cutting paper from a writing-table in the dressing-room to which he was conducted, and, with this implement, proceeded most conscientiously to cut his victim's hair down to the very roots. When he had cleared about half the skull of its hirsute covering, he accidentally stuck the point of his shears into the scalp of his patient, who, springing to his feet in great pain and wrath, exclaimed, "Can't you take care what you are about? Do you call yourself a hair-cutter?" "A hair-cutter!" replied the astonished sage. "Certainly not. I am only Professor B—, very much at your service, as you perceive."

Communications.

A FABLE.

WORCESTER, Feb. 13, 1880.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Some time since, the Rev. Mr. Knapp went into Canada, having some business with a Catholic priest who resided in a small village in that country. This village had the most woe-begone, dilapidated appearance, dirty outside, dirty inside; and the squalid wretches of this village appeared as though dirt was their natural and necessary element. At last, he found the priest superintending some female work-hands in a garden, where they dug up the ground and stirred the soil around the plants with their fingers, using no other instruments for that purpose. Such ragged, wretched, overworked, haggard, ignorant animals in human shape he had never seen. After contemplating this sad picture for some time, Mr. Knapp said to the priest, "Your people appear to be in rather a low condition." "Y-e-s," said the priest, "but they are all good Christians." The whole village was the same. It was no matter how miserable, degraded, brutal, and filthy, if they accepted without question all that the priest enjoined; such a community was to the priest the kingdom of heaven. Now, in case any should undertake to raise themselves above the degraded level of the community, all history shows what opposition the priest would make; and, if a portion of the community should succeed independently of the priest in raising themselves to a higher condition, all history shows that the priest will claim every advance that the people make. This I have tried to illustrate.

Yours truly,

W. WICKERSHAM.

A Fable.

Once upon a time, in the far East, there lived a people who had a varied mode of life. About half of them were subjected to a priesthood: the other half lived in a very simple way, by their industry, which consisted largely in raising crops of such things as they needed for food and clothing; and, having no extravagant wants, such as fashion elsewhere demands, a very moderate industry supplied an abundance for the real needs of life.

Subsistence being easily acquired, they had leisure for social pleasures and refinement, and for the cultivation of moral sympathy by which they were always sensitive to another's ills, and they were always cheerfully helpful as neighbors. They also had leisure for the acquirement of knowledge; and, as the people advanced, in time they grew in intelligence, social culture, and the arts of civil life. They raised their own cereals, their potatoes, turnips, parsnips, squashes, pumpkins, melons, apricots, peaches, apples, pears, plums, dates, and other fruits suitable to their soil and climate; they raised sugar-cane, flax, and hemp, and produced wool. The women spun and wove the flax and wool into fabrics of various styles of the plainer kinds, for garments and other needful purposes. They established schools for the education of the young, and libraries free to the use of all; and indeed this half of the community appeared to live for the individual, and the individual for the community.

With this half of the community there was a saying which they carried out in the letter and spirit: it was this, "Cleanliness is next door to godliness." Personal cleanliness was the rule. Their ablutions were frequent; they had private and public baths, and every garment was kept clean and in good repair. Their dwellings were kept neat and clean; and from this cleanliness of person and habitation a sort of spiritual purity grew. A high sense of morality grew up; a freshness and cheerfulness in all their social relations gradually matured; humane sentiment grew with humane practice; integrity of character, high moral purpose, chastity of thought and conversation, an ardent love for knowledge, a sort of pride of doing right, a sense of honor preponderating over the selfish motive, an ecstasy of joy at every noble deed of another, a modesty and indisposition for notoriety for a noble deed of their own, an ambition to be independent and self-subsistent by their own industry, a profound pride in the wonderful powers of man, and an enthusiastic joy on the occasion of his wonderful accomplishments and discoveries; an ardent love for right, for truth, for knowledge and wisdom; a chivalrous spirit in the men to bestow on the women every courtesy, and to render them every joy, and cheerfully concede to them every right and privilege enjoyed by themselves; a calm, quiet peace, a self-approving joy for all, a sort of spiritual grandeur and fervor, an intuition of the sublime, a power for the highest reach of thought on the grandest themes of human contemplation. By general intelligence, they attained a broad and enlightened view of humanity, and they reached that high culmination of liberal understanding and moral sympathy which constitutes universal brotherhood. They did not say, Compassionate the poor Turk or Tartar; but their heart's voice was, Compassionate the poor man. The deeds of the good Samaritan were of such common occurrence, performed so kindly and quietly, as but seldom to call forth remark. They looked forward with hope; they looked forward, and could see darkly. Some could see with a clearer vision, and others less clearly; they looked forward into the dark distance hopefully, seeing a glimmer of light. They looked forward hopefully, and yearned with their whole soul for that great day when all the strife and wars, when all the destruction of nations and peoples and the peoples' wealth, by the sword and the brand, shall cease forever; when the fagot shall no more consume the dear life of him who dares to follow his best conviction; when love and kind fellowship should cover the earth as the waters the sea; when there being no waste or destruction of wealth, there would be no excessive labor, and all should have leisure for culture; when the human powers should not be crushed by tyranny, and bruised and battered and crippled and dwarfed, as in times past, but in the free air and light should grow into their God-like proportions, natural, healthy, vigorous, and strong for every good work. And, oh, how their hearts and souls did yearn, and how their hand did work for the coming of that great day!

All this result, so marvellous, came originally from the habits of cleanliness. It was wonderful. It is indeed wonderful to see what man can do for himself, if he is not hindered by the forces of nature, by a government, or by a priesthood; but man has not only to learn to ameliorate his condition in peaceful civil life, but to fight his battles against every opposing enemy.

The case was very different with that part of the community which were under the influence and control of the priesthood. They had every kind of tax imposed on them, they were ground down by tyranny, they were worked into stupidity, so that, when their day's work was done (which was always prolonged to nine o'clock at night), they had no spirit for reading or improving themselves. They had no time for bathing or cleansing their habitations; hence they grew filthy in their persons and their homes. Their clothing was of the coarsest kind, and commonly in a dilapidated state; their food was of the cheapest and coarsest kind, and often very unwholesome. Some of them petitioned the priests for public baths, as they were not able to get private ones; but the priests denounced bathing with great vehemence and bitterness, and threatened to excommunicate the petitioners, and said the people were healthier without bathing than with it. They also denounced education, and said that all the people needed to learn was how to do their work and to learn their catechisms, which could be taught them without their learning to read. Reading was an unnecessary expense, and, indeed, was of no use to working people, any more than to horses and cows. If the people knew how to work, how to say their prayers and catechisms and confess their sins, it was all they needed to know.

Those not under the priests frequently assembled together, and heard lectures from the most intelligent and gifted among them, which gave them much joy and instruction. When the priests' people petitioned the priests for lectures, they forbid meetings in their absence, and said they could give them all the lectures they needed. But they gave them none that were good for anything, and said that, if they petitioned them again, they should be excommunicated; which meant, as the priests explained it, that they should be excluded from all fellowship of their friends, relations, and neighbors, no one speaking to them or doing them any acts of kindness. At death, the excommunicated person should be sent off into everlasting darkness, where there should be nothing but weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, from the bitterness of their anguish. Therefore the priests' people were under great fear, and their souls became cringing and dwarfed, and little and mean; so that each one would not only confess to the priests his own sin, but would meanly tell the priests everything which his neighbor did. Thus all confidence between neighbors was destroyed, each one thinking, with good reason too, that every neighbor was a spy on him; and so the priests preyed upon their very souls, dwarfing them until they were mean, brutish, and devilish, at the same time preying upon their substance, keeping them ground down in poverty and excessive labor. Life was rendered a bitter curse, instead of being the joyous blessing it was to those who were not under the galling tyranny of the priesthood.

And it came to pass that some of the priests' people said to themselves: "Our suffering is greater than we can bear. Our condition cannot be worse than it is, even if the priests' story is true, that we shall go to the devil after death." So they raised a great tumult, some urging a rebellion against the priests; and they collected together in great crowds, some speaking and setting forth eloquently the abuses of the priesthood and portraying the sad picture of their miseries, and telling in glowing colors of the happy state of those who were not under the priestly tyranny. The priests, fearing that they would lose their authority, forced their way into the middle of the crowd, and said: "If the people are aggrieved, we will grant them what they want. If you want ablutions, which you say makes the difference between you and the gentiles, we will provide them for you. Indeed, we intended always to do this, when we were able." At this, the people were quieted somewhat, and the priests succeeded in sending them home. The priests then made pools in their churches, and caused each one of their people to come to the church, where they were plunged into the pool, saying it was enjoined of God, and that each one who omitted this should be excommunicated and be sent into outer darkness after death. Hence the ablation of the priests became another means of tyranny and superstition, and personal cleanliness was not attained by it, as it was done but once in a lifetime, instead of being performed freely and daily. These ablutions of the priests, which did no good, but on the contrary did harm by plunging the people into a deeper superstition, were called baptism, and became a ceremony of the ecclesiastics. That, which properly and freely used, was the greatest of human blessings, giving first cleanliness of person and habitation, and then chastity and purity of character, and to all elevation and refinement, became in this manner a curse.

But the priests waxed rich and fared sumptuously every day; while their people, preyed upon by them and starved, became more and more wretched, degraded, and brutish, though the priests said they were sanctified and saved to everlasting glory. Those of the community not under the priesthood lived progressively and happily, and a blessing to themselves and to mankind until this day. Strange to say, their ablations, their cleanliness, their refinement, their education, their libraries, meetings, and lectures, their brotherly kindness and good fellowship, their broad humanity, their earnest yearning that the good things which they enjoyed and the good spirit which pervaded their hearts should be shared by every living creature, their great progress in every thing which pertained to a happy civil and social life,—I say, strange as it may seem, all these wonderful and excellent attainments, means of happiness and growth, were claimed by the priesthood as having originated with them.

W. WICKERSHAM.

LIBERALISM NOT A FAILURE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is hardly reasonable to conclude from late experiences that liberalism is a failure; and brother religionists ought to reflect that it is not very charitable to rejoice over its supposed misfortunes. Yes, I say brother religionists. It is urged against liberalism as a reproach that, while it rejects the popular religion, which, incidentally at least, recognizes to some extent the reality and the perpetual obligation of the moral law, it puts nothing in its place. Let the matter be fairly treated. If liberalism is recognition of the authority of moral science freed from all foreign and mischievous admixture, then it would be hard to estimate the desolation which its failure would bring.

Religion involves a practical sense of moral responsibility to a power superior to all human control, and uniform and eternal. It is so intimately concerned with conscience, which, enlightened, should be the guide of life, that humanity without religion is monstrous. But the thing to be encouraged and embraced is the genuine article, not the counterfeit.

In choosing to do without the popular historical religion, liberals are not generally inclined to go out of the way to deny that that may bring present help and consolation to some people, or that the very hypocrisy connected with it, which gives large opportunity for mischief, may bring incidentally some apparent advantages. Hypocrisy has been defined as "the homage which vice pays to virtue"; and hypocrites might think it shameful to be thought to ignore what has always been regarded by civilized communities as virtue. Of course the artificial machinery may do hurt as well as good; for abject servitude to imaginary as well as to real masters degrades the devotee, and, when voluntary, is not borne for nothing. To accept it or dispense with it is legitimate subject-matter of individual choice. Certain it is that every good act conscientiously done has in itself the quality of religion, and, being understood as done in obedience to the dictates of conscience, is of itself the proper and effective avowal of the religion it involves. Cicero's proposition, Virtutis laus omnis in actione consistit, "What is good is commended only by being practised," is right. If it is objected that, in advocating secularism, no general, open, and express avowal of a code of moral principles, as applied to all social questions which may arise and as the rule of conduct, is thought by liberals to be necessary, it may be answered that in this respect they are no greater sinners than others; and, indeed, it would look like impertinence, when such principles were not called in question, to make formal parade of avowing assent to what in all civilized countries from earliest times has been accepted by reasonable men as just and reasonable and becoming; and it would seem like confessed humiliation to imply admit that, in putting forth the demand for just and honest government, there was misconception to be deprecated, as if an attitude of malefactors in any respect whatever was thus assumed. Under any government which is not a caricature upon justice, mankind are free to accept what system of religion they choose to accept; and those who seek to perfect or to purify the administration of law, and to bring about the triumph of justice by effectual security for what should be ranked among the most sacred of all liberties, have the same rights in this respect as are enjoyed by those more childish people who require to be bolstered up by some theory of supposed supernaturalism.

Then, if the childish and the vicious assume that, because liberals object to injustice perpetrated in the name of religion, they sympathize with the shameless and the profligate and court their society, all such people will find themselves mistaken, as occasion was lately given to see.

Actions speak louder than words; and events, when rightly understood, stand for results of applied science. The conditions required for healthful activity may be welcomed with satisfaction. We must not lament over what is no more than natural. But there is some satisfaction in bearing in mind that the tempests which clear the air are salutary.

If liberals work in harmony with all who have at heart the highest interests of humanity, it is not much to be feared that they will be very seriously condemned by anybody for the presumption imputed to them of thinking, if some of them do think, that the Lord, if any Lord there is, is not really opposed to the principle of true republican equality; that, for aught anybody knows or ever did know to the contrary, he is at least as just and reasonable as anybody else would know how to be; and that he may be trusted out of sight without being supposed to be bound by special promises.

C. C.

DAYTON, Ohio, Feb. 27, 1880.

DR. BARTOL'S PARTYISM IN RELIGION.

Dr. Bartol's discourse is intense and suggestive. But what does he mean? He seems to assert that some party platform of dogma or established theological belief is absolutely indispensable, as in the Orthodox scheme of salvation. "We meet," he says, "on some ground,—not on the ground that all are open questions, but on a basis of faith." Further on, he says, "Our religion cannot be defined at all." "Held and beheld, felt, appreciated, practised, and obeyed it may be, but not logically defined. It is a life and a growth." "Our faith is found and to be shown in our temper and manner and daily conduct, not in our creed. Justice, generosity, piety, and benevolent activity are our articles." "We must not be imposed upon by systems and names."

I infer that the good doctor would reduce his ground of party action and fellowship in religion to the minimum of a good character or good life, as involving a latent faith, leaving all uncertain, controverted dogmas in abeyance,—leaving the mind free to investigate all nature and life,—but what right have I to infer even so much? His current of comment certainly goes to favor the Orthodox exclusiveness and partyism which leave no rights to the sceptical inquirer as to supernatural revelation. His reasoning that Unitarians, by welcoming free discussion, give up all distinctive doctrinal views, appears hardly candid and worthy the doctor's customary fairness. It is too much like the petulant remarks one often meets in answer to the disavowal of belief in plenary inspiration: if you do not admit the infallible character of the whole Bible, you may as well throw it all away.

I think the doctor intends to be candid and fair; but the question is a fair one, and at the same time a troublesome one, to the a priori religionist, whether the affirmation of theological doctrines relating to the invisible realm is consistent with any inquiry into their validity.

The Right Rev. Jesse I. Peck, D.D., of the Methodist Church, in an able lecture recently on "Science and the Spirit World," maintained that science had unwarrantably projected itself into the sphere of revelation; that science could not investigate where faith might freely and fearlessly roam. I think we cannot refute the logic or truth of Bishop Peck's position. The pulpit does boldly assert what science cannot prove nor disprove; and so, if it be legitimate, as the Bishop maintains, to build up Church partyism and creeds on the abnormal, the supernatural, it follows that no amount of investigation, no scientific or infidel discussion, as it is termed, no materialism or German rationalism, can overthrow men's faith.

I presume Dr. Bartol would not indorse all of Bishop Peck's doctrines; and yet Bishop Peck is not unfriendly to scientific study, and would no doubt lend a listening ear to "the German Haeckel," making free to refute or ridicule from the pulpit, as he is given to doing, the eminent German's opinions.

Does Dr. Bartol mean, like Bishop Peck, that the Christian pulpit is established for a partisan propaganda of moral doctrines and scientific views? that Christian doctrines will not bear scientific investigation?

I can hardly think that Dr. Bartol means any such thing, and yet the drift of his reasoning is toward a one-sided or partial treatment of nature and life; for, if the Christian may not study nature and life scientifically, then he must study them as a partisan with foregone conclusions, if he study them at all.

It is this partyism in religion, everywhere so rife, which I lament in Dr. Bartol's discourse. I have seen it offensively displayed in a country town by a Baptist clergyman and his Church, until it has come to pass that church bulldozing and intimidation are carried into every department and branch of business.

Working men are constrained to give their presence and support to this Church; trade and banking are made subservient to it; and the village paper is put under censorship, and not allowed to say anything not in the interest of Orthodox supernaturalism.

If religion or Christianity can only be maintained by such means, if a fair consideration of its claims and benefits be inadmissible or dissonant with its acceptance, then is it not sure to be a losing and a lost cause?

For the sake of a higher life in community, for the sake of a larger and better brotherhood and more generous cooperation and helpfulness among men, I would be glad to see partyism disavowed, and, instead of contention, peace.

A. N. ADAMS.

FAIR HAVEN, Vt., Dec. 18, 1879.

LETTER FROM MR. WRIGHT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Mr. J. Vila Blake and Mr. Charles Ellis, entire strangers to me, have both, in your columns of last week, charged me with wishing to keep peace in the liberal ranks on any terms, and with preferring to bring Christian fraud, robbery, and perjury into court rather than that of my own party. All this because when Mr. T. L. Savage, whom I never saw that I know of, wrote asking me to contribute funds to prosecute Messrs. Seaver and Mendum for fraud and breach of trust, I replied that I did not believe any such crime had been committed, and moreover that I know of Christian frauds that I would sooner bring into court. Why? Because they are vastly bigger and more cruel. It does not follow from this that I would keep peace with fraudulent liberals, if I knew of any, or do anything to conceal their crimes, as Messrs. Blake and Ellis "translate" or pretend. My means are really very limited; and, if I could spare any from the support of my family to bring rogues to punishment, I should prefer trying to thwart the biggest, cruelest, and wickedest, and these are all Christian rogues, to a man, so far as I know. I have known Mendum and Seaver for about forty years, as good citizens and men of integrity, in the most trying circumstances. I saw what was said against them in the Boston Herald when I was fifteen hundred miles from home last spring, and supposed it was written by Mr. Ellis; but it seems he only inspired it. Whoever wrote it, it appeared to me untrue and malicious. On further investigation after I returned, I was satisfied it was untrue. Before the corporation of which I have the honor to be President accepted the transfer of the property, I received a long letter from this Mr. Ellis, whom I have never seen to this day, couched in terms which I conceived to be, under the circumstances, rather impertinent. I do not appear to have preserved the letter; but, if he has, he is quite at liberty to publish it, with my reply.

If Mr. Mendum is dangerous to Mr. Ellis' life, he should have him bound over to keep the peace. But why should Mr. Ellis ask me to make the complaint? I believe Mendum as harmless as a kitten, unless unreasonably provoked.

I have never tried to conceal anything or avoid any investigation Messrs. Savage, Blake, or Ellis choose to make; but, being myself perfectly satisfied that there has been no fraud, why should I court it,—why should I pay for heating the poker?

As my words stand now in the columns of THE INDEX, I am willing all its readers should judge me by them. It grieves me, of course, to be despised by a stranger; but, as long as I can maintain the respect of my most intimate acquaintances, I shall try not to be much depressed by the contempt of Mr. J. Vila Blake, who puts quotation marks on his mistranslations.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

BOSTON, March 4, 1880.

ST. LOUIS SECULAR UNION.

1803 CARR PLACE, ST. LOUIS, {
Feb. 25, 1880. }

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—Enclosed you will find a circular of a new liberal society formed in this city. The objects of the "Secular Union" are explained in the circular itself. We hope by exercising sufficient care to restrict the membership to persons of decent character, while our lecturers will avoid discussing questions which are calculated to offend the good taste of the community. The Secular Union meets every Sunday in Pezols Hall, 13th and Olive Streets, where we shall be glad to meet any liberal friends of St. Louis or neighborhood.

If you can publish this as an item of news, the Secular Union will feel under obligations to you.

Respectfully yours,

THOMAS CURTIS.

St. Louis Secular Union.

"ONE WORLD AT A TIME."—EQUAL TAXATION OF ALL CHURCH WITH OTHER PROPERTY.—NO PUBLIC FUNDS FOR SECTARIAN PURPOSES.—ABSOLUTE MENTAL FREEDOM FOR MAN, WOMAN, AND CHILD.

TO THE LIBERALS OF ST. LOUIS:—

This society is instituted for the purpose of holding public meetings in this city, where through the help of competent lecturers and speakers the cause of freethought may be presented in such a manner as to command the attention and respect of all intelligent citizens.

For this purpose, Sunday meetings will be held, where the theories of religious teachers will be examined and criticised, where the claims of science in its bearing upon religious creeds will be enforced, and where the principle of absolute and complete separation of Church and State will be continuously advocated.

To all who desire to see liberalism in a position where it can thus influence public opinion in a healthy direction, an invitation is given to unite with us in forwarding the good work.

The association will consist of active members and honorary contributing members.

EXTRACT FROM THE CONSTITUTION.—"Any person male or female, desiring to become a member of this society, must receive the vote of all members present at the time of balloting, and male members must pay an annual subscription of five dollars on their admission into the society."

Signed,

THOMAS CURTIS,
Member State Executive Com.

NEVADA AND NON-SECTARIANISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Sir,—Has your attention been called to the following "straw" from the Tribune Almanac for 1880, page 23? "During the past year, the people of the young State of Nevada have adopted this constitutional amendment: That no public funds of any character whatever shall be used for sectarian purposes." Yours very truly,

THEODORE STANTON.

TENAFLY, N.J., March 1, 1880.

MR. C. WAS PASTOR of a Baptist church in a certain town in one of the Western States. He had been on very bad terms with his flock for some time. They abused him whenever they could find occasion, and he reciprocated with equal readiness. Before his contract with the parish expired, he received the appointment of chaplain at the State Prison. Elated at this lucky opportunity of getting rid of him, the congregation came in full numbers to hear his farewell sermon, perhaps less to compliment than to annoy him with their presence. Great was their astonishment, and still greater their anger, when the reverend gentleman chose for his text the following words: "I go to prepare a place for you, . . . that where I am, there ye may be also!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " 8 " "
" 26 " 51 " 6 " "
" 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
ly, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "Read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $4.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

OF THE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION.

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL
AT
PUBLISHERS' PRICES!
ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Silver Consuls; or, The Aunt-Hill Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Patches and Independent, A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	1.50
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVII. With the shorter Prophets allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Rible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher School and Universities in Germany, with New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.25
Longard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The First Naturalist, With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Drift.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	1.25
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces. A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.80
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different sorts of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Harvest of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Father Time, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). The Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FABRARI'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creeds and Confessions.....	1.00
Cradle of the Church.....	1.00
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 15 numbers, each 10c.....	1.50
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Safest Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs of Emerson, Channing, and others. New edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elastic Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Chronology of Christendom.....	1.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Authors and Artists.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wendell's Home: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern French Painting. Monographs.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner. R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Adrian's Voyage.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Smoking Blocks.....	1.50
Wool Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Sketches and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in France and Normandy for Young Folks.....	1.00
Rits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
A Soldier's Life in a Blue Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUMPHREY (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man in Black in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
1st Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Criticisms and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mysteries of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Sciences of Law. By Prof. S. Amor.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Philosophy of Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fund. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney, M.D.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesosomes. By Mon. J. B. M. M. By J. B. M. M.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By J. B. M. M.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to the Senses. By J. B. M. M.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPERT (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.50
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Psychology.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology: its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Book for Critics.....	1.50
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and his Position in the History of Structural Ranges and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Tim Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX). A Series of Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1878.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americana—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. 1 and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.50
The Story of Avila.....	1.50
Tracy's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With 18 Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Near Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS. I. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of the First.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Devotive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.25
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	3.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	.60
Cape Cod.....	.20
Letters.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Findings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Addresses before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wil. Huxley, and other Addresses.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
My Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES.

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The Brute God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS TO LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N.Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 534.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC once said to the liberals in the French Assembly: "We demand of you toleration on the ground of your principles; we deny toleration to you on the ground of our own!"

IN ANSWER to the question, "How long would it take to study the Bible out?" Dwight L. Moody, the Evangelist, cheerfully and stoutly replies: "Well, certainly more than a thousand millions of years." Will it pay to begin so long a job as that?

JOHN C. CALHOUN wrote to Rev. A. McCain (Methodist), on receiving a pamphlet in favor of slavery: "You have shown beyond all controversy that slavery is sanctioned both by the Old and New Testament. He who denies it, if not blinded by fanaticism, must be a hypocrite."

MARCUS AURELIUS said: "The safety of life demands that I do what is just with my whole soul, and say what is true. To act a part, or say or do anything insincere or untrue, pollutes the soul. Think nothing profitable which will ever force thee to break thy word, to lose thy self-respect, to hate, suspect, curse, or deceive any one, or to desire anything that need be covered with walls or veils."

MR. F. B. SANBORN writes of Mr. Emerson: "Paragraphs now and then appear about Ralph Waldo Emerson's loss of memory, which give needless pain to his friends. He is an old man,—as most of us will be when we reach seventy-seven,—and has that inconvenient infirmity of age, an inability to recall at once the thing he would remember. But he still remembers more than most men, and what comes to his mind is always worth remembering,—which is not the case with most men."

THE GREAT principle embodied in the second plank of the Rochester platform is steadily gaining ground, and will inevitably be established at last in all its length and breadth. Four important decisions have just been given by the United States Supreme Court, of which the Advertiser says: "The gist of all these decisions is that, in the event of any State, by legislation or administrative action, excluding citizens from juries because of their race or color, the United States courts can legally take cognizance of the fact to right the wrong of any citizen aggrieved or injured thereby, and also to punish the persons offending."

W. H. MALLOCK, in his Every Man his own Poet, gives the following recipe for making an "ordinary love poem": "Take two large and tender human hearts, which match one another perfectly. Arrange these close together, but preserve them from actual contact by placing between them some cruel barrier. Wound them both in several places, and insert through the openings thus made a fine stuffing of wild yearnings, hopeless tenderness, and a general admiration for stars. Then completely cover up one heart with a sufficient quantity of chill churchyard mould, which may be garnished, according to taste, with dank waving weeds or tender violets, and promptly break over it the other heart."

NIHILISM was thus defined in 1868, at Geneva, by Bakunin: "The gospel [of Nihilism] admits of no half measures and hesitations. The old world must be destroyed, and replaced by a new one. The Lie must be stamped out, and give way to Truth. . . . The first lie is God. The second lie is Right. . . . When you have freed your minds from the fear of a God, and your childish respect for the fiction of Right, then all the remaining chains which bind you, and which are called science, civilization, property, marriage, morality, and justice, will snap asunder like threads. . . . Let your own happiness be your only law. . . . Our first work must be the destruction and annihilation of everything as it now exists. You must accustom yourselves to destroy everything, the good with the bad; for, if but an atom of this old world remains, the new will never be created."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Christian Register, so well edited by Rev. Charles G. Ames, thus calls notice to Mr. Mills' admirable little book on Buddhism: "The wide-spread interest excited by Edwin Arnold's beautiful poem, The Light of Asia, ought not to die away without renewed attention being called to a prose account of Buddha and his system which is really almost equally charming with the poem. I mean Mr. C. D. B. Mills' Buddha and Buddhism. It is a small volume of less than two hundred pages, comprehensive and yet concise, serious but bright in style, full of the very spirit of the reverent, just, and mild sage of Asia. Many details which the poem necessarily omits or touches but lightly are filled out in the prose work; but the whole is so graceful that the latter may well be called the twin brother of the former. It is a pity that Mr. Mills' work was so obscurely published. It would seem worth the while of some enterprising firm to take it up now, and give it the circulation it deserves. It was published by the Journal and Free Press Company, of North-hampton, Mass. The author's residence is Syracuse, N.Y."

THE Nation, criticising the new Life of Arnold, very justly exposes the mischief of the "sham sentiment" of "pity" when the situation calls for "hearty indignation": "Of course Arnold's biographer condemns his treason, but it is with more of pity than of hearty indignation. Now, it is just that pity which it is dangerous to encourage in this day of lax political morality. A generation for which the shining examples in the Revolutionary era of probity and pristine virtue are losing their force does not need to be taught unwholesome lessons of tolerance for its greatest criminal. It is right that, his military fame, while he remained faithful, should be cleared of aspersions cast on it by jealousy or enmity; and it is right, too, that for the evil he did this nation should be forever his enemy and his implacable judge. The sham sentiment that weeps because the laws of war could not spare André may rear a superfluous pillar that celebrates other things than his remains or his memory, sincerely and fitly cared for where he rests. It is not to be endured that any one should take from the height of the monument of infamy which Arnold built for himself."

THE EXCELLENT essay of this week on "Emerson's Attitude toward Religion" will be read with great interest. The Indianapolis Saturday Herald, in publishing it, said: "The Herald gives up its entire editorial space on the second page to an able article from the pen of the Rev. George W. Cooke, on Emerson's Attitude toward Religion. The article is an exhaustive one, and it is well worthy of a careful reading. The attention of the Rev. Joseph Cook is especially called to this article, as it might be inferred from some of his utterances on Emerson that he had never enjoyed access to the full text of the great thinker's writings on the subject under discussion. Mr. Emerson ought to furnish the Rev. Joseph Cook with a certified copy of his complete work, and thus save himself from misrepresentation." And again: "Mr. George W. Cooke, pastor of the Unitarian church of this city, has nearly completed a book to be called A Study of Emerson, one chapter of which is published in another column of this issue. The chapters, which comprise nearly thirty important topics, have occupied considerable time and research of the author. A list of them is herewith appended: Preface, Introduction, Ancestry, Early Life, Ministry, Concord, At Home, Transcendentalism, Stating the New Faith, Social Relations, Lectures and Essays, Growing Fame, In War Time, Recent Years, Home Life, Literary Methods, Literary Opinions, What the Critics Say, Poetry, As a Lecturer, Place among Thinkers, Theory of Ethics, Moral Conclusions, Views of God, Views of Man, Views of Immortality, Present Attitude toward Religion, The Tendencies of Thought."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HARGRAVE.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenafly, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN AHERNS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. E. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N.Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y. waukee, Ill.
 J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. HOPE WHEIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 C. THERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. case, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWWELL, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. D. GAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Emerson's Attitude toward Religion.

BY REV. GEORGE W. COOKE.

Some recent attempts have been made to show a change in Emerson's religious views. What he has had to say on these subjects he has always said plainly and in his own way, has always said the same thing, been thoroughly consistent with himself. Yet he has never in any sense of the word been a dogmatist, has had no system to teach, and has in no wise committed himself to any sect or any school in theology. A theological student from Harvard once went to him with an account of the differences of opinion there among the Unitarian divinity students. "I am not much interested in these discussions," said he, "but still it does seem deplorable that there is such a tendency in some people to creeds which would take man back to the chimpanzee. I have very good grounds for being a Unitarian and a Trinitarian, too. I need not nibble forever at one loaf, but eat it and thank God for it, and earn another."* In his latest published essay,—written for a company of theological students,—he says:—

"Speak the affirmative; emphasize your choice by utter ignoring of all that you reject, seeing that opinions are temporary, but convictions uniform and eternal,—seeing that a sentiment never loses its pathos or its persuasion, but is youthful after a thousand years. I do not love sensation-preaching,—the personalities for spite, the hurrah for our side, the review of our appearances and what others say of us! That you may read in the gazette."†

To class him as a champion and defender of any party in religion would be unjust. No man has greater or deeper convictions than he, but he does not hold them as by the charm of any name. He sees on all sides, respects the truthful in all sects, loves the good in all religions. He is no Christian in any sectarian sense whatever, nor by any means a rejecter of Christianity, much less a foe to it. He sees the good in it, loves its noble and pure spirit, but is not carried away by it, will not be committed to its defence. He has been called a pantheist, and of late claimed as a theist. He is as much one as the other, and neither in any exclusive sense. He sees, what many others begin to discern, that both theism and pantheism are true, both necessary to a full and perfect thought. Either is limited, imperfect, untrue, when stated alone, and needs to be supplemented by the other. All who have read Emerson sympathetically will understand what is here meant; how he sees the partial truth both phases of thought express, and how he has moulded and blended them into one consistent whole. An out-and-out pantheist Emerson never has been, nor is he to-day an out-and-out theist. He never identified nature with God, and he does not now believe in a God entirely outside of nature, guiding it by his almighty fiat. He has always spoken as a poet, not as a theologian; not in rigid terms, but in flowing, voluble speech. He has spoken poetically of God, with constant confession that the idea is too large for any words, so has used any words that came readiest to hand. He has claimed no monopoly of knowledge about deity, no ability to define with precise terms.

Some years ago the Rev. J. B. Manning, in a series of lectures on pantheism,‡ had this to say in the lecture he devoted to Emerson:—

"I do Emerson no wrong in ranking him with the disciples of Spinoza. On the contrary, should I not do him a most palpable injustice did I deny to him the pantheistic doctrine which he so plainly and earnestly professes? Our respect for him as a thinker should lead us to yield him the position he has so distinctly taken, and which he defines in the exact terms of the most famous teachers of pantheism. A writer who declares that persons are 'poor empirical pretensions,' ripples on the ocean of real being; who says that subject and object, the seer and the thing seen, are one; who affirms that the personal brings us to the impersonal, which is God or the sole reality,—this writer must be set down as a pantheist, or language may mean just the opposite of what it plainly asserts, and Hegel himself was not a hegelian, nor Spinoza a spinozist."

There can be no doubt whatever that Emerson is more or less a disciple of Spinoza, that he has been entirely in sympathy with that philosophic movement which took its origin in modern times with Spinoza. That he has been, and is, in a large measure, a pantheist, it is very evident. The Rev. Joseph Cook says he first came before the world "as the representative of the Hegelian vapors."§ He quotes Emerson's statement, that subject and object are one; that God is a third party in all conversations; that each individual is an incarnation of the universal mind, and that he is owner of Plato's brain and Lord Christ's heart. As a consequence of such ideas, Mr. Cook thinks, are certain dangerous inferences, as that no law is sacred but that of one's own nature, that the right is what is after one's constitution. Other passages are quoted, which, taken alone, would lead to the conclusion that Emerson regards paying debts and not paying as equally defensible, and that all moral actions are of like nature. Whoever is at all familiar with Emerson, knows that these inferences are wholly untrue, and that he is most grossly misrepresented by separating such passages from the context. No man ever more strongly than he taught that all actions must be accounted for; and he has always taught the moral doctrine of strict responsibility.

Among the few critics who have undertaken to

* Fraser's Magazine, August, 1864.

† Unitarian Review, January, 1880.

‡ Half Truth and the Truth. Delivered at Andover.

§ After Emerson, What? or the Consequences of Concord Theism. A lecture at the Old South Church, Boston, printed in the Independent of Nov. 13, 1879.

correct Emerson's theology may be numbered the Rev. George Gilfillan.* At first, he was very hearty in his praise; but, from time to time, became less warm, until at last he could not point his arrows of theological dislike too keenly. He accuses Emerson, in his last essay devoted to him, of dealing in mere negations, of double-dealing, and intentional omissions to please his audiences. He is charged with being "inconsistent and hopelessly wrong," while it is "high time his egregious nonsense was exposed." The occasion for this language is to be found in a heresy, which is thus characterized: "Emerson is one of the few sceptics who has personally and by name insulted the Lord Jesus Christ."

To all such charges as these, Emerson has replied by entire silence. There has been no word in any of his essays indicating that he was even irritated by them, much less any attempt to defend his positions. He has continued to speak as ever before in the same honest, candid way; with an affirmative and positive tone, always. There is perceptible, however, a marked difference between his later and his earlier writings. Any one who will read his books through in the order in which they have been published will perceive this change. It is not a change in ideas, by no means a change in beliefs; for he has held steadily to the same great opinions from first to last. He is as much of a pantheist now as in Nature, as little of a believer in any dogma. The change has been rather one of expression: there is less vehemence, more of calm and perfect poise. He says very much the same things in his last essay on "Preaching" that he did in the Divinity School address, but more persuasively, in a gentler spirit. The one is the quiet, loving counsel of an old man, the other the onset and battle-cry of the young reformer; but both entertain the same theological opinions. There is plainly evident that changed mental look which comes to every man in the change from youth to old age. This is shown in a gradual dropping of the more special features of transcendentalism, its extravagance of thought and expression. In his later writings there is very little of this, but probably no real abandonment of the fundamental conceptions of idealism. His mind has been expanding of late years, widening its sympathies, and becoming more universal in its expression. Some of his later essays have been notable for their acceptance of the recent discoveries in science, but he has interpreted these always in the light of idealism. He has interpreted the universal reign of law to be moral and spiritual quite as much as physical, and that it is the same law throughout.

As often happens, his changed expressions have been interpreted to mean a change in beliefs. Alcott has reported that his friend has become a Christian theist in the full sense, while Joseph Cook attempts to show that he has abandoned the pantheism of his earlier years. There has as yet, however, been no evidence produced to indicate such a change, and it probably has been found because it was desired. It may be rightly doubted whether Emerson ever was properly a pantheist, while the evidence Mr. Cook produces to show the change of opinion could be more than paralleled with evidence to show there has been no change. Such a man is too large for any labels, too noble to make it of any moment what the name given him. He can adorn and dignify any name, but there is no name whatever capable of adding any greater lustre to his character. His manner of literary work, his lack of logical method, make it possible to draw from his writings the most antagonistic opinions; but whoever enters heartily into sympathy with his thought, and looks only for the real meaning, will find no such antagonism, no inconsistency, and no changed opinions. He cannot be justly criticised by any single sentence or paragraph. No writer needs so much to be viewed in the whole. This is the error Joseph Cook has fallen into, of culling here and there a few sentences out of which to make up an opinion, while other paragraphs directly of the contrary opinion can be found in the same essay. Only when viewed as a whole, can any of his essays be rightly estimated. Especially is it desirable to consider all his later essays in order to ascertain his real opinions on religious matters. Indeed, he himself desires to be thus judged by his contemporaries. A recent visitor at his home inquired what were his present religious opinions, and if they had changed from those of former years. "My views," said he, "are to be found in what I have written." He rose, went to one of his bookcases, and drew his long, farmer-like hand across a beautiful set of his books. "Here they are," was his farther remark. Thus would he be judged by his books, by what he has given to the world in his years of mature thought; and all honest friends of his will prefer so to judge of his opinions and the worth of his work.

Joseph Cook bases his claim of a change of views on the following passages from the essay on the "Sovereignty of Ethics":—

"1. A new Socrates, or Zeno, or Swedenborg, or Pascal, or a new crop of geniuses like those of the Elizabethan age, may be born in this age, and, with happy heart and a bias for theism, bring asceticism, duty, and magnanimity into vogue again."

"2. I confess our later generation appears ungirt, frivolous, compared with the religions of the last or Calvinistic age. There was in the last century a serious habitual reference to the spiritual world running through diaries, letters, and conversations,—yes, and into wills and legal instruments also,—compared with which our liberation looks a little foppish and dapper."

"3. A sleep creeps over the great functions of man. Enthusiasm goes out. In its stead a low prudence seeks to hold society stanch, but its arms are too short. Cordage and machinery never supply the peace of life."

"4. Luther would cut his hand off sooner than write theses against the Pope, if he suspected that he was bringing on with all his might the pale negations of Boston Unitarianism."

"5. You say: Cut away. My tree is Ygdrasil,—the tree of life! He interrupts for the moment your peaceful trust in the divine providence. Let him know by your security that your conviction is clear and sufficient, and if he were Paul himself you also are here and with your Creator."

"6. Virtue is the adopting of the universal mind by the individual mind. Character is the habit of this obedience, and religion is the accompanying emotion of reverence, which the presence of the universal mind excites in the individual."

"7. 'Tis a sort of proverbial dying speech of scholars,—at least, it is attributable to many,—that which Anthony Wood reports of Nathaniel Carpenter, an Oxford fellow: 'It did repent him,' he said, 'that he had formerly so much courted the maid instead of the mistress' (meaning philosophy and mathematics, to the neglect of divinity!) This in the language of our time would be ethics."

It would certainly puzzle one familiar with Emerson's writings to discover anything here not to be found in his earlier writings. The same criticism of the present is to be found in many of his essays. It is one of his most constantly reiterated criticisms that the former times were more truly religious than this. He has always loved the spiritual side of things, even been a pleader for divinity and its superiority over all other studies. In this very essay his pantheism comes out unmistakably, as when he says:—

"I see the unity of thought and morals running through all animated nature: there is no difference of quality, but only of more or less. It is the same fact existing as sentiment and as will in the mind which works in Nature as irresistible law, exerting influence over nations, intelligent beings, or down in the kingdoms of brute or of chemical atoms. Nature is a tropical swamp in sunshine, on whose purlieus we hear the song of summer birds and see prismatic dew-drops,—but her interiors are terrific, full of hydras and crocodiles. In the pre-Adamite she bred valor only; by and by she gets on to man, and adds tenderness, and thus raises virtue piecemeal."

He speaks of the eternal, beneficent necessity which is always bringing things right, and says the evils from which we suffer will at last end themselves through the incessant opposition of Nature to everything hurtful. We always have a pilot, he says, and must drift when we cannot steer. Then he plainly states what he thinks to be the true religion and its real foundation, when he says:—

"Natural religion supplies still all the facts which are disguised under the dogma of popular creeds. The progress of religion is steadily to its identification with morals."

"It is true that stoicism, always attractive to the intellectual and cultivated, has now no temples, no academy, no commanding Zeno or Antoninus. It accuses us that it has none; that pure ethics is not now formulated and concreted into a cultus, a fraternity with assemblings and holy-days, with song and book, with brick and stone. Why have not those who believe in it left all for this, and dedicated themselves to write out its scientific scriptures to become its vulgar for millions? I answer, for one, that the inspirations that we catch of this law are not continuous and technical, but joyful sparkles, and are recorded for their beauty, for the delight they give, not for their obligation; and that it is their priceless good to men that they charm and uplift, and not that they are imposed."

"The commanding fact, which I never do not see, is the sufficiency of the moral sentiment. We buttress it up in shallow hours or ages with legends, traditions, and forms, each good for the one moment in which it was a happy type or symbol of the Power; but the Power sends in the next moment a new lesson, which we lose while our eyes are reverted and striving to perpetuate the old."

In his essay on "Perpetual Forces,"* he expresses similar opinions, which as fully indicate his pantheistic outlook and his trust in ethics as the natural and truest outcome of nature. "Intellect and morals," he says, "appear only the material forces on a higher plane." Material nature runs up into the invisible world of mind. We must bend to the laws of nature: they will not bend to us. The methods of the brain correspond to those of the material world. Temperament rules as tyrannically as gravitation. Man's "whole frame is responsive to the world, part for part, every sense, every pore, to a new element, so that he seems to have as many talents as there are qualities in Nature." All forces play through him, but his power is according to his acceptance of their laws. This does he indicate his continual belief that Nature is alive with God, and that through it we come into his presence, which is pantheism. Indeed, he appears here to be more of a pantheist than ever before; for, while he formerly looked for all truth to come through man, now he would seem to indicate that it must all come by perfect obedience to the laws and methods of Nature. "By this wondrous susceptibility to all the impressions of Nature, the man finds himself the receptacle of celestial thoughts; they are the stairs for new ascensions of mind."

In this essay he accepts the conservation and correlation of forces as true, not only physically, but it is the same law and method found in morals and religion. Only in a pantheistic sense could he find this true; but he says:—

"I find the survey of these cosmoical powers a doctrine of consolation in the dark hours of private or public fortune. It shows us the world alive, guided, incorruptible; that its canon cannot be stolen, nor its verities misplaced. That bond, which ties them together is unity, is universal good, saturating all with one being and aim, so that each translates the other, is only the same spirit applied to new departments. Things are saturated with the moral law. There is no escape from it. Violets and grass preach it; every change, every course in nature is nothing but a disguised missionary."

In his last published essay* on "Preaching," there are many indications that he continues to think and speak as ever. He severely criticises the present attitude of religion; thinks it in a transition and very unsatisfactory state. "Virtuous sentiment," however, "appears arrayed against the nominal religion, and the true men are hunted as unbelievers." That he is returning to an acceptance of any historic form of faith does not appear from this passage:—

"The object of adoration remains forever unhurt and identical. We are in transition from the worship of the fathers which enshrined the law in a private and personal history to a worship which recognizes the true eternity of law, its presence to you and me, its good energy in what is called brute nature as in what is called sacred history. The next age will behold God in the ethical laws—as mankind begins to see them in this age, self-equal, self-exacting, instantaneous and self-affirmed, needing no vouchers, no prophet, and no miracle besides their own irresistibility—and will regard natural history, private fortunes and politics, not for themselves, as we have done, but as illustrations of those laws, of that beatitude and love. Nature is too thin a screen; the story of the One breaks in everywhere."

Sensible men, he says, are all of one religion, that of well-doing and daring. "All positive rules, ceremonial, ecclesiastic, distinctions of race or of person, are perishable. Only those distinctions hold which are in the nature of things, not matters of positive ordinance." He fears that what is called religion is only pew-holding, and exclaims: "Anything but unbelief, anything but losing hold of the moral intuitions, as betrayed in the clinging to a form of devotion or a theological dogma, as if it was the liturgy or the chapel that was sacred, and not justice and humility, and the loving heart and serving hand."

When the Free Religious Association was organized in 1867, Emerson took part in its first public meeting, and he has since expressed himself as favorable to its objects. On that occasion, he said:

"We are all very sensible, it is forced on us every day, of the feeling that the churches are outgrown; that the creeds are outgrown; that the technical theology no longer suits us. It is not the ill-will of the people,—no, indeed,—but the incapacity for confirming themselves there. The church is not large enough for man; it cannot inspire the enthusiasm which is the parent of everything good in history, which makes the romance of history. For that enthusiasm, you must have something greater than yourselves, and not less."

At the second meeting, he expressed the conviction that we have disputed long enough. He felt glad a more realistic church was coming, and that we are to drop our obstinate polemics in the effort to excel each other in good works. Rejecting any wish to proselyte reluctant minds, he yet said:—

"I am ready to give, as often before, the first simple foundations of my belief,—that the Author of Nature has not left himself without a witness in any sane mind; that the moral sentiment speaks to every man the law after which the universe was made; that we find parity, identity of design through nature, and benefit to be the uniform aim; that there is a force always at work to make the best better, and the worst good. I believe that not only Christianity is as old as the creation,—not only every sentiment and precept of Christianity can be paralleled in other religious writing,—but, more, that a man of religious susceptibility, and one at the same time conversant with many men, can find the same idea in numberless conversations. The religious find religion wherever they associate. I object, of course, to the claim of miraculous dispensation; certainly not to the doctrine of Christianity. This claim impairs, to my mind, the soundness of him who makes it, and indisposes us to his communion. This comes the wrong way; it comes from without, not within. This positive, historical, authoritative scheme is not consistent with our experience or our expectations. It is something not in nature; it is contrary to that law of nature which all wise men recognize; namely, never to require a larger cause than is necessary to the effect."

"If you are childish, and exhibit your saint as a worker of wonders, a thaumaturgist, I am repelled. That claim takes his teachings out of logic and out of nature, and permits official and arbitrary senses to be grafted on the teachings. It is the praise of our New Testament that its teachings go to the honor and benefit of humanity; that no better lesson has been taught or incarnated. Let it stand, beautiful and wholesome, with whatever is most like it in the teachings and practice of men; but do not attempt to elevate it out of humanity by saying, 'This is not a man,' for then you confound it with the fables of every popular religion; and my distrust of the story makes me distrust the doctrine as soon as it differs from my own belief. Whoever thinks a story gains by the prodigious, by adding something out of nature, robs it more than he adds. It is no longer an example, a model; no longer a heart-stirring hero, but an exhibition, a wonder, an anomaly, removed out of the range of influence with thoughtful men. I

* Unitarian Review, January, 1880. "Originally written as a parlor-lecture to some divinity students, in 1867, afterwards enlarged from earlier writings, and read in its present form at Divinity chapel, Cambridge, May 5, 1879."

* Gallery of Literary Portraits, first, second, and third series. Mr. Gilfillan was a Scotch writer.

† A friend of the writer's, who went to Concord specially to collect information for him.

* North American Review, September, 1877.

submit that, in sound frame of mind, we read or remember the religious sayings and oracles of other men, whether Jew or Indian, or Greek or Persian, only for friendship, only for joy in the social identity which they open to us, and that these words would have no weight with us if we had not the same conviction already. I find something stingy in the unwilling and disparaging admission of these foreign opinions—opinions from all parts of the world—by our churchmen, as if only to enhance by their dimness the superior light of Christianity. Meantime, observe, you cannot bring me too good a word, too dazzling a hope, too penetrating an inside from the Jews. I hail every one with delight, as showing the riches of my brother, my fellow-soul, who would thus think and thus greatly feel. Zealots eagerly fasten their eyes on the differences between their creed and yours, but the charm of the study is in finding the agreements, the identities, in all the religions of men."

It can be easily seen that Emerson has had no change of opinions. His position is that of deep and sincere belief in man as a religious and spiritual being, to whom the truth is ever open. He rejects all creeds, forms, books, and special revelations, has no faith in any of them, as such. He is no more of a theist than he has always been, none the less a pantheist. He doubtless regards Christianity as the noblest and purest religion, and accepts its great moral teachings; but Christianity as a creed or a separate revelation he does not accept. That it has any monopoly of salvation, any truths that belong to it exclusively, or any exclusive claim upon mankind of any sort, he does not believe. These seem to be the facts, and, as such, should be stated. Yet he has always been charmed by the more spiritual phases of religion, has been no enemy to true devotion and faith in divine things. While he utterly rejects the miraculous and all claims that Christianity is the sole means of salvation, yet he greatly loves the true spiritual ideal out of which this great faith has grown, which is the real truth that gives to it its power. In the essay on "Preaching," he says, in speaking of churches:—

"I agree with them more than I disagree. I agree with their heart and motive; my discontent is with their limitations and surface and language. Their statement is grown as fabulous as Dante's Inferno. Their purpose is as real as Dante's sentiment and hatred of vice. Always put the best interpretations on a tenet. Why not on Christianity, wholesome, sweet, and poetic? It is the record of a pure and holy soul, humble, absolutely disinterested, a truth-speaker, and bent on serving, teaching, and uplifting men. Christianity taught the capacity, the element, to love the All-perfect without a stingy bargain for a personal happiness. It taught that to love him was happiness,—to love him in others' virtues. An era in human history is the life of Jesus; and the immense influence for good leaves all the perversion and superstition almost harmless. Mankind have been subdued to the acceptance of his doctrine, and cannot spare the benefit of so pure a servant of truth and love. Of course a hero so attractive to the hearts of millions drew the hypocrite and the ambitious into his train, and they used his name to falsify his history and undo his work."

The change which has taken place in Emerson's mind is seen in his lessened faith in the occult, and his greater faith in the scientific. In his first book, in accord with all the transcendentalists, he expressed great trust in the powers manifested through the miraculous, religious enthusiasm, and animal magnetism.* In all his recent writings, on the contrary, he finds the deepest assurance of the spiritual in the realm of law and of order. He now says:—

"Before we acquire great power, we must acquire wisdom to use it well. Animal magnetism inspires the prudent and moral with a certain terror; so with the divination of contingent events, and the alleged second-sight of the pseudo-spiritualists. There are many things of which a man might wish to be ignorant, and these are such. Shun them as you would the secrets of the undertaker and the butcher. The best are never demoniacal or magnetic; leave this limbo to the prince of the power of the air. The lowest angel is better. It is the height of the animal; below the region of the divine."

His whole faith is in the moral, and he would have life supremely devoted to its attainment in the fullest measure. The way to it is always by obedience to the laws of the Cosmos, outward and inward alike. There is no luck, he thinks, no short way, no special methods, nothing but obedience to the order of the world. Every moral element is "under the dominion of fatal law."

"Coincidences, dreams, animal magnetism, omens, sacred lots, have great interest for some minds. But suppose a diligent collection and study of these occult facts were made, they are merely physiological, semi-medical, related to the machinery of man, opening to our curiosity how we live, and no aid on the superior problems why we live and what we do. Mesmerism is high life below stairs. 'Tis a low curiosity or lust of structure, and is separated by celestial diameters from the love of spiritual truth. It is wholly a false view to couple these things in any manner with the religious nature and sentiment, and a most dangerous superstition to raise them to the lofty place of motives and sanctions. The whole world is an omen and sign. Why look so wistfully in a corner? These adepts have mistaken flatulency for inspiration. Were this drivell which they report the voice of spirits really such, we must find out a more decisive suicide. They are ignorant of all that is healthy and useful to know, and by law of kind—dunces seeking dunces in the dark of what they call the spiritual world—preferring snores and gastric noises to the voice of any man. I think the rappings a new test to try catechisms with. It detects organic scepticism in the very heads of the church."

Though Emerson rejects all which has so long been regarded as the very truth of religion, yet he is none the less religious. The natural order and health of the world best express to him those great truths on which any real faith must rest. Religion does not belong to the special, the miraculous, the occult, the dark side of life, but to the orderly and progressive, the realm of law, the land of light. The Cosmos itself is a revelation of God, its law is his law, its order the token of his presence, and its health and beauty the hint of his perfect will. The need of worship, of sincere communion with the eternal, he ever inculcates. In his last essay, he has stated this desire in expressive and eloquent words:—

"When we go alone, or come into the house of thought and worship, we come with purpose to be disabused of appearances, to see realities, the great lines of our destiny, to see that life has no caprice or fortune, is no hopping squib, but a growth after immutable laws under beneficent influences the most immense. The church is open to great and small in all nations; and how rare and lofty, how unutterable, are the aims it labors to set before men! We come to educate, come to isolate, to be abstractionists; in fine, to open the eyes to the deep mystery of cause and effect, to know that, though ministers of justice and power fail, Justice and Power never fail. The open secret of the world is the art of subliming a private soul with inspirations from the great and public and divine Soul from which we live."

Emerson is irresistibly attracted and inspired by religion, but he is the champion of no special faith. It is the universal that attracts him, the unity under all the many forms. It is no incoming of any external influence he observes, no supernatural he delights in. It is the natural unfolding and perfecting of what is involved in the very constitution of the Cosmos and the nature of things that is religion to him,—all this as the expression of an Infinite Soul that fills all the bounds of being. His life flows through all the world, in all its forms, giving it law and purpose. Harmony with this order, obedience to this law,—seeing the divine through all forms, and having for it reverence and trust,—this is religion, and the whole of it. On its human side, it is identical with ethics, with loyal obedience to the laws of the Cosmos as expressions of divine truth. The healthy and pure spirit in which Emerson has set forth these great and sublime truths cannot be found surpassed in any other writer. Indeed, it is doubtful whether any author in any age has so nobly stated them, with so clear an insight into truth. Certainly no writer has so well expressed them in modern language, or so clearly shown their unity with all material facts and physical laws. Emerson has put the world immensely in his debt for his loyal and inspired interpretation of science, ethics, and religion as one, all resting on the same facts and laws.—Indianapolis Saturday Herald, Feb. 14.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

UNITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

A REVIEW OF DR. MARTINEAU'S STATEMENT.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

I.

The closing sections of Dr. Martineau's introductory chapter to the reissue (1875) of J. J. Tayler's Retrospect of the Religious Life of England present what may be considered the nearest approach which Unitarianism as a movement has made to the exact ground of faith on which, as I think, Christ stood, as distinguished from that on which the apostles took their stand, and on which historical Christianity was built up. If we are not to pass over from the ground held by the apostles to the ground which at least only Christ distinctly held, then we must at least accept what Dr. Martineau has kept of the apostolic and traditional ascription to Christ of a divine office. A fainter attenuation of the Orthodox conception will hardly be attempted. In fact, Dr. Martineau appears to keep, not so much a remnant of real faith, to meet a need of the believer's soul, as a remnant of formal confession, which greatly saves appearances for new faith, and is thus convenient and useful, although no way essential or necessary. In this form, therefore, the idea of Christ and Christianity, which has dominated historical Christianity from the morrow of the crucifixion to the present moment, may well come up for final judgment. If even this cannot pass, there is no form under which the idea can stand. Dr. Martineau has closed the eyes of the Apostles' Creed, only that it may be carried to its burial.

He first speaks of what he calls "the pure Theism of F. W. Newman and Miss F. P. Cobbe," and designates it as "non-Christian," because it does not adopt Christ as a perfect example and master, and does not take a name which will be understood to imply such adoption. And yet Dr. Martineau says of this "non-Christian" "pure Theism" that it is "so noble a product of the most capable thought and truest inward experience that, if it only were an historic instead of a private gift, and could come to men as Inspiration instead of Reason, it would regenerate the world." This seems to admit that pure Theism is true enough to regenerate the world, if only it would call itself Christian Revelation. It surely, then, should not be called non-Christian, its only mistake being that it does not take the name which rightfully belongs to it. The historical error of giving up the Christian name to a profoundly corrupted Christianity, under the mistaken belief that with Christ himself originated, in some degree at least, the false views which pure Theism clears away, is indeed a most unfortunate one; the advantage of honestly and truthfully claiming Christ's name being an immense one, on account of the exceeding power of historical religious association, and of the prodigious exaggeration of this power by the weight, that way, of errors which date from the apostles. And yet, unfortunate as this error is, and unnecessary as it is to a sufficiently sagacious learning, it in no way affects Christian character and standing, the sole and sufficient principles of which are love to man and trust in God.

It is again and again to be seen in the story we have of the teaching of Christ, and of his prevailing temper, that respect for him was to be imputed to all love to man and trust in God. Nay, more, although he would not allow respect for himself to be so much as named in comparison with trust in God, he distinctly and comprehensively laid down the double principle that to either purity of heart or love towards man should always be imputed a sufficient knowledge of God; so that against character, either in its inward form of purity or its outward form of humanity, there should lie no theological objection. It is flagrantly contrary to Christ to call a good man theological names, for any the least opprobrium. Even if he calls himself an atheist, in a to him natural sense of the term, it must be taken, under Christ's law of imputed faith, not as real atheism, but as a nominal and unreal sort,—a denial of something called God, or a denying opinion about God, but not a denial of what God really is, or at least not a denial deeper than mere opinion,—not a denial coming from the heart or sustained by character and conduct. If a man acts as God would have him act, and is such as God would have him be, he must be treated as a true believer, even if in some guileless contrariness of the understanding he has put wrong the matter of definitions, names, and reasoned opinion. That is the quite incomparable principle of Christ in regard to even the supreme object of worship.

And as, in comparison with this single and sole object of worship, he would not suffer himself to be named reverentially, not even as "Good Teacher,"—since not from him, in his human historical office, comes the light of wisdom, but from God, who is alone master of the scenes of history,—it must follow that no mere opinion about him, right or wrong, or reference to his name, can any way affect the Christian standing of one who, out of a pure heart and love unfeigned, does the duty of a human brother. And if such a one not only has a heart right toward man his brother, but cherishes also pure faith in God, it is of the most absolute necessity to consider him a Christian, whatever he considers and calls himself. To a deep consciousness of the law of love, on which all turns, the mistakes of the head do not essentially signify; not even when they are theological, much less when they are historical and critical. Though logic put wrong, and love of truth misdirected, lead a man of pure devotion to all good to call himself an atheist, the truth of Christ will serenely disregard his intellectual mistake, because ALL-GOOD, though non-personal, and implicated with no opinion as to the cause, the control, the cure of the universe, is in reality the nearest and clearest vision the creature can have of the ineffable Presence, which forever escapes definition, and cannot be embraced by dogma, and is better served by devoted obedience than by any doctrine.

Be it most deeply and purely true that God is and that God is one, and that by providence and inspiration God abides with us, for time and for eternity; yet all this as belief has no value of a divine sort, unless it work in devotion from man to man, and incarnate that love which before all else God is to his creatures. Devotion to All-Good is the deepest and purest faith in God. To rightly know that All-Good is but the shadow of Godhead; and to confess God as Father infinite, providence absolute, and inspiration living and eternal, is indeed useful to the last degree, and it will be natural when theology and creed and church shall have unlearned their false spirit of putting opinion and confession of the lips and ritual above character, conduct, and life. Speculative atheism, technical infidelity, and non-acceptance of communion have been made a temptation, and almost a duty, to minds truly humane and faithful, devoted and reverent, because to such minds practical duty of man to man carries a supremely divine sanction. The truth of Christ authenticates this deep impulse of the pure heart, and promises that to such there shall be no lasting difficulty about the vision of God.

There could, then, be no greater mistake than to call pure theism non-Christian. It would be an absolute mistake to deny the Christian name to even an atheist whose atheism was of opinion only, and not of heart and life. The opinion may be pronounced non-Christian, but nothing more; and if the heart and life bear on nobly and faithfully, without a just light in the understanding, like ships speeding through storm and night along a course calculated and hazarded, but not seen nor surely known, it belongs to the plainest analogy of Christ's teaching to say that over one such atheist, opened to tasks of compassion and deeds of mercy and all the ways of justice and judgment and truth from man to man, and thus feeling his blind way into absolute communion with the deepest secrets of the Most High, and getting into heaven without knowing it, there is far more interest felt among all pure intelligences on high than over ninety and nine theologically just persons, whose more correct opinions were perhaps a snare to them, to make them pass by on the other side, like the priest and the Levite, with a narrowness of sympathy far worse than any narrowness of understanding.

And this being true of one whose opinion about God gets wrong, it is still more true of one whose opinion about Christ gets wrong, while yet about

* Miscellanies, p. 70.

† North American Review, March, 1877. Essay on Demonology.

God the opinion goes true to the mark of pure theism. No misapplication of terms could be more unwarranted than that which assumes that a pure theist is not a Christian, because of some denial of Christ's word or rejection of Christ's name. The historical mistake of such rejection or denial may be great and undoubted, but it does not affect Christian character, work, or communion in any such way as to warrant denial of the Christian name. By way of flagrant paradox, we may perhaps say "a non-Christian Christian" of one who insists conscientiously on not taking the name of Christ,—putting all our emphasis on the term Christian, and making "non-Christian" mean nothing at all, except our courteous recognition that the to us entirely Christian person does not take the name. Miss Cobbe does not take the Christian name, she has not so discriminated in her study of the history and teaching of Christ as to be able to do it truthfully; and, having a rare regard for truth and a very pure courage of conviction, she refuses to avail herself of the advantage of a name which is a symbol of pure truth to all Christendom. But she no more loses essential Christian standing by this than she loses very rare womanhood by remaining single. Clear as the infelicity of either situation may be thought to be, it is as little appropriate to call Miss Cobbe a "non-Christian" as to call her an "old maid." In reality she may have turned the infelicity of her womanhood to glorious happiness, of pure service if not of personal pleasure, and that of her confession to no less glorious conformity, of pure faith if not of formal and nominal opinion. Assuming Christ to be a teacher of purest truth, to whom Miss Cobbe would gladly accord full respect if she could see him in this light, it may be said with confidence that her spirit of regard for truth, and fidelity to conviction and devotion to human welfare through honest study of divine things, growing up into a singularly noble and accomplished theism, tender and true as the very grace of heaven to the human brother, and loyal above reproach to the heavenly Father,—this loving fidelity of heart to all deep human interests, and loyal rectitude of soul toward the kingdom of God, is not only the truest possible conformity to Christ, as Christ is in the highest ideal light, but it is a conformity in which Miss Cobbe stands nearer to Christ than any person whatever does who makes the name of Christ a ground of judging her, and of standing apart from her under the plea of a "Christian" standing as contrasted with a "non-Christian."

It may be a very elevated, refined, and sincere opinion which leads a believer or a defender of the faith to stand well forward toward some recognized altar and say, "We come unto thee, O God, in the name of Christ." The insinuation that some one else comes in a mere private way, without any flourish of historical trumpets, or any claim at all for a standing, may be made as delicately as possible. And yet the so-called positive Christian here is the last refinement of the Pharisee in the temple; and of the pure Theist, who stands afar off, apart from Christian rites, associations, history, historical person and name, we may be sure the judgment must be that she will go down to her house justified rather than the other. That a critic of the rarest Christian accomplishments should for the moment even play this part shows how subtle is the canker of Orthodox tradition, and how nearly impossible is complete emancipation from it.

TAKING TEA WITH KO-KUN-HUA.

Prof. Ko-Kun-Hua was like an oriental picture, a personage out of Lalla Rookh, or something quite apart from our common-place world, in a robe of pale blue flowered crape, lovely, delicate, and lustrous, a silvery azure, falling in a soft, graceful way over a brocade silk skirt of the peculiar yellow green which is known in the fashion-plates as "faded leaf" color. In this attire, the refinement of his features and slightness of his form were more apparent than when in his visiting costume.

The interpreter, who is also a servant, came immediately and took his position, standing several feet from his superior; and soon Mrs. Ko-Kun-Hua entered, dressed as when I first saw her, followed by the two little girls. And, on my remarking that I had not seen the baby, the professor, understanding my words, smiled and said something to his wife, which seemed to be asking if the baby could be seen, to which she, half-laughing and giving her head a slight toss, seemed to answer, "I don't care." So the interpreter disappeared for a moment, and returned leading a tiny girl, two years old, a diminutive specimen of a Chinese woman, a wee thing with a round grave face, and clad in indigo-blue clothes figured with white, like some of those India silks which were so much worn a few years ago. The little thing stood quietly holding fast to his hand, and solemnly contemplated us,—fantastically attired creatures that we were, to her eyes.

And now, with considerable help from the interpreter, we had some interesting conversation about the education of children. The father said they were to be taught English at once, and sent them for their new books, which were copies of Hillard's First Reader, in which the superintendent now gave them a little instruction, to the great delight of the family. Then he went to his study, and brought out a pile of English and Chinese school-books which had been given to him, and was very eager to get information about our language. He produced our cards, and asked us one by one to pronounce our names, and then each card he labelled with the name in Chinese. Mine required three characters, which were made in a perpendicular row at the upper right-hand corner. These were done with a few skilful strokes of a dainty black brush or pencil, which he took from some receptacle attached to a girdle beneath his robes.

The interpreter, who appears to be a man-of-all-work, and always full of business, smart, capable, and bright wherever one meets him, whether indoors or on the street, came in with a waiter, on which were six cups of tea, each in its "salver," which he set on the table before us.

The etiquette is for the guests to take up their cups, when the heads of the house immediately imitate them, and then all silently partake together; but, though we understood that such was the custom, and saw that Mr. and Mrs. Ko-Kun-Hua waited our movements, not one of us ventured to do this, not even when the mandarin said, "Take tea!"—for how should we manage?—that was the question. Each cup was on a long narrow "salver" or waiter of metal, which had a sunken circle into which it fitted; and each cup had a cover on it, like a small saucer turned bottom upward. We waited, as with one consent, till Mrs. Ko-Kun-Hua, seeing our dilemma, raised hers with her right hand, and daintily carried it to her lips, holding her arm high, and sipped, with the cover on. We all tried, and made a universal, ignominious failure. In fact, as for myself, I could hardly convey mine safely to my mouth without using both hands, such concern was I in, lest the cover should topple off. We tried again; and then we laughed, the whole company of us; and then the host and hostess, with considerable kindness and courtesy characteristic of that people toward their guests, removed the covers from their own cups and laid them on the table, and we at once followed their example; and then we all took tea, decorously and in state. No spoons, no sugar, no milk: they never use them. A few tea-leaves are put into the bottom of each cup, boiling water poured on, the covers put in place, and thus, with all the flavor kept in, it is served.—Amanda B. Harris, in Wide Awake for December.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE MAILS.

Several firms with high-sounding names, quartered in New York City, have for some time flooded the country with circulars, holding out great inducements to speculate in stocks. These firms were really, with perhaps a single exception, under one management; and so successful were they through their advertising that some days thousands of dollars were sent to them to be invested. They had one method for all: they pocketed the money, and wrote their victims that the investment had proved disastrous! The Government has for some time employed the best talent to detect and bring to justice this den of thieves, who preyed on the unsuspecting through the facilities afforded by the mails; but so adroit were these worse than robbers, that they could not be caught. Under the circumstances, it was a most commendable and perfectly legitimate act for the Government to publish the names of these rascally firms, and refuse to distribute their tons of circulars to their victims.

In the same manner, we commend the Government in refusing to carry lottery advertisements. Lotteries have been declared unlawful. They are most pernicious in their effects on the morals and prosperity of a community. Being illegal, everything connected with them is illegal; and the Government has the same right to refuse to carry their advertisements and tickets, as it would to transport counterfeit money.

With this light, the following editorial indorsement of the Philadelphia Record, by the Banner of Light, is at least a trifle singular. The Record says:—

"If the postal department of the Federal Government is to be allowed, not only to refuse at its discretion to perform its allotted function as a carrier of the mails, but to confiscate letters and other matter confided to its custody for the purpose of transportation and delivery, on the pretext that such letters and other mail matter are of a character hurtful to private morals or private purses, where is the point at which the line shall be drawn beyond which such despotic supervision is to be prohibited?"

To the above, the Banner adds:—

"It further remarks that there is danger that this interference with the affairs of citizens in the name of morality may go too far, and eventuate in an unwarrantable and tyrannical encroachment upon individual liberty. Such an oversight induces, if accepted by the people, a servile dependence upon the Government, which undermines the dignity and free-will of the citizen. It is hostile to that personal liberty and responsibility which is the primary object of a republican government to secure and encourage."

Now, if the Government really confiscates letters and acts as a censor of opinions, it is most dangerous and reprehensible, and all our contemporary says is true; but to write thus, when the cause is the refusal to carry lottery advertisements and the circulars of a crew of rascals, is to advocate the cause of the latter against morality and justice. The same arguments and cry of danger against government usurpation were raised by an esteemed contemporary, when the Mormon question was agitated. The attack of the Government to eradicate the most immoral, heartless, and misery-fraught system of polygamy was heralded as an attack against freedom. Every lover of morality and purity will hail with joy when this plague-spot is removed, and the rule of law made so strong that the foul crimes in Mormon history can never be repeated.

When Government really invades private liberty, we shall not be backward in sounding the alarm; but we draw a sharp discrimination between liberty and license, between the moral and immoral. One of the prime offices of the Government is to protect the people against rascality; and, in this office, it must interfere with the individual rights and liberty of the rascals, and it is a strange occurrence to see the men who are thus protected turn in defence of the thieves against the Government.—Chicago Religio-Philosophical Journal, Feb. 21.

"LIBERAL" CATHOLICISM A DELUSION.

We fear that Cardinal Manning's essay on "The Catholic Church and Modern Society," published in the current number of the North American Review, will not be looked upon as reassuring to those who entertain the fear that, at some time, more or less distant, the Church and State in this country will come into opposition. Cardinal Manning states with great distinctness that one of the fundamental principles of the Roman Catholic Church is to support constituted authority, even though that authority may be such as the Church considers unwise and even heretical, and, in this respect, he claims that it is the great conservator of social order. But he qualifies this comment by indirectly pointing out that, where they have the power, it is the duty of Catholics, by an active participation in political life, to use their influence in the work of removing those obstacles that interfere with a proper recognition of the Church by the State. But what is it that the Church claims? or, in other words, what power does she seek to exercise over the State? This is clearly pointed out in paragraph eight, section eleven, to be the right "to direct, not the life of individual men only, but the collective life of nations in their organized forms of republics, monarchies, and empires." Just how this power would be applied is shown by what he says in regard to the normal condition of the Church before the Reformation, when the nation and the Church were coördinate, and when an enemy of the Church was an enemy of the State, and vice versa. It is the restoration of this old-time alliance toward which the Papal energies are always bent; and, although difficulties innumerable are in the way of its accomplishment, and concessions of one kind and another have been forced upon the Church, the hope of ultimate victory is none the less held to, for all that conflicts with it is looked upon as an "open usurpation or a culpable connivance at the usurpation of the sacred rights and sovereignty of the vicar of Christ." Cardinal Manning goes a trifle out of his way to compliment the United States, by saying that our republicanism is something quite different from that of France; but the distinction in this case seems to be a forced one, since his chief grievance with the French republic is that it is seeking to secularize education, abolish the budget of the clergy and the subventions to the church seminaries; in short, to place itself in the condition that the United States now and always has been in. Indeed, it would be hard to find more earnest protests against our institutions than the cardinal has set before his American readers; for, not content with affirming that the education of the young by the State is "an evil which reproduces and perpetuates the whole tradition of apostasy from the Christian name," he quotes from the Encyclical of 1878 of Pope Leo XIII. the remark that public authority derived from the multitude of the people is a "novel impiety, unheard of even among the heathen nations."—Boston Sunday Herald, Jan. 17.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE DEAD BARD.

JUNE 12, 1878.

The New World's minstrel, hoary-bearded, old,
At length unto the burden of his years
Succumbs, and lies majestic, seerlike, cold,
Joining the bards of other days, his peers.
No more the footsteps of the throng untold,
Beating the city's ways like rain, he hears;
Though still 'tis in its wonted current rolled
There, where he sleeps, past his insistent ears.
He sang the Rivulet that down its glen Still bickering runs; the Prairie pastures vast
And shy stream gliding far from haunts of men;
The Hymn of Death and the remorseless Past,
And Waterfowl that towards its distant fen,
Lone flying through the sunset, scaped his ken;
The Hunter dreaming on the mountain's brow;
The solemn, sylvan past, in accents grand,—
All these he sang; and Liberty in guise
Of beauteous matron, young, with flashing eyes
Confronting Tyranny and vanished Youth,
Which waits us where immortal morn prevails;
And, stronger from defeat, Eternal Truth,
Before whom stricken Error dying quails.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 13.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Feeder Boas, $15; William Jabine, $3.20; S. M. Warner, $1; Cash, $3.20; W. P. Wesselhoft, $3.20; Henrietta Hyde, $3.20; Cash, 50 cents; J. L. Stoddard, $6.20; Mrs. David Joy, $3.20; Estate of Peter B. Brigham, $3.20; Hon. S. E. Sewall, $3.20; Harmon Woodbury, $3.40; Chas. H. Webb, $3.20; Etta and Lizzie Marshall, $3.20; David Kirkwood, $3.20; J. S. Cobb, $3.20; Elsas May & Co., $3.20; Henry Bool, $3.20; Francis J. Goodwin, $6.40; H. Lieber, $6.40; John Thurlay, $2.90; John L. Smith, $3; Asa C. Pierce, $3; Miss Devereux, $3.20; G. M. Smith, $3.20; M. A. Bartlett, $7.50; A. Haskell, $3.20; D. B. Harris, $4.20; B. F. Smith, $3.20; Isaac Hall, $3.20; Geo. O. Smith, $1.60; E. Manke, $3.20; W. M. Schuwerk, $3; Jno. S. Cox, $5; Ernst Prussing, $5; J. N. McDonald, $1; Charles Storrs, $3; American News Co., $3.84; John Stimson, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 18, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

FRANCOIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CHARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES.

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged March 4.....	$1,740.00
ARMAND PIONNIE, Newark, N.J.....	1.00
F. B. PARSE, " ".....	1.00
I. W. FRANKEL, " ".....	1.00
N. DEBBY, " ".....	1.00
Dr. S. S. LYON, " ".....	1.00
A. B. GENUNG, " ".....	1.00
Mrs. A. B. GENUNG, " ".....	1.00
F. KEIB, " ".....	1.00
F. S. GENUNG, Paterson, N.J.....	1.00
EDWARD B. HYDE, New York.....	5.00
JAMES GOLDSMITH, " ".....	5.00
C. N. WAYLAND, " ".....	5.00
LOUIS SPINER, " ".....	2.00
Dr. R. G. WIENER, " ".....	1.00
FREDERICK HUSE, " ".....	10.00
Mrs. L. C. BOLLARD, " ".....	5.00
Mrs. HANNAH HART, " ".....	1.00
Mrs. BUNZEL, " ".....	5.00
THOMAS JONES, " ".....	5.00
MORRIS ARNOLD, " ".....	2.00
L. M. KAHN, " ".....	1.00
JULIUS ADLER, " ".....	2.00
ISAAC SCHURR, " ".....	1.00
JOSEPH H. LOUIS, " ".....	5.00
Dr. A. JACOBY, " ".....	10.00
Dr. MARY PUTNAM JACOBY, New York.....	10.00
Dr. ELIZABETH CUSHIER, " ".....	5.00
M. DAVIDSON, " ".....	3.00
SIMON ANO, " ".....	1.00
C. E. CADY, " ".....	1.00
Dr. T. A. MCBRIDE, " ".....	1.00
ARNOLD LEO, " ".....	5.00
B. NEUMORGEN, " ".....	5.00
D. KISH, " ".....	1.00
Dr. EMILY BLACKWELL, " ".....	2.00
GEORGE L. WELLMAN, " ".....	2.00
CHARLES WATROUS, " ".....	1.00
N. S. MARVIN, " ".....	5.00
D. M. TREDWELL, " ".....	1.00
Total.....	$1,857.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

"EMERSON'S THEIST."

Under the above caption, the Boston Daily Advertiser of March 9 thus reports a statement made by Joseph Cook, at the close of his lecture of the preceding day at the Old South Meeting-house:—

At the close of the lecture, Mr. Cook made an explanation in regard to Emerson's theistic views. It had been widely proclaimed, he said, that he had asserted in the West that Mr. Emerson had joined an Orthodox church. Various amplifications of this absurd rumor had so annoyed a son of the great philosopher and poet, that the former had written a denial of what needed no contradiction. He begged leave to say that he had not made the assertion, nor any remotely resembling it. All he had ever said concerning Mr. Emerson had been that he regarded him now as a theist, although not exactly a Christian theist, and that he thought his earlier writings were pantheistic. Mr. Alcott had said much more; at least, he had authorized the public assertion that Mr. Emerson was not only a theist, but a Christian theist, in the full sense of these words. It was very possible that an enlargement of Mr. Alcott's statements and the mixing of them with his (Mr. Cook's) had caused the charge against him that he had been through the West in a flamboyant manner, asserting what he dare not in the East. Mr. Cook offered these two propositions: Dr. Manning called Emerson a pantheist at Andover ten years ago, and had the assent of scholars; Mr. Alcott called Mr. Emerson a theist in 1879, and had the general assent of scholars. Mr. Emerson has said to Mr. Alcott: "I do not care to classify myself with any painstaking accuracy with this set or with that, but, if I am to have any appellation at all of a religious kind, I prefer to be called a Christian theist: you have not misrepresented me." And again he spoke to Mr. Alcott substantially as follows: "My ancestry is made up of ministers. In my family the Bible is seen oftener than any other book in the hands of my wife and daughter. I think those facts tell my story. If you wish to call me a Christian theist, you have my authority to do so, and you must not leave out the word Christian, for to leave that out is to leave out everything." [Applause.]

It is utterly futile for Mr. Cook to quote the opinions of Dr. Manning or Mr. Alcott in this matter. The unequivocal declaration, now publicly made by Dr. E. W. Emerson with his father's express permission, is that Ralph Waldo Emerson "has not retracted any views expressed in his writings after his withdrawal from the ministry." In the face of that declaration, any claim that Mr. Emerson's views have undergone any change which does not appear in his published writings must be branded as wilfully and deliberately fraudulent. As to the meaning of those writings, neither Joseph Cook nor Dr. Manning nor Mr. Alcott has received any commission from Heaven as infallible and authoritative interpreter; every reader may and will judge them for himself. This is what all honest people have desired—to see all impertinent and meddlesome gossips discredited as witnesses and driven out of court, and Mr. Emerson himself recognized as the only credible witness respecting his own views. The attempt that Joseph Cook still makes to impose on the public his own free translations of Mr. Alcott's free translations of Mr. Emerson's words, as if this twice-made dilution and adulteration of the latter's thought had the slightest value as testimony in the case, merits the severest public reprobation. It is not an innocent thing to bolster up any cause by such means. Mr. Emerson himself chooses to be judged by his own published words; he has a perfect right to be so judged; and whoever now publicly persists in judging him otherwise, above all for merely partisan or polemical purposes, will write himself down, in the estimation of all unprejudiced persons, as an unblushing and conscienceless impostor.

REVIEW OF THE WRIGHT-SAVAGE CORRESPONDENCE.

On another page Mr. Savage publishes in full the correspondence between himself and Mr. Wright, concerning which the latter gave a very erroneous impression in last week's INDEX. It is a painful necessity to let the truth be known about these letters. We summarize their main points as follows:

In "Number One," Mr. Savage, as "one of the Trustees of the Lick Building Fund and Treasurer of the Lick Lecture Fund," addresses the "President and Stockholders" of the Paine Memorial Corporation, and requests the appointment by the latter of a "Committee of Investigation" to inquire into all the transactions relative to the use of these funds. That he had a right to make this request,—that it was his duty to make it under the circumstances,—and that it was the President's duty to lay it before the Corporation for their independent consideration, certainly cannot be denied or doubted.

In "Number Two," Mr. Wright replies that he omitted to lay this important request before the Corporation to whom it was addressed, because, as he here alleges, "the matters referred to in it... had already been investigated and reported on." By this extraordinary action, the President assumed the whole responsibility of refusing investigation into transactions affecting profoundly the good name of the Corporation, and of depriving the Corporation itself of all opportunity to right whatever wrongs may have been committed. This he does solely on his own individual responsibility.

In "Number Three," Mr. Savage requests a copy of the "report" of the "investigation" alleged by Mr. Wright to have been made.

In "Number Four," Mr. Wright admits that no "record" of the "investigation" had been kept, and refers vaguely to the "minutes of the Directors" for the "names of the committee and the result reported by them, only." The remainder of the letter is wholly irrelevant, and we pass it over here.

In "Number Five," Mr. Savage repeats his request for definite information respecting the "investigation" which Mr. Wright had considered so satisfactory as to warrant him in suppressing all further inquiry. At the close of this letter, and merely in reply to Mr. Wright's sarcastic advice to "prosecute in the courts," Mr. Savage asks Mr. Wright directly if he will "join and help" in bringing the case into court, "where secrets and falsehood and prevarication cannot shield the wrong?" This is the letter which Mr. Wright last week so astonishingly misrepresented as merely "asking me [him] to contribute funds to prosecute," etc.

In "Number Six," Mr. Wright refers Mr. Savage to the Investigator's report (published in full in THE INDEX of February 19). But he now makes this extraordinary confession: namely, that the investigating committee to whom he had alluded, and of whom it now appears that he himself was Chairman, "looked into all the matters brought forward by Mr. Ellis, so far as regards the title to the estate, AND NO FURTHER." That is to say, they did not look into the matter of the Lick Lecture Fund at all—the most important point which Mr. Savage had asked the Corporation to investigate!!! Mr. Wright, by his own written admission, suppressed the request for investigation on the ground that the "matters" referred to had already been "investigated and reported on"; but he now confesses that the most important of these "matters" had not even been "looked into"!!! What must be thought of his suppression of a respectful, proper, and abundantly warranted request for investigation, withheld by him as President from the Corporation to whom it was equally addressed, now that he himself has swept away all possible justification of that suppression? Is that the way to prove an unwillingness to "keep peace with fraudulent liberals" or to "conceal their crimes"? Whatever "fraud" or "crime," if any, has been committed in this melancholy business, Mr. Wright has done his utmost to "conceal" it. The chief "matter" as to which Mr. Savage respectfully requested an investigation by the Corporation (the party most deeply interested) had not been "investigated and reported on." Mr. Wright at first alleged it had been, but later confessed it had not been; yet he himself was the Chairman of the committee to whose "investigation" he referred!

The peace, or harmony, or union, which can only be maintained in the liberal ranks by such tactics as these, is the sleep of death. The essential truth of liberal principles cannot, it is true, be affected by the conduct of those who profess to be their champions; but theological superstition and ecclesiastical injustice will stand unshaken till the crack of doom, if liberals themselves slaughter the justice, integrity, and purity whose lead they profess to follow. In the long run, that cause will triumph, and that alone, which reverences most profoundly and obeys most faithfully the moral laws on which the universe is built.

WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL AND PROTECTIVE UNION.

As there is much interest now in efforts to conduct religious services on an independent basis which will give opportunity for free expression not quite provided for by existing organizations, perhaps the readers of THE INDEX will be interested in a brief account of the meeting held on Sunday afternoon at No. 5 Park Street, Boston, by a Committee of this Society. These meetings are composed entirely of women. Each member of the Committee takes charge of them for a month, invites the speakers (who are also women), presides at the meetings, and arranges the services according to her own sense of propriety. I can speak only of the month of February, during which I presided for the first time; but I have no doubt that the other months have been and will be of at least equal value. The audience usually numbers nearly a hundred. Some ladies attend constantly from interest in the work or in these special meetings; but the audience varies very much, and women often come from a very eager desire for new light, or a communion of thought and feeling which they do not find elsewhere. This is shown by the earnestness of the discussions which follow the speaking. I have rarely heard more close and searching questions put, or known any company keep so closely to the most important points in the remarks of the speaker, instead of straying into trifling discussion of minor matters.

The other services consist of one or two hymns sung by the company. Although, musically speaking, this part of the service is not very successful, yet many women expressed a pleasure in it. The presiding officer usually reads a short passage from some of the world's great thinkers, not confining herself to those of any country or religion. Sometimes a prayer is offered, and it is perhaps the general wish of the Committee to have one; but, as being more in consonance with my own feeling and practice, instead of any spoken words, I allowed a few minutes after the singing for those who wished to engage in silent devotion.

On the first afternoon, the speaker was prevented from coming; and, as it was too late to find a substitute, I read a paper prepared for the Free Religious Society of Providence, on "The Best Use of Sunday." The ground I took was the utility of Sunday as the people's holiday, and the responsibility resting upon the best educated portion of the community to make it an occasion of good to all. The discussion was earnest and spirited, and turned very much upon the question of how far existing church organizations supplied the means of using the hours of Sunday happily and usefully.

On the second Sunday, Miss L. M. Peabody, well-known as a member of the Boston School Committee, spoke on "The Religious Education of Children," urging the duty of developing true ideas and sentiments in regard to God and duty in early life. The reverence and beauty of her thoughts touched every heart, and there was great harmony of feeling in the discussion which followed, although difference of opinion was expressed on some points.

On the third Sunday, Miss Abby W. May spoke of "The Kingdom of Heaven," which she defined to be "all working together in love and working for God." Her thought was very impressive, and she laid great stress upon the importance of regular times of quiet self-communion, when we could know ourselves and our relation to God and to life better than in the hurry of action.

On the fourth Sunday, Mrs. Phoebe M. Kendall, a member of the School Committee in Cambridge, spoke of the ideas of the Society of Friends, especially in relation to woman and the home. She gave a very clear account of the early doctrines of this sect, and some very pleasant reminiscences of her early life among them in Nantucket. As many "friends" were present, a lively discussion followed, which brought out many important traits illustrating the life and work of this sect, which has such a wonderful record of virtue and good morals.

On the fifth Sunday, Dr. Sarah E. Brown gave a very interesting account of the Chinese as she had seen them in California, and of the work of the Home Missions in trying to Christianize them. It was a very impartial account, and led to many suggestions of points wherein the two nations might learn from each other. Its whole tone tended to liberalize the feeling of Christians toward members of other religions, and so to harmonize the different races who seem destined to occupy this continent together. In conclusion, she read some letters, showing the great wrong done to women by the Chinese, and the danger to our society from this cause. This brought on some earnest discussion, in which it was shown how little right Christians and Americans have to cast the first stone against even the Chinese Cooley trades, and how essential to the farther progress of civilization it is that the good men and women of every race and religion should unite their efforts to purge away this, the foulest plague-spot of the world.

I have given this detailed account of these meetings, hoping to encourage others who do not get all the nourishment they need from the churches around them, to meet together thus simply and discuss the questions that really interest them. At these meetings there were no distinguished orators or elaborate essays; but all spoke in perfect freedom of whatever seemed important to themselves. I found no difficulty in securing perfect order and perfect courtesy in discussion.

E. D. C.

LETTER FROM MR. WATERS.

The following letter from the author of Through Rome On is published with pleasure, though we draw no inference against the permanent need of organization from the transient success of the free-love ring:—

"Learn to Labor and to Wait."

In my January letter to the editor of THE INDEX, I rated the exposition of seminal principles above both society-work and palpable hits in satire, as a means of advancing the Liberal cause. To-day I am glad to read and echo the words of the Towanda correspondent: "Why this urgent call for organization?" As that correspondent further says: "To endeavor to organize dissimilar and crude minds is dangerous." To do this on any large scale is worse than dangerous, as has surely been demonstrated for us now. In some fortunate spots and on a few happy occasions, two or three may gather together in the name of free-thought with good results; but the day has not yet dawned for the successful operation of larger leagues. The word is here employed in the now painfully familiar sense which includes, or implies, officials, voting majorities, platforms, resolutions: "In a spiritual sense, all true Liberals are leagued for the salvation of the world; but we are the last people in the world to organize on a permanent basis in this generation. We are not fit for it, and we do not need it. We are to occupy and possess the world, even to the uttermost parts, but not after the manner of Scythian hordes are our conquests to be extended. We are destined to win and to hold, because we work with Nature, and by the power of her resistless laws. Wounded, humiliated, disgraced, as we are by transient conditions to-day, we have still the joy of greeting the tokens of our triumph on every side. The press is with us,—ay! and the pulpit too. The God of the Middle Ages no longer rules the consciences of men. The sky is aglow all round with the precious coming light. While Moody and Sankey are converting their thousands, English-speaking Liberalism alone is converting its tens of thousands. The works of Spencer, of Clifford, of Lecky, the Broad Church, the Review, are more terrible in the cause of truth than an army with banners. What want we with Liberal Leagues when one woman from her quiet study can so reach the heads and hearts of multitudes as Miss Bevington through her Nineteenth Century essays on the maunderings of Mr. Mallock? Such things have a property of extension by which they surely reach and permeate the general mind. A book, a pen, will work immortal effects through the pressure of one stratum upon another in the intellectual and moral spheres. It is not too much to say that Mr. Darwin is educating millions besides the actual readers of his words. Such words diffuse the aroma of truth, as the presence of a little child exhales innocence and is an antidote to unholy lusts. Let us not clamor for organization before its time, nor be dismayed at the Dead Sea fruits that we have been too eager to pluck. Rather let us be glad of our veritable blessings: of the good President at Washington, so good that neither of our two great parties would dream of giving him a second term; of the good books and papers and noble voices that inspire the age; of the Evolving Spirit—with reverence be it spoken—that is in travail with the life of the world to come.

N. R. WATERS.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 29, 1880.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

MME. DE LESSEPS excels her husband in speaking English.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Gallatin, Mo., March 16; Hamilton, Mo., March 17, 18, 19; Burlingame, Kansas, March 21, 22, 23.

HUGH I. JEWETT, of Ohio, a wealthy and influential railroad magnate, is the last-named prospective Democratic candidate for the Presidency.

RICHARD GRANT WHITE is said to have two of the finest fiddles in the world. There is hence no impropriety, it may be presumed, in saying "fiddlesticks" to some of his literary dictums.

MR. E. B. WASHBURN delivered an address to Hebrew citizens at Chicago, Sunday, March 7, at the Sinai Reformed Congregation, upon the occasion of a memorial service to Adolphe Crémieux, paying to that deceased statesman of France a warm tribute of respect and admiration.

DR. HENRI NACHTEL, of Paris, recently read a paper on the European system of night medical service before the New York Academy of Medicine, which elicited so much interest that a committee of the Academy has been appointed to consider the practicability of introducing the system in New York.

REV. HENRY C. LEONARD, a well-known Universalist clergyman, and a very genial and companionable man, died Sunday, March 8, at Annisquam, Mass., where he has been settled for some years past. Mr. Leonard served as chaplain in Gen. O. O. Howard's department during the war, in which capacity he was very popular and rendered excellent service.

THE BODY OF DR. HAHN, of New York, was cremated last week at Washington, Pa. Dr. Hahn was an earnest and esteemed member of the Society for Ethical Culture of New York, and the disposition of his remains was in accordance with an expressed desire to the members of his family some time before his death. A funeral service at the late residence of the deceased, conducted by Prof. Adler, preceded the transmission to Pennsylvania.

MRS. TIMOTHY SARGENT, who has lived in China, and speaks the language of that country, is taking a very active interest in behalf of the Chinese who are arriving in New York from California. Mrs. Sargent contemplates delivering shortly in New York a series of lectures, intended to enlighten the public in regard to the Chinese problem. The proceeds of these lectures will be devoted to aiding Chinese to emigrate to New York from San Francisco, where she hopes to secure for them employment and greater protection of life and property.

MUSICIANS HAVE generally more faculty for representing the "concord and harmony of sweet sounds" than for preserving harmonious fellowship among themselves. As an illustration of this, the fine project for a college of music at Cincinnati, which appeared so promising, seems almost on the verge of going to pieces. Theodore Thomas, who was placed at the head of the enterprise, has lost his temper with the Board of Managers, and the Managers have lost their temper with Mr. Thomas and with one another; and a more discordant state of affairs in respect to the undertaking, if we may credit reports, could hardly exist, even if these musical gentlemen had put their heads together for this express purpose.

WHAT NEXT?—One of the latest examples of the effort to prop up dilapidated and perishing Orthodoxy is a course of lectures on Shakspeare by the Rev. Dr. Bolles, an Episcopal clergyman of Chicago, in New York, under the auspices of a number of prominent divines of the latter city. The Doctor has evidently read Shakspeare very diligently through his theological spectacles, and parades numerous quotations from the poet's writings to show his belief in Evangelical dogmas. But what does all this special pleading amount to, so far as the truth or falsity of these conceptions is concerned? It is quite probable that, for every passage which Dr. Bolles adduces to demonstrate Shakspeare's Orthodoxy, the same degree of industry might find one that points to a converse conclusion. But, be this as it may, nothing is proved beyond this,—that Shakspeare, in common with other great men of the past, even the greatest, shared more or less in the current religious ideas of his time.

FOREIGN. 14

M. GAMBETTA is ordered by his physician to quit smoking.

FOUR GERMANS, an Austrian, and several Frenchmen have been expelled from Lombardy as dangerous revolutionists.

LADY SEBRIGHT has gone off to the Nile with Miss Beamish, says the London World, the former to shoot the crocodiles and the latter to distribute tracts among the fellahs. A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind.

THOMAS HUGHES, the well-known lecturer and liberal politician, recently lectured at the Workingman's College, in London, of which he is principal, on James Russell Lowell, paying him a high tribute as a man of letters.

NOAH LEFT THE ARK at six o'clock in the evening of September 17, A.M. 3446. So, at least we read, is the opinion of a "Biblical scholar in Germany," who has been puzzling his poor brains in an attempt to determine the dates of events narrated in the Old Testament. We wonder how many bottles of claret the patriarch put under his belt before he got half-seas over.

THE CHURCHES throughout Spain are decorated with the canvases of the early painters, but so hung, says a correspondent, that there is no hour in the day that a good light can be found on them. At Seville, for example, I tried to find a light that would show what damage had been done the famous "St. Anthony," from which the figure of the saint had been cut in 1874. It was quite impossible to detect the work of restoration, which was owing to the dim light of the cathedral rather than the skill of the restorer.

THE SAVAGE CLUB of London—a somewhat similar institution to the Lotos here—gave an entertainment in behalf of the Irish distress fund. The Savage includes many gentlemen who, though not on the stage, possess all the talents for it. Indeed, it is a sine qua non of membership that the aspiring Savage shall be able to do something,—either sing, play, recite, or dance a hornpipe upon the points of his fingers. At their Saturday symposiums, there are always music and mimicry; and, in fact, there is genius enough in the Club to get up and give a very excellent entertainment.

THE ARRANGEMENTS for the issue of a new and carefully compiled edition of the works of St. Thomas Aquinas, which was announced by Cardinal De Luca some weeks ago, are now in active progress. Special commissions have been nominated by the Pope, both in Rome and in various other cities, charged with the preliminary preparations for the pontifical issue of the writings of the great master of philosophy. Cardinal Zigliara has been intrusted with the care of directing the researches in the imperial city itself; and when the prelates appointed elsewhere have sent in the result of their inquiries, which will include the examination of some of the original manuscripts which are still extant, Cardinal De Luca will furnish His Holiness with a detailed report before the authorized publication is commenced.

DANCING IN A SUNDAY-SCHOOL by permission of its rulers is certainly an innovation, although we know no reason why such a healthy and exhilarating amusement should not be afforded to Sunday scholars. There can be little doubt that the young people who are compelled by their parents to devote a large portion of Sunday to the study of texts of Scripture, catechisms, hymns, and the rest of the dull routine of the religious school, would welcome anything calculated to relieve its monotony and dullness. In the North Cheshire Herald, we notice that a discussion has arisen upon the subject of dancing in local Sunday-schools, which novelty has, of course, greatly exercised the spirits of the "unco' guid" in those parts. We notice that Mr. Willis Knowles, under the nom de plume "Cicero," has put himself forward as the advocate of a wise relaxation in favor of young people.—Secular Review.

THE CORRESPONDENCE which has been printed in the Times on the wide-spread use and abuse of narcotics is a painful commentary upon our civilization, and one which adds great force to what a writer in these pages has often alluded to; namely, the evils arising from our present unnatural system of living. The over-excited nerve-system of English ladies induces them to fly to morphia, chloral, chlorodyne, and a host of patent medicines, the chief agents in which are deadly poisons. It is useless to warn the victims to such a habit, as does the Times, that "from the beginning to the end the career is one of misery." So long as the causes of worry and sleeplessness are unchecked, so long will the sufferers have recourse to some means of alleviation. These causes are to be found in the high-pressure system of living, which is rapidly producing social anæmia, and is consequently enervating the race.

FAITH.—The following is an incident on the recent return of some British officers from Afghanistan: Scene: The wildest part of the Khyber, with barren rocks towering on all sides; an English officer riding along, escorted by a motley company of maliks and tribesmen all armed to the teeth; more armed Afreedees in the middle distance; a weary, lonely figure toiling on the dusty road in huge black boots, face burned a brick red and fringed by a scanty red beard. The figure is clad in a thick wadded garment, and has a bundle on its back. "Halt! Who are you?" "A Turkestan." "Where are your comrades?" "I am alone." "Where are you going?" "To Mecca." "How will you get there?" "God will help." "Peace be with you." "And with you." The figure moves off, and the armed circle breaks up. This poor devotee had tramped hundreds of miles through hills and valleys, swarming with cut-throats, secure in his simple faith which had led him to leave distant Turkestan in quest of the still more distant Mecca.

WE READ IN Truth that a clergyman of the Church of England, suffering from chronic bronchitis, has been compelled to apply for admission into the Axminster workhouse. The unfortunate gentleman has been a curate for thirty years, during which time no offer of preferment has approached him. What can we think of such a case as this in the richest ecclesiastical establishment in the world? Yet it is generally known that there are many clergymen of the Established Church who have to maintain themselves and their families upon stipends which cannot alone procure for them the bare necessities of life. The Bible declares that the "laborer is worthy of his hire,"—a statement which no one will deny in words, although, apparently, not even churches are governed upon those maxims of Christ which are really practicable. Is it not time that all underpaid teachers, whether of religion or of matters more necessary to the world, should have justice accorded them? We think so. At any rate, such men as Bishop Claughton will do well to consider Mr. Matson's case.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of evangelical clergy in Illington has become a very dead-and-alive sort of an affair. One Anglican organ compares the party which these ministers represent to a race of aborigines doomed to disappear before a stronger people. "Neither," it says, "will be a loss to human society, and yet one cannot help being sorry for them, as they kill themselves." As rum is fatal to the savage, so does idleness destroy the "spirituality" of the evangelical. This idleness is a necessary result of the loss of vitality which has befallen Calvinism, and which every attempt must fail to restore. "Calvinism," as the Church Times has it, "proper has run its race, and is dead everywhere, save in a few of the obscurer sects, and among the more illiterate of the clergy." It is amusing to find the Calvinian spirit recognized as the moving agent in the profession of the "new form of atheistic fatalism." Most funny of all, however, was Canon Ryle's assertion at the conference that England's prosperity is due to her Ryle's "Sabbath-observing" country. Poor Canon Ryle must have been imitating the dormouse this winter, or he would never have run his unhappy head against such a post as this. We wonder whether or not some more wakeful person—out of him that the Canon's reputation will point out to him that un-Sabbatarian France, where people are positively so wicked as to pay no special respect to the "Lord's Day," is just at present the most prosperous of all civilized lands?—Secular Review.

Communications.

HEREDITY AND ÆSTHETIC DEVELOPMENT.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

No. X.

Since Mr. Darwin's great work on the Origin of Species appeared, every discussion of biologic evolution recognizes heredity as an indispensable factor. No writer of reputation would now regard a treatise on biology as complete without referring to it, and devoting some space to the consideration of its laws. There are, however, people who admit hereditary transmission of physical peculiarities, such as certain diseases and peculiar structures of organs, etc., yet hesitate to admit the transmission of mental peculiarities. But we may set it down as a fact not likely to be questioned by competent authority that heredity is as applicable to mental peculiarities as to physical peculiarities. Stated without qualifications, the law of heredity is that each plant and animal produces plants and animals of like kind with itself. When stated in this simple form, no one questions the law. It is the transmission by parents to progeny of non-typical peculiarities, and the unusual development of structure and function of organs and of certain mental powers, that many hesitate to admit. Every one who has paid any attention to heredity knows that the non-typical peculiarities, or the most prominent mental or physical characters of a parent, are never transmitted to each of several offspring in equal degrees. It is this apparent fortuitousness of the law that has led many to attach little or no value to it. The tendency to variation—that is, of individuals occasionally arising with non-typical peculiarities, and typical peculiarities of unusual prominence—has also probably cast some doubt on the law. We are now beginning to satisfactorily account for the origin of prominent typical peculiarities. We know that it is impossible for two individuals of the same species, or even of the same parents, to be subject to the same conditions throughout their lives; and we know, too, that other things equal, in proportion as the forces acting upon them differ, to the same extent must their offspring differ in mental and physical traits. Let us take two individuals born of the same parents, very nearly alike in every particular, with all the organs of one of equal capacity with the homologous organs of the other for performing the functions usually performed by the homologous organs of their parents, and see what will result if these two individuals are subjected to unlike conditions. If certain organs of one individual have a greater amount of function to perform than the homologous organs of the other individual, the organs of the individual on which the increased function falls will be strengthened and increased in size. And these peculiarities of increased size and strength of organs of a parent are transmitted to offspring, not perhaps always in their full intensity, but still to a distinguishable degree. Probably every one now recognizes the fact that organs strengthen and grow when much used, and weaken and dwindle when little used. As familiar illustrations of increased size of organs resulting from their increase of function, we need only name the great development of the blacksmith's arms and the legs of the ballet dancer. The draught horse and race horse also present us with strong contrasts of structural differences, due to the different kinds of service required of each animal. And these structural differences we know have been gradually intensified by heredity during successive generations.

The eyes no doubt undergo slight structural change when they are constantly and daily throughout life required to be focused upon small objects and small spaces in close proximity, with but little or no sweep. Hence short-sighted persons show very clearly something of their pedigree; that their ancestors were either engravers, watchmakers, shoemakers, tailors, or perhaps in some instances devoted to literary pursuits. It is an extremely rare thing to hear of the children of country people and sailors being affected with myopia. And, when such instances do occur, they are easily explained on the perfectly safe hypothesis that one of the parents of such short-sighted person came from one of the classes whose occupations required them to spend their lives in looking at small objects near their eyes. It seems probable, too, that constitutional myopia might be induced by affectation; that is, by using glasses when they are not actually required. When an artificial object instead of the iris is allowed to regulate the rays of light entering the eye, the powers of the retinal elements in responding to their natural stimuli must in time be affected. If it should ever get to be the general opinion of the most cultured of a given society that spectacles improved the personal appearance, and everybody took to wearing them for this purpose, in the course of a few generations that society would be unable to dispense with spectacles. Such a custom would pair with the Chinese custom of cramping the feet of their ladies of rank or quality. Human skulls too, found in different parts of the earth, show by their peculiar forms of elongation or flattening that the lower races of men also often mistook deformity for beauty, or else were swayed more by fashion than by their conceptions of ideal beauty.

The social systems of the most evolved peoples of the modern world are extremely complicated as contrasted with ancient régimes. The sharp competition in the struggle for existence, not only between individuals of the same society, but between different societies, has differentiated a multiplicity of new activities, unknown to ancient civilizations. And new activities imply extra function to be performed by particular organs. Extra function of an organ, if rather prolonged, will cause its undue development, probably at the expense too of some other organ or organs. When an organ begins to demand an increased amount of nutritive elements to enable it to perform a given function, other organs must go without their usual quantities, if the quantity of nutritive material taken in by the individual has not varied.

The Greeks during the brightest periods of their history were more deeply interested in developing ideally perfect human forms than anything else, and were, in the judgment of the most cultured of subsequent generations, successful beyond all other nations. We are unlike them in this respect, and have degenerated in physique. For many centuries the belief widely prevailed that it was a meritorious duty to deform, torture, and mortify the body, instead of endeavoring to perfect it. This mistaken notion, which grew out of the monkish asceticism of the early Christian ages, has produced in every subsequent generation a frightful number of hideous deformities. But should we expect anything else when, in addition to bodily tortures and mortifications, the minds of all classes through centuries preferred to dwell fervently upon the poorly executed and cadaverous-looking pictures of a Lazarus for instance, instead of enthusiastically admiring the statues of Greek and Roman deities, and other statues of ideally perfect forms, preserved from the ruins of Greek classic art? No. The statues and paintings of the early Christian, mediæval times, and almost up to the beginning of the Renaissance, throughout Europe, show that scarcely any attention was given to the production of beautiful and perfect human forms. This world was regarded as a vale of tears; and, the mind habitually dwelling on impending or present calamities, few wore a calm and natural facial expression. And the expressions of sorrow and deep religious devotion, almost universal throughout the Christian world, were transmitted by parents to their children, as the pictures of children of those times clearly show. It will probably be generally admitted, particularly by those who are familiar with recent psychology, that certain religious sentiments and training produce peculiar religious casts or expressions. And that such casts or expressions are inherited, any one of ordinary powers of observation may satisfy himself by daily experience.

We may now turn to another phase of the subject. A particular action constantly repeated throughout the life of an individual tends to become automatic and organic. And the offspring of such individual, cæteris paribus, will perform the same kinds of actions with greater facility than the offspring of individuals that displayed no marked aptitudes for performing them. It has been remarked by sportsmen that it is not an unusual thing for a young pointer to point a covey the first time he is taken afield. Young shepherd dogs, too, are known to spontaneously adopt the like modes of behavior of their parents; that is, to run around, instead of directly toward the flock. Certain peculiarities, as tricks taught to animals, are also known to be transmitted by parents to offspring. Mr. Herbert Spencer quotes an instance in which a puppy that "had been taken from its mother at six weeks old," and who had never been taught "to beg (an accomplishment his mother had been taught), spontaneously took to begging for everything he wanted when about seven or eight months old." Among ourselves, too, mental peculiarities and predispositions of various kinds are inherited. Of these, we may name the predispositions to theft, murder, drunkenness, and bad and good temper. And other predispositions of egoistic and altruistic natures are no doubt familiar to the readers of Mr. Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Ribot, and Francis Galton. When the laws of heredity are better and more generally understood, they are sure to exercise a powerful influence upon the physical, moral, and æsthetic culture of rising generations. Thoughtful men and women will be more careful than now in forming alliances that can hold out no reasonable prospect of a bright and desirable future. Before casting their fortunes together, each couple will perhaps feel more interest to know something of each other's pedigree and past life than now. Indeed, the vivid representation of offspring with strongly marked physical or moral imperfections should certainly act as a powerful deterrent with any one of a fair measure of intelligence, in contracting an alliance with another whose past life and pedigree would seem, in the event of their union, to promise offspring thus characterized. A person who persists in certain actions, condemned by society and his own moral sense, as wrong, will, in spite of his efforts to assume an air of innocence and naturalness, in almost every instance, wear an expression of conscious guilt. What is called the "rouges" gallery in the offices of detectives and at police headquarters is a recognition of this fact. It would be strange indeed, if men who pass their lives in evil actions, and in constant dread of detection and punishment, should wear an expression as natural and free as men who pass their lives with a self-satisfied conscience, and in a manner approved of by those who stand for social order and government. Every emotion is accompanied by a facial expression that is distinguishable from facial expressions caused by other kinds of emotions. The facial expression produced by the emotion of fear is unlike the facial expression produced by a beautiful picture or a beautiful statue. And so it is throughout the language of the emotions. Any particular feeling that is constantly recalled into consciousness, and predominates over the rest of the feelings, produces a more marked and permanent facial expression than the less dominant feelings.

It must be remarked, however, that the evil thoughts and actions of those whose moral sense is least developed or sensitive will not be so clearly reflected in their expressions. Though we have passed through a long period of sackcloth and ashes, or physical sacrifice, endeavoring to develop the moral sense, still there are many in whom it is only nascent. Of course the facial expressions caused by persistence in evil actions are not the ideal types of expressions sought to be produced in marble or on canvas by the world's acknowledged master artists. It will be well to note here that an inherited physiognomy does not always indicate the true character of the individual, but perhaps most generally only the character of some one or more of his ancestors, near or remote. We know that noble characters are often found behind physiognomies that at first sight make a rather unfavorable impression upon our minds. And, on the other hand, we know that there are some of the worst characters with fine physiognomies. In explanation of this, it is well known that children sometimes inherit certain most prominent physical features from one parent and certain most prominent mental traits from the other parent. Hence it seems probable that, in most cases in which physiognomies do not plainly indicate the characters or mental tendencies of children, the parents came from classes who led strongly contrasted modes of life. But, even in those cases where character seems to contradict the facial expression, a closer acquaintance with the individual often discloses an almost invisible expression, which reflects his real character. Probably almost every one has heard the remark that "Mr. So and So has a very disagreeable or repulsive expression," and the reply, "You would not think so, if you were better acquainted with him." We catch some few prominent features of an individual, which reflect the character of some of his ancestors, and on superficial observation regard them as reflecting his character.

Many instances could be named of the transmission of special aptitudes, but it must suffice to mention only a few cases in sculpture, painting, and music. The wonderful development of the musical faculty in a few great composers of music during the last two or three centuries is unquestionably due to heredity. Mozart was almost a musician by instinct. In his third year, he found delight in striking chords upon the harpsichord, and in learning pleasing passages in the music lessons of his sister. And in his "fifth year he composed little melodies with simple but perfectly correct harmonies." His remarkable genius can only be explained by heredity; and it is thus explained. His father was gifted with fine musical talents. While still a youth, he astonished his hearers by his performances upon the organ at Munich. At a later period, he became court composer, leader of the orchestra, and vice-chapel-master to the Prince Bishop of Salzburg.

Beethoven's musical powers were not spontaneously displayed at such an early age as Mozart's; but his genius, scarcely less remarkable than Mozart's, is also clearly traceable to heredity. His grandfather and father were bass and tenor singers, respectively, in the electoral chapel at Bonn. His grandfather composed several operas, and probably had considerable local reputation as a city musician.

In the celebrated Bach family, musical talent was hereditary in a large number of individuals through eight or ten generations. Upwards of fifty persons of this family, whose lives cover a period of nearly two and a half centuries, were eminent musicians, and musicians of considerable reputation. In a few generations, they became very numerous, and, in order to live by their profession, were obliged to scatter abroad over Thuringia, Saxony, and Franconia.

Haydn's parents, though not celebrated for musical talents, are nevertheless known to have displayed a marked taste for music. His mother was a singer of some ability, and his father, besides storing his memory with songs, played the harp with considerable skill.

THE WRIGHT-SAVAGE CORRESPONDENCE IN FULL.

MR. EDITOR:—

THE INDEX of March 11 contains a letter from Mr. E. Wright, from which I have clipped the following:—"Mr. J. Vila Blake and Mr. Charles Ellis, entire strangers to me, have both, in your columns of last week, charged me with wishing to keep peace in the liberal ranks on any terms, and with preferring to bring Christian fraud, robbery, and perjury into court rather than that of my own party. All this because when Mr. T. L. Savage, whom I never saw that I know of, wrote asking me to contribute funds to prosecute Messrs. Seaver and Mendum for fraud and breach of trust, I replied that I did not believe any such crime had been committed, and moreover that I know of Christian frauds that I would sooner bring into court. Why? Because they are vastly bigger and more cruel. It does not follow from this that I would keep peace with fraudulent liberals, if I knew of any, or do anything to conceal their crimes, as Messrs. Blake and Ellis 'translate' or pretend."

Mr. Wright herein says that I "asked" him "to contribute funds to prosecute Seaver and Mendum for fraud and breach of trust." He conveys the idea that I wrote to him for that purpose. This is utterly untrue. I did not even ask for "funds" at all, but for "help."

There seems to be no way of exposing this wholly distorted statement except by producing the entire correspondence.

On the morning of Jan. 29, 1880, Mr. C. D. Sherman placed in the hands of Mr. Elizur Wright, as he was entering Paine Hall to call the advertised stockholders' meeting to order, the following letter:—

Number 1.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND STOCKHOLDERS OF PAINE HALL JOINT STOCK COMPANY:

Dear Sirs,—As one of the Trustees of the Lick Building Fund and Treasurer of the Lick Lecture Fund, it is my sincere wish that a Committee of Investigation be appointed at this meeting, Jan. 29, 1880, to inquire into all transactions relative to the use and appropriation of money donated in trust for the diffusion of Liberal Thought, for which purpose Paine Hall was built.

Feeling satisfied that matters of interest will come to light with regard to the Lick Lecture Fund, and also respecting the legality of other proceedings, I respectfully submit this to your body.

THEO. L. SAVAGE.

BOSTON, Jan. 29, 1880.

Number 2.

BOSTON, Feb. 4, 1880.

MR. THEO. L. SAVAGE:

Dear Sir,—Your letter of Jan. 29 was duly received, but I did not lay it before the Stockholders of the Paine Memorial Corporation, because the matters referred to in it, and voluminously published in THE INDEX, had already been investigated and reported on. The Stockholders feel perfectly satisfied with their title; and, if anybody else is not, and has good reason not to be, the courts as well as the newspapers are open.

Yours truly,

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

To this I replied as follows, as nearly as I could recall my note five days after I had written the original:—

Number 3.

BOSTON, Feb. 6, 1880.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—Yours of Feb. 4 received. You say that the matters contained in my request of Jan. 29 had been investigated and reported on. Will you do me the favor of sending me the record of the report of that committee of investigation?

Very truly yours,

THEO. L. SAVAGE.

Number 4.

BOSTON, Feb. 7, 1880.

THEO. L. SAVAGE, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 6th received. No record was kept of the investigation, that I am aware of. I presume you will find in the minutes of the Directors the names of the committee, and the result reported by them, only. The legal opinion taken will be published in the next Investigator. Every man has a right to his opinions, and to publish them to his heart's content. But I wonder at Mr. Ellis' publication in THE INDEX. He professes to be a "Liberal" and to have the honor of Liberalism at heart. He had previously published in the Herald and been answered, so that the facts on both sides were before the public. He finds THE INDEX badly disgruntled, and repeats his charges therein, that Mendum has stolen the Lick Fund and the new corporation has received stolen goods which it cannot legally hold. This would be criminal whether in Christians or infidels. If Ellis were a Christian, and Paine Hall a church, I should think him a fool to be growling in the newspapers when he ought to be prosecuting in the courts. There are some things to regret in the history of Paine Hall, but I think all of you, including Ellis, meant to be honest. Times were awful hard, none of you were much experienced in business, the Lick donation of mill property disappointed you. You all did the best you could; but unfortunately you got into a quarrel, which is always bad for sinners as well as saints. I don't think anything is to be gained by keeping up the quarrel; and I think, if I could see you, I could convince you of that. Our enemies, the ecclesiastics, don't care a pin which of us is right or which wrong. They would like to exterminate both sides, and would like to see the quarrel go on to the extent that neither party should hold the hall.

Yours truly,

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Number 5.

BOSTON, Feb. 11, 1880.

ELIZUR WRIGHT:

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 7th received. I have been too busy since to attend to the matter in question, but come to it now; and so I once more call your attention to the point upon which I want information, and I hope you will be able and willing to satisfy me.

In your letter of the 7th, you say: "No record was kept of the investigation, that I am aware of. I presume you will find in the minutes of the Directors the names of the committee and the result reported by them, only."

Will you be kind enough to tell me to what "investigation" you refer, when it took place, and where; and who and of what are the "Directors" to whom you refer?

The points in your letter in regard to Mr. Ellis, etc., I need not take up, but will say that I cannot but wonder that a man of your reputation for honesty and fair play should find fault with any perseverance to uphold truth and justice, and expose such fraud as Ellis, in my opinion, has shown and can show against Mendum and Seaver.

You intimate that we should carry the matter to court rather than into the newspapers. Will you, now, as a representative of Paine Hall Liberalism, prove your devotion to honesty by joining me and helping to carry this whole matter of the Lick Lecture Fund and the title to Paine Hall into court, where secrets and falsehood and prevarication cannot shield the wrong?

Respectfully yours,

THEO. L. SAVAGE.

Number 6.

BOSTON, Feb. 12, 1880.

MR. THEO. L. SAVAGE:

Dear Sir,—I think you will find in the last Investigator the information you require. The Directors of the Paine Memorial Corporation looked into all the matters brought forward by Mr. Ellis, so far as regards the title to the estate, and no further. They found that any dissatisfaction of Mr. Lick's heirs or Mr. Ellis could not affect the title to the property, which Mr. Mendum has transferred to the Corporation, otherwise they would not have accepted it. As to breach of trust or fraud, that concerns only those who believe such a crime has been committed. I do not. If Mr. Ellis or you or Mr. Lick's heirs do, I advise you to spend no more breath or printer's ink outside the courts. There are thousands of cases of high Christian fraud, perjury, and robbery, which I should sooner help bring into court. Please tell Mr. Ellis that, if he has really got a good case of fraud against Mendum, Seaver, yourself, or the Paine Memorial Corporation, he has only to go to some wealthy Christians to get all the means necessary for a successful prosecution. They will doubtless shell out the money, thank and despise him.

Yours truly,

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Now it will be seen that my real object in writing Number 5 was not to ask Mr. Wright to help prosecute Mendum and Seaver, but to obtain from him information in regard to certain specific points. It was only because Mr. Wright had flung out a gibe about taking the matter into the courts that I incidentally said, to test him: Well, now, prove your good faith by joining me in this work!

I leave it to your readers to judge for themselves as to the truthfulness of representing this as a mere request to "contribute funds."

Yours truly,

THEO. L. SAVAGE.

JESTINGS.

AN OHIO GIRL sued a man for breach of promise, and proved him such a mean scoundrel that the jury decided she ought to pay him something for not marrying her.

NOT SATISFIED.—A farmer was asked on the market on Saturday by a purchaser of produce how his crops looked. "Never better," was the reply; "but what is the use of it, as we will get little or nothing for them."—Mon. Witness.

CALINO, WHO SPENDS his summers in the country, has two electric bells at the head of his bed. "One of these bells is for your servant," remarks one of his friends; "but what use do you make of the other?" "Oh, that one leads to the dog-house to notify my dog to bark if I should hear burglars in the house."

A SON OF THE EMERALD ISLE, meeting a countryman whose face was not perfectly remembered, after saluting him most cordially, inquired his name. "Walsh," said the gentleman. "Walsh—Walsh," responded Paddy: "are you from Dublin? I know two old maids there of that name. Was either of them your mother?"

BEYOND EXPECTATION.—Pat: "Well, Dan, and have ye heard the news,—have ye heard that Rory the miller's dead?" Dan: "Rory the miller is it that's dead, now? Jabers, but ye don't say so; and he was a young man too." Pat: "Faith: an' that's threw for you, Dan, he was such a young man now that I expected to see him at my own funeral instead of me going to his."—Fun.

SENATOR SHARON once dined with a literary club in New York. At the table, he quoted from history; and a little man at his right joined issue on the question. Sharon waxed a trifle warm, and insinuated that his opponent might be a clever sort of man, but history was not his forte. After dinner, Sharon remarked to a friend: "Who is that little cuss there who disputed my dates?" "Bancroft, the historian."

THEY WALKED out of the theatre arm in arm. She was as dainty as a princess, and prettier than an opening flower. The long, soft, white feather hung gracefully to her shoulder, and her long, delicate, slender hand held a sumptuous fan. He looked pretty spooney himself, but he felt good. "How did you like the opera, pet?" he faintly inquired; and the delicious little angel looked up into his face, and, while the gas-beams lighted up the bit of court plaster on her chin, replied: "It's the boss!"—New York Tribune.

A GENTLEMAN in this city gave a little dance lately, and a most obliging German pianist efficiently rendered Strauss and Gungl. Among the guests were some smart young Annapolitans, in uniform, who especially attracted the musician's attention. On hearing who they were, he was immensely interested. "They are de real naves officers, you say? Mein Gott! I must look at dem. I never saw de American naves men before. I tell you, sir, I haf de greatest respect for de naves. Why, I belong myself to a boat club in Hoboken."—Hour.

We often wondered why girls married. An Austin young lady upon the subject says: "Well, no, I don't know as I'd marry for money alone, but if a man had plenty of money allied to a sweet disposition, and a moustache that curled at both ends, and nice blue eyes, and a respectable profession, and his father was rich, and his mother and sisters were aristocratic, and he wanted to marry me, and would promise to let me have my way in everything, and keep me liberally supplied with coin, and have a nice furnished house with a big piano in it, and would give me two diamond rings, and would pay my dry goods, milliner's, and dressmaker's bills without grumbling, and I really and truly loved him—I wouldn't consider his money any drawback to the match."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quick advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " " 6 " "
 " 52 " " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Basis of Free Religion," and brief addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS, SENT BY MAIL AT PUBLISHERS' PRICES! ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASE.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days. A new edition.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Philly Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins.".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Philly Cousins and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinetree, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation; being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.50
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma.".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Higher Reading for Schools.....	.35
Public Schools and Universities in many. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Life and Politics.....	1.25
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science. The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Prophets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.25
Childhood of Religions.....	1.50
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONROUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CARLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.80
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.75
Orchids.....	2.00
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols. Cloth.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Deirdre Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	3.00
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.). Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and October Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Lessons and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBAUGH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. George Eliot's translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Origin of Customs and Philosophy based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Cradle and Crucifix.....	1.75
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.00
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10 c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each 10 c.....	1.00
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Knave's Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge and Science.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Cred of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. B.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wende-holme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Mount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Sea and Shore.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Ski-mishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Rits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Paper Papers.....	1.50
Memoirs of an Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons. Addresses and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiology, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES, No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. Some Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Amos.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fund. By M. D. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Psychology and Mesmerism. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.50
XXII. The History of Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPERT (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I and II.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study of Words.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fire-side Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Roman Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty, both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	2.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion. On Miracles. Lecture delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Oatholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	.60
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I, and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
Poetic Studies.....	1.00
The Story of Avis.....	1.50
Trity's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statistics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	7.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	7.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauntering.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. . . . It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whip.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES.

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The True God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S DINING ROOMS!

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY or WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION; a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kueneen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarcha; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 255 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Social and Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 283 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CRED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.
For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American. Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 535.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the Editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

MR. HOLYOAKE was announced to speak at South Place Institute, London, Sunday, Feb. 8, on "Incidents of American Travel and American Oratory."

THE ADHESION of the Catholic bishops of the United States to the Pope's encyclical relative to the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas has been delivered to the Pope.

GOV. CORNELL of New York has just signed the bill admitting women to vote for school officers. This makes the twelfth State which has extended this suffrage to women.

AT THE GREAT iron-works of Pittsburg, Pa., they have succeeded in rolling iron so thin as to resemble tissue paper, and ten thousand sheets are required to make one inch in thickness.

ARTEMAS WARD, at the beginning of a lecture, once spoke thus for the multitudes whom he represented: "Gentlemen, I possess a gigantic intellect, but I haven't it with me."

A ROMAN CATHOLIC merchant in Australia has willed to a church £1,000, "to secure the release of my soul from purgatory." The executor refuses to pay the money until he receives proof that the soul has been released.

MR. MONCURE D. CONWAY has been ordered by his physicians to Italy, on account of apprehensions of brain disease from overwork. His ultimate recovery is, however, probable; and he writes very hopefully from Nice. P.S.—It is announced as we go to press that Mr. Conway has already returned to London.

THE Christian Register very felicitously remarks: "In the discussion of the school question, the Roman Catholic writers make one curious mistake: they constantly use the word 'godless' when they should say 'priestless.' A school might be under the control of a priest, and yet be godless; or it might be a thousand miles from a priest, and yet be a nursery of virtue and pure religion."

THE BROOKLYN Eagle of March 1 says: "Mr. Beecher took ground yesterday in favor of taxing church property as other property is taxed. It is a long while since the Eagle held that to exempt a church is, in effect, to force the community to support it. Every Jew and infidel is compelled to assist in paying for the church that does not pay its own share of the taxes. In principle, there is no difference between this system and the direct maintenance of an established church out of the public treasury. Churches are in the nature of luxuries, which those who enjoy ought to pay for."

THE PARIS Globe says that an ex-colonel of the National Guard, Saint-Leger by name, died recently at Paris, leaving a legacy of sixty-thousand francs to the town of Commines for the purpose of founding a school, with the condition that priests should be positively excluded from it, and that a marble tablet placed on the building should record the fact that the testator had been buried without any religious ceremony. The municipal council of Commines has refused to accept the legacy on the plea of immorality, and the colonel's lawful heirs applaud the action of the authorities. "Immorality" is the standing accusation against liberalism: what folly for liberals to justify it!

THE GENEVA (Switzerland) Continent says: "A curious legacy is that of Professor Longchamp, who died in Geneva in 1874, and left in his will the following clause: 'I owe the deepest gratitude to M. X. for having told me, the day before Easter, that which I had already thought myself; namely, that he did not believe that Jesus Christ was either risen or had ascended into heaven as is generally understood. This is only a means, he said, of persuading men to act right, and perhaps is not a good means. Consequently, and to recall this remembrance, I desire to institute and found an endowment for young men who are willing to devote themselves to preaching morality and true monotheism freed from all ideas of the supernatural or of special or intermittent revelation.'"

THE FOLLOWING LETTER was found on the Czar's bedroom table in the palace, not long before the recent explosion intended to assassinate the whole imperial family: "TO ALEXANDER II., EMPEROR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS: Sire,—For the fifth time fate has preserved you from the stroke of justice. They were five decrees dictated by the laws of humanity, a law which you no longer recognize. You know our power and determination. Beware of the sixth decree! Do you wish to be a great monarch? Do you wish all the Russian people to acclaim you and recognize you as their father? Do you wish that those who strike to-day shall become apostles instead of executioners? If you do, then cease to be a tyrant and become a man, and render to your subjects what belongs to man by the law of nature; namely, liberty. It is not your person that we attack, but your principles. So long as you remain as you are, our judgment will be always the same. Saved to-day, you will perish to-morrow. Neither death nor persecution will stay our arms. You possess brute force: we possess moral force. We have sworn to vanquish, and we must carry off the victory in the end. The first apostles of Christianity perished at the stake: their martyrdom was the cause of the ruin of Rome. Beware and reflect!

"THE GOVERNING COMMITTEE."

SAYS THE Boston Advertiser of March 20: "It was evident that the storm of last evening had no effect upon the undaunted lecture-goers, for Music Hall was well filled on the occasion of Mr. John L. Stoddard's last lecture of the course he has just been giving, and the one hundred and twenty-fifth of the season. It was made a sort of gala-night by the management, and, as a souvenir of the occasion, every lady attending was presented with an exquisite satin programme, beautifully printed. It was a graceful and pretty thing to do, and the ladies were generous in their expressions of pleasure. Mr. Stoddard's success has been altogether unprecedented; no lecturer before jumping at once into such wide and well-deserved popularity. Last evening, his lecture was particularly interesting, as it treated of Russia,—a country rarely penetrated by the ordinary traveller, and yet a country that just now is looked to with peculiar interest and anxiety. Before his lecture, Mr. Stoddard said, 'Some months ago, a statement was made public, which, especially at this the closing lecture of the Boston course, calls for a word of explanation. To one who has been an enthusiastic pilgrim to the hallowed shrines of antiquity, and a student of other lands and races, nothing is more difficult than to abandon travel. For him, however dear his native land may be, there is a fascination in historic sights, a joy in foreign cities, which nothing else in life can quite replace. No matter how strongly, therefore, he may have resolved to relinquish travel and the narration of travel, he finds himself, when face to face with the fulfilment of his vow, like Alexander, sighing for more worlds to conquer. Without further prelude, then, let me simply state that my decision to retire from the lecture field has been reconsidered. In a few weeks, I am again to sail for the Old World, once more, I trust, on my return, to here recall the illustrated souvenirs of my adventures. And surely I may add, emboldened thus by your approval, that the remembrance of this sea of friendly faces, which has so often and so unvaryingly greeted me within these walls, will accompany me throughout my journeyings as a continuous inspiration of kindness and good-will.' The announcement was received with enthusiastic applause, long continued."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. E. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenaft, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 STRAUSSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse,
 N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N.Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y. waque, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.J. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. BOPE WHITPLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 ESEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-N.Y.
 E. A. SAWELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Religion, Public Education, and the State.

BY REV. M. J. SAVAGE,
 OF BOSTON.

The relation of the State to religion and public education has been a theme for wide discussion during the present winter, in the pulpit, on the platform, in the newspaper, and in private conversation. My excuse for taking it up to-day is twofold. In the first place, I regard it as a matter of extreme importance, one about which well-founded and correct opinions ought to be held and disseminated. And, in the second place, there are certain aspects or phases of the discussion, certain principles that seem to me to underlie it, and to be of first-class importance, that either have been touched on very lightly, or not at all.

Some phase of this old problem of Church and State, first or last, comes up to agitate the thought of every civilization and of every country. It has happened, from peculiar and local circumstances, that the special form of it which is troubling us is the question as to the authority of the State, its right and duty in the matter of the relationship between the religions of the time and the common schools. How has this come about? It needs only a word to call your attention to that phase of our history with which you are all very familiar. When the Pilgrims came over here to New England, they came, as Mrs. Hemans has sung it in her beautiful verse, for—

"Freedom to worship God."

But there was one peculiarity about this "freedom" which they sought. It was no fault of theirs perhaps, but only a characteristic of the time, that, when they sought here in the wilderness "freedom to worship God," it had never entered into their heads that they were to establish complete religious liberty. They were seeking an opportunity somewhere in the world to institute a religion according to their ideas, not a region where all religions should be free. When they were in authority here in this New World, they gave no more freedom than had been allowed them in England. They had in England the freedom either to conform to the Established Church or to depart. They gave to the Quakers and the Baptists, and others who dissented from them, the same degree of freedom here,—conform or leave. Their freedom, then, to worship God was not universal freedom for all to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, but only an opportunity for them to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. There was very little disturbance practically growing out of this attitude, because the people at first were homogeneous. Substantially, they all believed alike: they were all at one on questions of Church and State and public education. But the country grew; and to-day what do we behold? Not a few scattered people believing all alike, sprinkled up and down a small part of the Atlantic seaboard, but a nation of forty millions of people from every clime, every country, every religion on the face of the earth. We are no more homogeneous. Here are children of parents representing all the great faiths of the world. No wonder, then, the question has come up, and that it agitates the public mind and demands a settlement, as to what religion, if any, shall be taught all these children in the public schools. Here are Catholics; here are Protestants; here are Orthodox; here are Universalists; Free Religionists, Buddhists, Confucianists, Jews, Hindoos. What religion shall the Church be permitted to teach in the public school? Shall it be permitted to teach any of them?

There is one phase of this question that seems to escape popular thought and discussion,—that this is not simply a debate between good people and bad people. It is not a simple discussion between religion on the one hand and irreligion on the other. If all the good people were on the one side and all the bad people on the other, it would be a much easier question to settle. But, instead of being a battle between religion and irreligion, it is a contest between rival religions. A Protestant looks at it from a religious stand-point; so does a Catholic. And, though we are accustomed to think that a man who does not agree with our religion is therefore irreligious, it may be well for you to remember that Mr. Francis E. Abbot of THE INDEX and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll are just as intensely religious as the Catholic Archbishop or Mr. Joseph Cook; and they look at this matter from a religious stand-point, and the feeling they have about it is a religious feeling. For what do we mean by religious feeling? We mean the feeling that springs out of the human heart when the thought of man is contemplating the relation in which he stands to God and the universe.

I say, then, this is not a question between good people and bad people, between religious people and irreligious people: it is a question between rival religions. And of course to each man the religion in which he intensely believes is a matter of supreme importance. Certainly the religion in which I believe is to me a matter of more importance than anything else in the world. Precisely the same thing is true of every man,—every man who is in earnest, who has a conviction. And State oppression or State interference in this supreme, most sacred of all matters is tyranny, odious and unbearable. The State may tax the people without giving them representation; it may deny a fair trial by jury in the courts; it may suspend the writ of habeas corpus; it may oppress a people in property or person, and still they may patiently submit. But never yet, I believe, in the history of the world, can you find a case where a people has been oppressed in matters of religion, and has sat patiently under it. And, since this is the one supreme thing, why should they sit patiently? What right has the State to teach my child a doctrine that I believe will issue in irremediable, eternal ruin to that child? Shall I sit still and bear a thing like that? I tell you, friends, were I a sincere, earnest, intense believer in the Catholic Church, I would fight this thing to the death. What does liberty mean? It is a mockery, unless there is liberty enough to go all round. Liberty does not mean my right to oppress you nor your right to oppress me. It means freedom from oppression on the part of us both, or it means nothing. How would you like it, you Protestants, to turn the matter around, and have the Catholics in the majority, and have them teach their belief in the public schools? Would you submit to it? I would not; and I think I could get a large following in the city of Boston if I attempted to lead an insurrection against a crushing tyranny like that. I tell you, friends, it makes a great difference "whose ox it is that is being gored." And one of the strangest and most lamentable things to me is to note this one fact: that generations of teaching and training in Orthodox Christianity have resulted in so slight a development of the sense of human justice. We have no right in the public schools to teach a man's child that which he believes will mean endless ruin to that child, whether he is Catholic or Protestant, or Buddhist or Jew, or Confucianist or Taoist, or what not.

But recently a well-known clergyman of the city, in the discussion of this subject, proposed that somehow or other it might be possible for us to compromise the matter; that is, to arrange some sort of—I hardly know what to call it—composite religious scheme that would be satisfactory to all. Is a compromise like this possible? Just think what it would mean. Suppose Father Scully to represent the Catholics, the Rev. Joseph Cook to represent the Orthodox, Mr. Hale to represent the Unitarians, Mr. Francis E. Abbot to represent the Free Religionists, Mr. Felix Adler of New York to represent the Reformed Jews, Rabbi Lasker to represent Orthodox Judaism, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll to represent his large following in the country; then let all these gentlemen get together and attempt to arrange some sort of a religion that they would all be willing to have taught in the schools to-day. Do you think they would be likely to make a success of it? It seems to me that they would be very much in the position in which Talleyrand and his wife found themselves. Talleyrand said he wanted to dine at four o'clock, and his wife wanted to dine at six. They compromised on five, and neither of them was suited. All this talk about a compromise, then, is mere absurdity. Out of all these different religions that I have alluded to, with all the foreign and heathen religions of the world sprinkled in for spice and salt, we should have a most curious hash, which I do not believe would be palatable to anybody; and, if you should boil them all down into a syrup, I do not believe the children of the country would "cry for it." It seems to me, then, a simple absurdity to talk of a compromise. How can you compromise between heat and cold, between light and darkness? The Catholic, if he is earnest and honest, believes that his is the only religion in the world, and that it is eternal damnation to believe anything else; and the Orthodox Protestant believes the same. How can they compromise? You can compromise on matters that are not of first-class importance. You can compromise when there is a certain degree of common ground, so that each one can concede a little, and both of them retain something that they care for; but when you come to a man in his senses, and ask him to compromise by giving up the eternal salvation of his soul, what do you think will be the result then? And it does not matter anything that you say this is a slight business; it is only a little reading of the Bible without note or comment, it is only making a prayer. I tell you, friends, from a Catholic stand-point, it means just the difference there is between Protestantism and Catholicism. It does mean that, not a whit more nor a whit less. For the Catholic says—and he says rightly—that the Bible in the hands of the common people means anti-Catholicism, unless it have a Catholic interpretation and enforcement.

What, then, shall we do about it? This I believe to be an irreconcilable conflict. It is irrepressible just as truly as that old one between freedom and slavery. What shall we do about it then? To come to the answer of that question, I wish to lead you by a pathway that is just a little roundabout; and yet I think you will see the importance of each step as we take it.

How did the old relationship, almost identity, between Church and State spring up? On what did it rest? If you will go back far enough into the history of human religious thought, you will find a time when the chief god that was worshipped by any tribe or family was the spirit of its own dead ancestor, the dead father of the tribe. It was the son's chief business to see to it that the worship of his dead father was perpetuated, continued unbroken and unsullied. His first business, then, as head of the family and head of the tribe, was to see to the perpetuity and integrity of the religion. And this idea dominated the entire ancient world. When you come up to Athens, for example, in the very height of its civilization, you find that once a year all the citizens were compelled to meet together in a public religious banquet. They must be purified, as a sacred preparation for this banquet. No citizen could be absent: if he was out of his place on that day, he lost his citizenship. All must be there. It was a religious rite for the propitiation of the gods of Athens, the fathers of the city. And they believed that the welfare, strength, and perpetuity of the State itself depended on this religious organization and these religious rituals and ceremonies. A similar faith was held in Hindustan. The priests there used to teach the people—and I have no doubt that they believed it sincerely—that, unless the rites, sacrifices, and ceremonies were properly performed, the pillars that supported the earth would give way and the universe go to wreck. No wonder the State was interested in religion, when it meant the perpetuity of the State itself.

But all these beliefs belong to a period of the world and a stage of human thought that has long gone by. They represent nothing vital in American life to-day. What do we believe to be the relation in which we as a nation stand to God, to righteousness, and the truth of the universe? Do we suppose we can put almighty justice and truth off with a public ceremonial? Do we suppose that he looks at the character of our officers, and will treat the whole nation according to what they are? Such was the old barbaric thought. They used to believe in old times that God would judge or bless the whole people according to the character and acts of an individual. You remember, in the Old Testament, how, when Achan committed sacrilege, his whole family were stoned and buried together, as an atonement to an offended God. And, when David committed an offence against God, was David punished? No. Certain thousands of the Israelites were put to death by the destroying angel, as a vengeance for what the king had done. This is the old barbaric conception of justice. But we do not hold that to-day. I, for one, certainly am glad that I am not held responsible for the character, the faith, the religion, or the morality of members of Congress, of the Cabinet, or the President. We none of us hold this idea to-day. We know that each one of us must stand or fall alone for what we are; and our present national and State religious ceremonies have degenerated, until they are the last, frayed, worn-out, farcical fragments of a garment that once clothed the people, and meant something in its time. We seem to think, for example, that it is a religious thing to let a supposed representative of God walk in a public State procession. We call him a chaplain. We learn that the State is interested in this matter in another direction, every little while, by finding a Catholic and a Protestant chaplain fighting over the question as to whether the religion of the one or the other shall be ministered to certain criminals in one of our prisons, who do not care for either of them. Or we have it brought to our notice again in some such way as this: I was reading in the Herald, only a day or two ago, about a chaplain of one of our State legislatures, who, the reporter said, made a very "spicy prayer, full of practical suggestions." Just think of it! A spicy prayer for the entertainment of the Almighty! Full of practical suggestions for the All-wise! My friends, this kind of State religion would be a contemptible, ludicrous farce, were it not blasphemy. Do we suppose we can put off a self-respecting deity with such flummery as that? Or take another aspect of our State religion: Congress meets; and the chaplain, in solemn way, or in this other fashion, a spicy way, makes a prayer. And then what does Congress do? Proceeds solemnly to disregard the very fundamental principles of honesty and righteousness, and to vote, by an overwhelming majority, to pass off upon a helpless nation ninety cents in place of one hundred. And it attempts to implicate the Almighty in this national fraud, by putting his own indorsement on the debased and dishonored dollar in the legend, "In God we trust." They must "trust" that he is a God that does not take much account of practical righteousness, when they think they can please him in that manner. What fragments we have, then, of a State religion to-day, I say, have degenerated until they are farcical and contemptible. They mean nothing, and they accomplish no good. We stand as individuals, not as a nation, before God. And to declare in constitutional amendment or otherwise that we are a religious nation means one of two things. If we are a religious, or a Christian people, it is a work of supererogation to declare it. God knows it already. If we are not, to so declare it is a lie. This, then, is the attitude in which we stand as a State to this matter of religion.

Now, friends, I want to consider just a moment this matter of the relation of religion to the State generally; and I will begin it by reading to you a brief extract from the New York Nation for May 5, 1879. The writer says:—

"We are ready to declare in the strongest terms that the worst misfortune which can befall a land or a people is to be placed under ecclesiastical rule. No tyranny is so cruel and relentless as that of priests."

This is a simple summing up of the facts of modern history. Ecclesiasticism in State matters always has meant, always will mean,—because it must,—tyranny. I care not how pleasant personally a priest may be, how agreeable in his exterior, how fine and tender in his personal sentiments. Strip the robe off and come to the heart, and the ecclesiastic always was, and in the nature of things always must be, a tyrant. Let me tell you why. It is not a question of personal characteristics or kindly feelings. It is a question of the system and the principles involved. Statesmanship, if it is to be intelligent, must be the result of a life-long study. Ecclesiasticism, too, if a man is to be a proficient in it, is a life-long study. It is in the nature of things, then, that a man cannot be a proficient ecclesiastic and a proficient statesman at the same time. Further than that, the State is something pertaining to this world,—the public, common interests of the people. Ecclesiasticism claims that it derives its authority from some other world; and the chief end of its existence is to secure the condition of its followers as a happy one in some other world, not here. Ecclesiasticism, then, deals with the next world, not with this one. And no matter how tender or merciful the individual ecclesiastic may be, he holds, he must hold, and ought to hold,—if his religion be true,—that the truest mercy to men is to compel them, even by fire and sword, to escape the eternal wrath of God in the future world. When, then, these priests sat around those ingenious mechanisms for torture,—too horrible almost to look upon to-day without a shudder,—when, I say, the priests sat around these in the Middle Ages, and listened unmoved to the groans, the pleadings, and entreaties of victims, they were not unmerciful; for what did they believe? That this was the certain, straight, only sure way of saving the immortal soul of this man and of millions of others. They were no more unmerciful then, according to their theories, than the surgeon is who inflicts pain to save a life. And, when there comes in conflict this question of eternal salvation and the welfare of the State, which is going to give way? I tell you, friends, in the nature of things, the ecclesiastic must be a tyrant. He must use the power of the State, just in so far as he can control it, to reach and govern these infinitely more important matters.

And why is the Church tolerant to-day? Simply because it has to be. The Pope and the leading authorities of the Catholic world declare unhesitatingly the same old principles which they have ever held,—the right to compel, if they only had the power. And Mr. Mallock, from outside of the Church, not an ecclesiastic in name, although he is in principle and at heart, argues at length, in one of the English Reviews, that the Church, if it only had the power, undoubtedly has the right to persecute. I say, then, ecclesiasticism is only another name for tyranny in State matters, and it cannot be anything else.

And this is reinforced by another consideration. Ecclesiasticism becomes an institution: ecclesiastics organize and build up a great church, and this church claims their first allegiance. It follows, then, as a matter of course, that the ecclesiastic cannot, in the highest sense of the word, be a patriot. There is a contradiction in terms. Why, of course we grant that the ecclesiastic here in America may be patriotic and devoted to America as against England or against France or against China. But, if the issue ever rises between American institutions,—the American State and the Church,—the State must give way, or he becomes a traitor to God. Do you think there is any question, then, as to which he would choose, Church or State?

Now then, after this brief review, let us come and face this question: What is the real attitude that the State should take toward this matter of religion in the public schools? It seems to me so simple that I am almost astonished to find myself under the necessity of arguing it to intelligent people. The whole thing lies in a nutshell; and that nutshell is a simple definition, and that definition simply sets forth what a State is. The rights and duties of a State as such, its proper jurisdiction, the source of its authority, the nature of its authority,—let us look at them a minute and see. We have accepted that grand formula, first put into shape by Theodore Parker and adopted in his famous Gettysburg speech by President Lincoln, that this is "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people." That seems to be the American Republican idea. The State, then, is nothing more nor less than the organization of the people themselves—for what? For the purpose of looking after the public common business of the people; specially that part of it which is so large and wide-spread that the individuals cannot look after it in their personal capacity. That is all the State is. The State does not get its authority from anybody in another world, but from the consent of the people governed. And the State's business is not to prepare people for another world: it is simply to look after the business affairs of the people here. The State is not a being representing some extra-worldly authority. It does not know anything more about the other world than I do, or you. It has no more authority over the other world than you or I have. The State then, I say, has no business to meddle with other worldly questions in its official capacity, any more than a cotton-mill or a shoe-factory has. It does not happen to be any of the State's business whether I save my soul in the next world or not. The State has authority over me as to how I conduct myself in this world, so far as its own welfare is concerned, and that is all. If I choose to follow a course that results in damnation, it is no business of the departments at Washington or of the officials on Beacon Hill. It is their business to see what I do as a citizen, and not otherwise.

We want, then, to clear and disentangle our thought, so that we may know what we are talking about. People speak of this American Republic of ours as if it were Protestant. It is not Protestant. It is not Catholic either. It is not Congregational nor Baptist nor Episcopalian nor Universalist nor Free Religionist. It has no sectarian or religious character as a state at all, and has no right to have. What do I care as to whether the Department of the Interior is a Baptist department or a Presbyterian department, or Catholic or Protestant? I want it an honest, intelligent, capable department: that is all that I have the right to ask, or that any citizen has. We do not want a Presbyterian or Unitarian Treasury. We want an honest, capable management of the Treasury. And so in regard to United States or State affairs, all the way through and all the way down. What do I care whether I have a Protestant pavement on Washington Street or whether it is a Roman Catholic pavement? I want a good pavement, well laid, one that will wear, one that will answer the practical purposes of daily use. And so in regard to the school-houses and the common and all the city affairs. All this talk of religion as connected with these things has, or ought to have, no meaning. We want honesty, capacity, business ability, and right dealing in all these directions. We want efficiency in all these departments of public service, but no talk of either Catholic or Protestant. We want human, manly, honest, efficient management of these affairs, and that is all we do want.

Now, then, let us turn this matter right around, and let it stand facing the public schools and see what it means there. The State in its capacity as a State has a right and a duty toward every child in America. It has just one right and it has just one duty; and that right and that duty go together. What is it? It has the right and the duty to see to it that every child growing up in America shall, so far as possible under the circumstances, be fitted for citizenship. It has this one right, this one duty; and, as relating to the matter of education, it has no other. This right is twofold, because fitness for citizenship is twofold. What are the two points involved? First, that a man shall be fit for citizenship in our Republic, it is necessary that he be educated, at least within certain limits; that he be intelligent enough to know what it means to cast a vote; and the safety of the Republic will never be assured until this point of right and duty is secure. The State has no right to permit a child to grow up in ignorance. Its highest duty toward itself as well as the child is to see to it that this future citizen shall be educated, so that, when he comes up to stand as a sovereign, an equal among fellow-sovereigns, he shall know what it means, and shall at least have no excuse, on the score of ignorance, for doing wrong.

And what is the other phase of this one right and duty? It is that this same child, so far as is possible, shall be morally trained; that is, he shall understand the fundamental principles of right and wrong, and shall be taught their practical application in all social relations, so far as they touch the matter of public life. We suffer in our country to-day, not simply or chiefly from premeditated wrong, but most of all from the fact that well-meaning voters are persuaded into supporting iniquitous schemes for lack of intelligent moral training. The government has no right, then,—if it regards, not only the welfare of the citizen, but its own welfare and perpetuity,—to permit any child to grow up to the age of twenty-one years, without being trained in the great principles that underlie the matter of right and wrong. But this, as you all very well know, does not necessarily imply the teaching of any religious dogma whatever. For matters of practical right and wrong do not rest upon this religious belief or that; but they grow out of the essential nature of humanity and the social relations in which we stand to each other.

The State, then, in the public schools has just this one right and this one duty,—to see to it that a child shall grow up intelligent and, so far as possible, moral; knowing what the right is and inclined to do it. This means reform in all our schools. It means the introduction of text-books of morals, and training in moral principles. I think we could well spare some of our drawing and higher mathematics and foreign languages, both living and dead, for the sake of having our children intelligently and persistently trained in regard to the fundamental principles of right and wrong. And I question seriously as to whether the government has any right to spend one single dollar of the people's money in any department of education that does not bear practically on the duties of the child as a future citizen.

Shall we not allow any teaching of Catholic or Protestant ideas in the public schools then? Never. Shall we allow it in any schools? Why, yes. If the Catholics want a school where they can teach their religious ideas, they are at perfect liberty to establish and support such a school, and it is nobody's business to interfere with them. If the Orthodox Protestants want a school where they can teach their peculiar religious ideas to their children, let them organize and support such a school. Nobody cares, and nobody will find any fault.

If a Buddhist wants such a school, or a Chinaman or any other religionist on the face of the earth, he is at perfect liberty in this country to found and support it. But they have no right, either Catholic, Protestant, Orthodox or Infidel, to take one single mill of the public money, of your money and mine, for the purpose of teaching religious ideas that are not public and common, and that only they individually or as sectarians hold. The minute we are ready to take this position, the whole matter is solved. We open our public schools, we offer intelligent and moral training as a fitness for citizenship, to all the children of the land. And we should supplement this by compelling the children of all, whatever their belief, to become intelligently and morally trained, either in the public schools or in their own. The minute we have taken this position, we have taken one that is impregnable. The Catholic can have no fault to find, for we no longer compel his child to listen to religious teachings that he does not believe. And, if he wants anything more than the public schools offer, we leave him perfectly free to supply it. On the other hand, the Orthodox have no right to find fault. We do not compel their children to study or to believe anything with which their hearts are not in accord. We simply say to every father in America, You must prepare your child by intellectual and moral training for the duty of citizenship, or else he shall not exercise that sacred right. Then let him have his child find that preparation in the public schools or anywhere else, just as he pleases: only the public school shall be kept free and sacred to the public fundamental principles on which the Republic rests.—Unity Pulpit, Feb. 13, 1880.

"SAMMY, MY BOY, what are you crying for?" "Bill throwed the Bible at me, and hit me on the head." "Well, you are the only one in my family on whom the Bible ever had any impression."

[For THE INDEX.]

UNITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

A REVIEW OF DR. MARTINEAU'S STATEMENT.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

II.

That the truth of Christ will justify the "non-Christian Theist" rather than any one whatever who uses the term Christian for exclusion is to be said no less when we turn to that aspect of the case on which Dr. Martineau lays special stress where he defends his "Christian Theism," as against Miss Cobbe's "non-Christian," by considerations of expediency perilously near to the motives of the dogmatist and the priest, though certainly not meant in that spirit. Dr. Martineau says:—

"So organic is the constitution of humanity, that, even if you teach the same truths to-day that have been heard and lived of old, you will teach in vain, if you suppress their age and start them afresh as your own new lights. . . . To break with the past, and try a new creation, whether by philosophical building up from the foundation, or by eclectic appropriations from the remains of other faiths, is to substitute a school for a church, and expect, from agreement in individual opinion, the effects of a consensus of human generations; and the very belief which may be thus gained, however right, will have to grow old and win a history, ere it can become a blending spiritual power."

There is an important truth here, but not at all as Dr. Martineau puts it. It is true that the name carries great weight, and yet not so much after all, where all of truth conveyed under the old name is presented under the new, with fresh inspiration and a faith as genuine as it is original. The common trouble with new faith is that it loses a good deal of the truth which the old conveyed, and further loses power by using the mood of criticism rather than that of inspiration. But, however true and important all this may be, disregard of it does not make that false which otherwise would be true. It only makes feeble what would otherwise be strong; and not always so feeble either, when the minds of men are in the mood of changing from old to new. Dr. Martineau undoubtedly loses more by leaning somewhat anxiously, not to say dogmatically, to the old, than Miss Cobbe loses by leaving the old. If Dr. Martineau had, ten years ago, thrown himself with the force of original inspiration into the advocacy of pure Theism without the name of Christ, he would have had a vastly greater hold upon the age than he now has, and done vastly more good than he can now do, in spite of the undoubted mistake and the great disadvantage of letting go the incomparable name of the Teacher to whom men justly said, "We know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, and thou carest for no one; for thou regardest not the person of men." So, too, if Miss Cobbe had been an accomplished public minister of religion, devoting her life to the propagation of pure Theism without the name of Christ, she would have been a power in her generation far more than she could have been with any such insisting on the name of Christ as we see in Dr. Martineau.

The fact simply is that the name of Christ weakens religion to-day, if it is insisted on as a religious name along with that of God. If it be not a name of perfectly pure Theism,—if it demand any the least worship,—it is a name which will hinder more than it helps. Dr. Martineau's life-long mistake, of keeping this name for some degree of worship, has been more unfortunate than Miss Cobbe's mistake of letting the name go altogether. The extent to which, in his earlier hymn-book, Dr. Martineau retained Christ's name as a name of worship, along with the name of God, has damaged Unitarianism as a power in the progress of the age a hundred-fold more than a pure Theistic dropping of the name would have done. In fact, the rejection of Christ's name, into which pure Theism has at first fallen in some quarters, is more nominal than real. The substance of the name is not rejected; as a great human and providential name, it is not rejected. It is most justly rejected as a name above human and providential; and the sole particular in which rejection goes too far is in the not supremely important one of the doubt whether some error did not creep into the teaching of Christ, and go out through his apostles with some real sanction from him. Truth by any other name is just as true, and nearly as powerful, if it can only be understood, instead of flagrantly misunderstood. The extreme trouble is that a person here and there dropping the name of Christ will be flagrantly misunderstood for a time, and must wait, not for the "age" of which Dr. Martineau speaks, but for comprehension. And this again will be pushed far away by the unfortunate interference of the extremely crude and harsh dogma in vogue under the name of "Theism," which decrees the rejection of Christ for the sins of apostles, evangelists, fathers, popes, theologians, and whoever has wrought Satanic mischief to pure Theism, in the name of him who said to the chiefest of the apostles, and to the apostles' creed in him, "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art my stumbling-block; for thy thoughts are not on the things of God, but on those of men,"—not on pure Theism, that is; pure worship of God, service of him alone, and religious looking to him and to no other; but on a human substitution of some other in a divine office, a man of miracle in place of the one Lord of all divine power.

Any pure Theist who will reasonably separate the mass of apostolic error from the teaching of Christ, and will reasonably credit Christ with that substance of pure teaching which learned and thoughtful discrimination cannot deny him, need not be at any great disadvantage with the progressive tendencies of the present age, on account of not taking the name of Christ, or even of not accepting all that he supposes Christ to have taught. Such an one indeed sacrifices his best hold upon the more conservative portion of Christendom, if he cannot honestly and truthfully claim the name of Christ. But this surely is no reason for making a pretence which ingenuous truth forbids; and Dr. Martineau speaks most unadvisedly when he argues that pure Theism without the name of Christ is not Christian, because it does not succeed, while the same thing with the name of Christ is Christian, because it does succeed. Success was not the test of him who died a lonely martyr on Calvary; and since Christ died, forsaken and denied, there has never been an hour when the pure truth of Christ could command success, at the hands of apostles, fathers, doctors, churches, and sects, or any successors whatever to the apostles. It should be no scorn, and will be no shame, to holy truth, if she fail still, as the Master of pure teaching failed ages ago. Better a noble mistake against a name that, whatever its truth, has been borrowed by error, and buried under false history, ever since apostles and their scribes got control of it, than a conformity which lacks honesty and veracity, or which rests in ignorance, error, and the flagrant superstition of giving to a human teacher a measure of the reverence which belongs to God alone.

Dr. Martineau's faith is increasingly ineffectual, because it commits the inexcusable error of retaining for Christ a reverence which is historical only, and cannot have any religious reality and power, nor keep even the credit of veracity and sincerity, because it does not leave to Christ an iota of real divine nature and rank. The tongue is nerveless and uncertain to the last degree which says, "Our Lord Jesus Christ," merely because the expression lends age and dignity to a new faith, but which does not mean by it what Peter, John, James, and Paul, with their primitive misconceptions, meant by it, when they looked for Christ to come speedily in mid heaven with prodigious revelation of miracle; and still more does not mean what all the ages since the apostles have meant by it, a divinity which logically requires the Fourth Gospel and the Athanasian creed, and all the apparatus damnable of a Satanic Christianity; but which means simply and only a convenient pious fiction, a mere bit of old rhetoric, to make a school of new thought look as if it were a church, and its private intuitions look as if they were the witness of history. Power is not purchased in that way in an age dominated by a pitiless love of truth and reality. A master of new truth may readily enough sell out his cause to the Scribes and Pharisees of old tradition, who will cheerfully let him hide his light under their bushel; conformity going very far to extinguish the power of original and independent witness to new truth, or to old truth newly comprehended. This is the main effect of wearing an old mask over a new face. New learning and new thought, capable of discriminating sagaciously, clearly, and vigorously, asking nothing of Christ but his witness to truth, as reason and conscience now attest it, and clearing away from his name the accretions of error which began with the apostles, need ask no favor, nor fear any frown, nor wait for any accumulation of historic mould, to command supreme influence with Christian mankind. The long curse of ages has been the preference by priests, ministers, clergy of every sort, of tradition to truth; and there is far more danger now that religion will perish out of the world as an old notion, a thing of historical antiquity, without real value to men's lives to-day, than there is that it will die of new inspiration, and fresh return to private experience, and more personal effort to comprehend the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

HARVARD DIVINITY SCHOOL.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT ELIOT'S ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1878-79.

In the last Annual Report, the inadequacy of the endowment of the Divinity School was set forth with some detail, and it was stated that an addition of at least $127,000 to its endowment was urgently needed. Early in the spring of 1879, a subscription was begun, under the direction of an influential committee appointed at a public meeting held in the First Church of Boston. The fruits of their labors to this date (Jan. 9) are $85,593.25 paid in, $6,200 subscribed in the form of annual payments and not yet due, and about $9,000 promised, but not yet actually subscribed or paid. Of this very large contribution to the resources of the school, $40,000 came from the family of the late Thomas Tileston of New York, and $10,000 from Mr. Henry P. Kidder of Boston, who has repeatedly testified his interest in the University by large gifts to its various departments. The liberal terms upon which the Tileston endowment was given will be found in the letter of the Rev. H. W. Bellows, which accompanied the gift [App. I.] The list of subscriptions paid before Sept. 1, 1879, is printed in the Treasurer's Statement [p. 7].

Unsectarian Theological Instruction.

The manifestation of interest in theological instruction by the authorities of the University, and their acceptance of money for the better endowment of the existing professorships which are at present grouped in the Divinity School, has awakened some adverse criticism, based partly on a general objection to training ministers of any sort at the University, and partly on the assumption that it is impossible to teach Christian dogmatic theology to any purpose in a university which declares itself unsectarian, without impairing public confidence in the genuineness of the impartiality which the institution professes. The public utterance of this well-meant criticism, coming as it undoubtedly does from friends of the College, shows that it is desirable to state anew the historical and actual position of the University with regard to theological learning.

Theology a Liberal Study.

Before proceeding to this restatement, however, it is important to observe that, as regards the appropriateness to university instruction of the subjects ordinarily, though inaccurately, designated as theological, the grounds for any difference of opinion whatever among men of learning are very narrow. These subjects are by common consent as liberal and as unsectarian as chemistry, philosophy, or history, with the exception of Christian dogmatic theology, which is quantitatively a very small proportion of their enormous mass. Thus, Hebrew, Arabic, and other Oriental languages, ecclesiastical history, the literature and criticism of the New Testament, ethics, natural theology, philosophy in its relation to religion, ethnic religions, and the history of religions, are all, when properly defined and treated, matters of pure science, which, in every university worthy of the name, should be studied not only by persons who expect to make a professional use of them, but also by young men, graduates or undergraduates, who pursue them as elements of liberal culture. The expediency of grouping the professorships which deal with these subjects into a separate organization called a Divinity School may perhaps be reasonably questioned, either now or hereafter, as it has been repeatedly in the past; but it cannot be doubted that the subjects themselves possess an exalted and enduring intellectual interest, which make them necessary parts of a comprehensive scheme of university instruction.

Separation of the Divinity School.

Using the word "theology" in that broad sense which includes all the scientific subjects above enumerated, it is an indubitable fact that Harvard University has been thoroughly committed these many years to the maintenance of instruction in theology. The institution was originally established largely for the sake of training ministers: the first professorship founded in it was a professorship of divinity (the Hollis professorship, 1722); the Hancock professorship of Hebrew and other Oriental languages (one of those for which additional endowment has lately been sought) dates from 1765; the Dexter lectureship on Biblical literature (another of the endowments to be increased) was created in 1811; and the Parkman professorship was originally endowed—very inadequately—in 1815. All these still existing endowments antedate the organization of the separate Divinity School in 1815-19, and would remain in possession of the Corporation, though the kindred trusts later accepted on behalf of the Divinity School should be transferred to other hands. The successful movement made in 1815, "for increasing the means of theological education at the University," proceeded directly from the Corporation itself; and at various subsequent times the Corporation accepted bequests and gifts, large and small, for the support of theological education under their administration. In 1852, the College proper having been for thirty years in a somewhat unprogressive state, which gave solicitude to its friends, and to its enemies grounds of public attack, the Corporation and Overseers decided to apply to the Supreme Court for leave to transfer to other hands their trusts for the support of theological education. A separation of the Divinity School from the College was sought under a bill in chancery. The case was thoroughly argued by Messrs. Charles G. Loring and W. H. Gardiner for the College, in March, 1855, no counsel appearing in opposition to the bill. In the following November, the court, by Mr. Justice Dewey, gave an elaborate decision, reviewing all the facts of the case, and denying the prayer of the Corporation.* Since this adjudication, the President and Fellows have repeatedly accepted gifts for the benefit of the Divinity School or for the promotion of theological education under their direction.

It is obvious that, under these circumstances, the Corporation do not, and cannot, regard the question of maintaining theological instruction in the University as an open one. They have too lately been authoritatively instructed as to their duties in that regard. It is their plain duty to administer their trusts on behalf of theological learning with the same fidelity and zeal with which they strive to discharge their functions in relation to other branches of learning.

Unsectarianism of the Divinity School.

If the legal duties of the Corporation are plain, the spirit in which they have discharged, and propose to continue to discharge them, is fortunately not less so. The constitution of the Divinity School expressly prohibits the application of any sectarian test whatever, either to teachers or students. A student of theology may enter the school, receive his scholarships if he need and deserve pecuniary aid, and win its honors, without an inquiry being made as to what he believes or does not believe, or as to what religious organization he belongs to or proposes to join. Greater freedom cannot be secured. It is, in truth, this absolute freedom which makes the school, at present, peculiar among theological schools, and practically unserviceable to the vast majority of young men who prepare for the ministry. The fact of this peculiarity, and this consequent unserviceableness, is to-day indisputable; but it is the result of causes quite beyond the control of the University. It is not a fact inevitable and permanent in its nature, for freedom in theological study may commend itself to more general acceptance; and, moreover, it in no way affects the legal duties of the Corporation.

The spirit or atmosphere of a school conducted on these principles can never be satisfactory to sects which believe that the acceptance of certain dogmas is of vital importance; but to these very sects a university which includes a theological department conducted on these principles may well be more acceptable than one which banishes theology completely from its precincts.

Professional Studies are Liberal.

Some instruction is given in the Divinity School, as in all theological seminaries, which is of a professional rather than of a scientific character, resembling in this respect much of the instruction given in schools of law, medicine, engineering, and architecture. Of this character is the instruction in sermon-writing, extemporaneous speaking, and elocution. It, of course, presents no difficulty whatever from the point of view of sectarianism; but it has been objected to in some quarters on the broad ground that it is no part of the business of the University to give a technical training to ministers. The doctrine that professional studies are not liberal, and that, consequently, a university should have nothing to do with them, has often found advocates, but at present is not accepted in practice by any civilized nation. That a special application of this doctrine to the clerical profession alone can be acceptable to the authorities and constituency of Harvard University will not be anticipated by any person who is familiar with the history of the institution, who remembers the inestimable services which the New England ministry has rendered to education during seven generations, or who appreciates the immense influence of the clerical profession at the present day.

Change of Circumstances since 1852.

There are some grounds for thinking that the University has already passed through the period of greatest difficulty in the administration of its trusts for the promotion of theological study. Several reasons which had weight in inducing the Corporation and Overseers to apply to the Supreme Court in 1852 have ceased to exist. The official connection between the State and the College, which seemed to them a serious complication, no longer exists. The constitution of the Board of Overseers, which at that time was productive of many embarrassments, has been changed, and now presents no difficulty whatever. Most important of all, the allegation then made that the College was suffering seriously from the mere presence of the Divinity School could not now be plausibly supported. In 1852 the College had not enjoyed any marked prosperity for many years; but ever since the close of the civil war the College proper, and indeed the whole University, has thriven to an unprecedented degree, doubtless from the concurrent operation of many complex causes; and particularly the College proper has received incessant marks of public confidence and approval, both in pecuniary gifts and legacies, and in the resort to it of large numbers of young men whose parents are of every religious persuasion, from the Israelite to the Roman Catholic. Furthermore, during the past twenty-five years the bitterness of sectarian strife has somewhat abated, and the dividing-lines between sects have been much obscured. It is sometimes alleged that this cessation of controversy is one of the signs of a general public indifference to theological subjects. The existence of wide-spread indifference to theological learning is not to be lightly taken for granted. Through constant changes in the direction of interest and in the field of actual debate, theological themes remain the themes of supreme interest to thinking men; but, did real indifference ever prevail, then especially it would be for the University, as a school of general learning, to foster theological study pursued with a scientific method and with perfect freedom from sectarian dogmatism.

It was another interesting event in the Divinity School during 1878-79 that the Faculty carried into practice the policy of refusing pecuniary aid to unpromising students.

As has been repeatedly the case in former years, half the instructors in the school are now laymen.

THIS INTERESTING account of women's voting occurs in the Springfield Republican: "The town was Westfield, Mass. The first to vote was Miss Belle Holton, a high-school teacher; then followed two or three normal-school teachers; but at two o'clock in marched, in a body, forty-eight women led by a police-officer, who cleared the way for them. We are sorry to say that only two or three of all the men present were well-bred enough to remove their hats or to stop smoking when the women appeared, which proves that there are blackguards in Westfield as elsewhere. The more a man thinks that woman should not vote, the more civil he should be to her when she appears at the polls. If not an ass, he would see that in no better way could he enforce his position than by a peculiar and studied politeness; and, if he neglects this, he proves that the women whom he insults are better fitted to vote than he is."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]
GREATNESS.

Not always to the swift the race, the battle to the strong,
There are heroes not in story,—heroes unknown to song;
Yet even more the God-like ones who suffer for their kind
Some precious token of their worth on earth still leave behind.

Their frames may moulder in the dust, from men their names be hid,
The places where they wrought unknown,—but not the things they did.

Prime benefactor of mankind, from Adam unto now,
Eternal honor be to him who gave to men the plow!
Unknown the country of his birth, the race from which he sprung,
Man's stay for all the ages he from churlish nature wrung!
Like famous Alexander the Great,—though not in war,—
He won his triumphs in the field, and died earth's Conqueror!

Not always to the swift the race, the battle to the strong:
Stands often human greatness pedestaled on human wrong.
Many have borne the name of "great" who've borne it by the sword,—
Men crimson-steeped in human gore as demi-gods adored:
As though to murder, ravish, and fair lands to devastate
Was the course the world expected of all who would be Great.

Rome, haughty mistress of the world, supreme by land and sea,
Rarest of all her subjects had a man of Galilee,
One who lived his life for others, and lived despised and poor;
Radiant as crowned victor, all earthly ills he bore!
With brow beaming awe and triumph, mocked, scourged, and spurned, he died,
Conscious still high heaven was with him,—heaven-sent whate'er betide.

Not always to the swift the race, the battle to the strong:
Yet one great heart, unselfish, moves the whole wide world along.

See grand old Brown, knight-errant, the bondman's champion,
Smite down foul wrong, oppression, hoary slavery, like the Don:

Victorious; wounded, taken, a vile and shameful death:
Millions of slaves respire free air with his expiring breath!

Kingliest soul e'er robed in earth, he nor King nor Kaiser:
Rarest achievement of all time was thine, O Marseilles' Miser.

Far easier like Napoleon to scale the Alps for fame,
Than plod for others' weal, unknown, midst obloquy and shame:

To give a city water that the poor might be supplied,
Life-long a hero-martyr toiled,—Guyon,—conquered, and died.

Not always to the swift the race, the battle to the strong:
Fragrant alone's the noble life, fame empty as a gong!
Pales all the Cæsars' glory 'fore chivalrous Sydney's worth:
His, rare sovereignty of mind; theirs, the sovereignty of earth!

All the glory of the Cæsars from earth has past away:
The cup a hero's lips refused hath famed him for aye!

Who taught the howling wilderness to blossom like the rose;
Upreared the tree of knowledge, which still towering heavenward grows,—

Yea, made the barren places as the garden of the Lord;
Fair Science caused to flourish,—stake and dungeon their reward,—

These like stars forever shine in the firmament of fame,
Great: by their fruits we know them,—others but usurp the name!

JAMES NYE.

PROVIDENCE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 20.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Mrs. Albert Angell, $3.10; S. B. Zeigler, $3.80; E. R. Wicks, $1; John Orth, $3.20; H. M. Smyth, $2.20; T. P. Gere, $5; Henry Dornitzer, $3.20; Jefferson Cary, $3.20; R. M. Sherman, 10 cents; H. McVean, $2; R. C. Hauswedell, $2.60; Geo. A. Dennison, $11.05; J. D. Frost, $13.20; C. T. Settle, $1.50; Wm. J. Worden, $3; Rev. S. W. Sample, $8; J. S. Shaller, $3.20; W. A. Rust, $3.20; Rev. G. A. Thayer, $3.20; Rev. S. B. Stewart, $3.20; R. Burnham, $4.20; Dr. Ira P. Bingham, $9.60; D. A. Cline, $3.20; Warren Griswold, $4.40; J. C. Fargo, $1; H. Werner, $3.60; Guido Marx, $3.20; John H. Sand, $3.20; Paul Kefer, Jr., $3.20; C. K. Matthews, $3.20; Julius K. Rose, $1; E. F. Green, $4.50; A. N. McCombs, $1; E. A. J. Lindsey, $2; Mrs. D. Sharpstein, 25 cents; Ed. Howland, $5; Dr. M. B. Jarvis, $6.50; John Clark, 75 cents; Miss N. W. Covell, $1; Daniel Johnson, $3.20; Rev. H. Powers, $3.20; P. B. Lake-man, 27 cents; O. Cone, $3; George Martin, $5.25; Mrs. C. E. Serrill, $3.20; Rev. S. Longfellow, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

*"In view of all the facts before us, the Court are of opinion that they cannot, in the proper exercise of any chancery powers they possess, direct the withdrawal of the funds above described, and others of like character, from the supervision and trust of that permanent public corporate body to which they were intrusted by their donors for the purpose of maintaining a Theological School as a branch of the University, and commit them to an independent board of trustees, to be appropriated to maintaining a Separate Theological School. We feel constrained, therefore, to deny the prayer of the complainants for a change in the trust in relation to this public charity."

"A contrary decision would furnish a precedent dangerous to the perpetuity and sacredness of all our great public charities, leaving the question of the management and supervision of our public charities to be the subject of change with every fluctuation of public opinion as to what may be the more expedient and useful mode of administering them."

Bill dismissed.
(From the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court, delivered by Mr. Justice Dewey, at November Term, 1855, in the case of Harvard College v. Society for Promoting Theological Education.)

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 25, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right.. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least a passing feature, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D.
CHENY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H.
CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD,
C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SEUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARAH
A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY of REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY of REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

II. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.

2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.

3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged March 4.....		$1,740.00
ARMAND PIONNIE, Newark, N.J.	1.00
F. B. PARSE, " "	1.00
I. W. FRANKEL, " "	1.00
N. DERBY, " "	1.00
Dr. S. S. LYON, " "	1.00
A. B. GENUNG, " "	1.00
Mrs. A. B. GENUNG, " "	1.00
F. KEIB, " "	1.00
F. S. GENUNG, Paterson, N.J.	1.00
EDWARD B. HYDE, New York	5.00
JAMES GOLDSMITH, " "	5.00
C. N. WAYLAND, " "	5.00
LOUIS STINER, " "	2.00
Dr. R. G. WIENER, " "	1.00
FREDERICK BUSE, " "	10.00
Mrs. L. C. BULLARD, " "	5.00
MISS HANNAH HAFT, " "	5.00
GE. BUNZLI, " "	5.00
THOMAS JONES, " "	5.00
MORRIS ARNOLD, " "	2.00
L. M. KAHN, " "	1.00

JOSEPH H. LOUIS, New York	5.00
JULIUS ADLER,	2.00
ISAAC SCHUER, " ".....	1.00
DR. J. JACOBY, " ".....	10.00
DR. M. MARVIN, Brooklyn, N. Y.	5.00
DR. MARY PUTNAM JACOBY, New York	10.00
Dr. ELIZABETH CUSHIER, " ".....	5.00
M. DAVIDSON, " ".....	3.00
SIMON ANO, " ".....	1.00
C. E. CADY, " ".....	1.00
Dr. T. A. McBRIDE, " ".....	1.00
ARNOLD LEO, " ".....	5.00
B. NEUMORGEN, " ".....	5.00
D. KISH, " ".....	1.00
Dr. EMILY BLACKWELL, " ".....	2.00
GEORGE L. WELLMAN, " ".....	2.00
CHARLES WATROUS, " ".....	1.00
D. M. TREDWELL, " ".....	1.00
ALBERT HERSCH, " ".....	1.00
Dr. KUNDLICH, " ".....	2.00
HENRY BERNHARD, " ".....	1.00
C. W. GREINEISEN, " ".....	1.00
M. W. BENJAMIN, " ".....	1.00
S. PHILLIPS, " ".....	1.00
E. MOLDONCO, " ".....	1.00
Dr. GRUENING, " ".....	5.00
L. G. REED, " ".....	2.00
I. D. OPPENHEIM, " ".....	1.00
MERRILL TREMBLE, " ".....	5.00
Miss JENNIE TURNER, " ".....	1.00
Dr. LANGMAN, " ".....	2.00
A. LOEBELL, " ".....	1.00
CASH, " ".....	1.00
D. N. THAYER, " ".....	1.00
CASH, " ".....	1.00
CASH, " ".....	1.00
CASH, " ".....	1.00
ROBERT GOGG, " ".....	1.00
CHRISTIANA METZGAR, " ".....	5.00
H. P. LOVERMAN, " ".....	5.00
REUBEN ARKUSH, " ".....	1.00
E. F. WALLARD, " ".....	1.00
S. J. ARKUSH, " ".....	1.00
MAX E. SCHARLES, " ".....	1.00
JACOB HELLMAN, " ".....	1.00
PHILIP SCHADES, " ".....	1.00
AARON HIRSH, " ".....	1.00
JOHN F. TONK, " ".....	1.00
JOSIAH FLETCHER, South Orange, N. J.	1.00
ADOLPH RAWITZER, Stafford, Conn.	1.00

Total.....	$1,908.00
------------	------------

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

"THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE."

The Christian religion is ancient and venerable. Uncounted millions of human beings have been born, lived, and died within its fold. Little children have learned its lessons in their earliest infancy; they have lisped its precepts at their mothers' knees; they have accepted its doctrines from their fathers' lips; they have grown up to manhood and womanhood in the shelter of its institutions; they have founded new homes, welcomed their offspring and buried their dead, celebrated their joys and consecrated their sorrows, nourished their virtues and fought their temptations, in the light of its solemn warnings, its august sanctions, its magnificent and inspiring promises. Generation after generation of rejoicing, suffering, and toiling human beings have received its great tradition from their ancestors and transmitted it to their posterity. It has been the ideal light and consolation of myriads for a long succession of ages, and is the ideal light and consolation of myriads now.

It is impossible for any enlightened and right mind to contemplate these facts in a scornful or derisive spirit, or otherwise than with tenderness and sympathy for the good that Christianity has undoubtedly done. There is no necessity, nay, no justification, for indiscriminate invective or exclusive attention to the other side of the picture. This may excite melancholy over the record of the past, or eager hope at the prospect of a better future; but the benign influences of Christianity on individual lives and on social progress cannot be forgotten, even in face of the malign influences to which the pages of history also testify. There is no adequate excuse for railing or scoffing or bitterness of feelings or of words. No large or noble soul can be driven to separate itself from the mighty stream of the collective religious life of its time without a pang, or live thereafter its independent life without more or less of permanent sorrow. Human sympathy is too dear to all truly human spirits,—the attractive influence of the social environment over the individual is too powerful,—to permit any other result than pain to be the necessary and constant accompaniment of religious isolation. It is a costly price to pay even for self-respect,—this enforced solitude of soul. To see the vast river of human hopes and fears and aspirations roll by, and to stand an idle spectator upon the bank,—harder still, to be inwardly constrained to row against it,—must bring at the best an aching sense of loneliness and loss, to be compensated only by considerations of which the multitude know little and for which they care less.

In truth, why is it that such a separation should be incumbent upon any? Why not float with the stream, abjure thought, deny insight, evade sacrifice, crush protest, stoop to the crowd, and conform? Is there any answer save a sad echo of the question?

tional plane whence it is made. If you feel no inward necessity, reflecting the ultimate Nature of Things, to rate truth above comfort, sincerity above satisfaction, integrity of soul above all possible titillation of the emotions, you will find none. The only answer must come from the voices that call afar from the highest peaks of thought, of duty, of spiritual insight. There are reasons, overwhelming reasons, why the outward life should be moulded in strict accordance with the loftiest visions of objective truth; but they must seem unsubstantial enough to those who have not learned to cherish objective truth as the supreme law of life. Verily, they who have learned this are few indeed.

The trouble with Christianity is not that it is all false, but that it is not the complete or highest truth; not that it is all bad, but that it is not the complete or highest good. Christianity has built up its theory of the universe with marvellous ability, but on an infirm basis. Catholic Orthodoxy as presented in the comprehensive philosophic systems of the great schoolmen, and even Protestant Orthodoxy as presented in the system of John Calvin, will be treated with respect by all minds capable of appreciating the constructive master-pieces of the human mind. But the basis of all this construction was insufficient knowledge of the universe as it is. No other system than that of which modern science is slowly accumulating the materials, not by the transcendent genius of one mind, but by the intellectual coöperation of a vast number of lesser minds, will ever succeed in organizing human thought as a whole again. It is true that the completion of this scientific system will never be absolutely achieved so long as "knowledge grows from more to more"; it is true that the cosmical system of science will be a living organism, like a great tree, rather than an architectural edifice incapable of growth. But it is equally true that philosophy will yet introduce such harmony and method into the growth of this system as to create a new unity of human thought on the basis of Positive Knowledge, only to be contrasted with the lost unity of human thought on the now exploded basis of Original Revelation and Positive Tradition. Modernized Christianity is simply decaying Christianity, however unconscious of the decay; the highest known truth of the universe is not to be found in the cathedral-like structures of Aquinas or Calvin, much less in the disordered eclecticism of the Liberal Orthodox or Neo-Christian schools. Hence it follows that instructed minds, the minds baptized with the holy chrism of the love of truth for its own sake, look to science alone for the final realization of the grandest dream of the ages—that new and higher unity of human thought on the basis of reality, that glorious fellowship of the intellect, which is the necessary condition of the universal "fellowship of the spirit."

It is, therefore, the insatiable thirst for truth which is driving the finest minds of to-day outside of the Christian fold—thirst not for physical truth alone, but moral truth, spiritual truth, religious truth. Christianity has nothing to fear from the coarse, bitter, unscrupulous, impure, and degraded type of protest which exults in styling itself "infidelity," and which, being "faithless" to everything that deserves respect, proves its right to the name. But Christianity has everything to fear from that modern spirit which actively or passively opposes it because it withstands the truth itself, puts blind faith still above reason, and teaches men to follow their hearts at the expense of their heads. Jesus spoke a greater word than he knew, when he said: "The truth shall make you free." Yes, the truth shall yet make men free from his own mistakes—from the Messianic delusion that deceived him, from the slavery of the instituted religion that grew up out of it, from the persecuting spirit that burst forth from it like a devouring flame, from the ecstatic—"I am the truth"—which has reddened the earth and soaked it with blood.

But all the truth that Jesus really taught, freed from the devastating influences that flowed from his grand delusion, shall still be precious to mankind and survive to crown him with a perennial wreath of human gratitude and love. To-day the thirst for truth is driving men from Christianity by myriads, never to return, because it insists still on the "truth as it is in Jesus," including his errors, and cannot reconcile itself with the truth as it is in Nature. But to-morrow, when the victory over these errors shall have been won, mankind will rank his religion high among the other great religions of the world, paying to each the honor it deserves. And even now are they learning to do this, none the less because they pass out of the ancient fold with sorrow in their hearts that they must leave so much that is dear behind.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

Since the date of my last letter to THE INDEX, I have been actively at work in several States, having lectured the past few weeks, among other places, in Boston, Albany, Cleveland, Ann Arbor, and Union City (Mich.), Muncie (Ind.), Milwaukee and White-water (Wis.), Chillicothe (Mo.), and Little Rock (Ark.). In the city last named, I recently gave a second course of six lectures. Arrangements had been made for a public oral debate between Prof. Baier, President of St. John's College of that city, and myself, an agreement having been signed by him and a committee in my behalf, stating propositions and conditions very definitely; but when I was on the way, and it was too late even to telegraph me, a misunderstanding arose between Prof. Baier and the committee, which led to a newspaper controversy and finally prevented the debate. I was quite ready to meet the reverend gentleman on any terms that could be agreed upon; but, no debate under the circumstances being possible, a course of lectures was substituted therefor. The lectures were well attended, and awakened considerable interest in the subjects treated. The South is generally Orthodox, but liberalism is steadily gaining ground there as elsewhere. I have received applications from several cities in Arkansas, and even from Texas, the past fortnight, but shall not be able to visit them this season. The great obstacle to the rapid growth of liberal thought in Arkansas is the dense ignorance of the masses. The Common School is what is most needed now. Little Rock is a city whose people are quite advanced. It is composed largely of Germans, and of people from the Eastern and Western States; and one finds there, as a result, energy, thrift, intelligence, and a real cosmopolitan spirit.

In some of the places I visit, I find liberal organizations; in others, none. There are persons who think organization among liberals a test and criterion of the strength and effectiveness of liberalism. I am sure this impression is not correct. While I am ready to encourage organization when it is practicable, and can be effected under favorable circumstances, I grow stronger every year in the conviction that the advancement of liberalism does not depend upon organization, and that the liberal organizations of this country, under the most favorable circumstances, can accomplish but little in comparison with what is done independently of them. I would say nothing to discourage organization; but I dislike to see any of our friends alarmed lest the liberal movement should prove a failure because the National Liberal League, as they think, has disgraced itself, and there is but little disposition among liberals to organize outside of it.

I found the Liberal Association of Albany doing a good work. A little freethought sheet, called the Liberal Bulletin, is published every Saturday and scattered broadcast. I found Judge Hurlbut, although complaining of infirmities, apparently as vigorous as when he honored us with his presence and his noble address at Syracuse. He feels deep interest in the liberal cause. For its advancement he looks to the growing intelligence and education of the people, and to science and secular influences generally rather than to any organization now existing or likely to exist for some time to come.

At Cleveland and Milwaukee, I spoke under the auspices of the Liberal Leagues of those cities. In both cities, the prominent liberals with whom I came in contact, members of the League, or those cooperating with them, I found opposed to the demand for the repeal of the postal laws against the circulation of obscenity through the mails. I say now, as I did months ago, that the great mass of liberals in this country will sustain the position of Judge Hurlbut, yourself, and others, that the demand should be for modification, and not for repeal. The repeal movement has already spent its force, and the circulation of petitions with all the strategy that can be brought to bear will fail to infuse life into it again or to save it from defeat. And this leads me to say that, while I am thoroughly convinced that the demand for repeal was most unwise, and the prominence given to the subject at Syracuse wholly uncalled for, and while I believe that there is an element in the National Liberal League that will do harm in proportion as it obtains control, and while I have never admired the phraseology of one of the resolutions pertaining to the postal laws adopted at Cincinnati, yet I see no fairness and no truth in the charge of Joseph Cook, copied into THE INDEX, that the National Liberal League is in favor of the circulation of obscene literature. The resolutions adopted at Cincinnati do not call for the repeal of the postal laws, although they were evidently written to satisfy both parties,—the party of reform and the party of repeal. The former party at the Convention regarded their adoption as a victory, while the latter, Mr. Wakeman included, regarded it as a defeat. Col. Ingersoll, by whom the resolutions, I am told, were drafted, is himself personally opposed to the demand for repeal. But I must insist, as I have done before in THE INDEX, that it is not fair, because it is not true, to say that those who are in favor of the repeal of the so-called Comstock law are in favor of the circulation of obscenity. It may be maintained that, if their policy should be adopted and the laws should be repealed, the transmission of indecent books would be facilitated and increased thereby; but it would be as unfair to say that all anti-prohibitionists are in favor of rum-drinking and drunkenness, because prohibitionists think these results would follow the repeal of certain laws forbidding the sale of intoxicating drinks, as to charge that those who ask for repeal of certain postal laws are in favor of the circulation of obscene literature. The doctrine of the atonement, in my opinion, encourages crime; but I am very far from maintaining that those who believe in it must therefore be in favor of crime. I do not doubt that among those who clamor for repeal are men who would use the mails for base purposes, if they could do so without danger; but I am quite as certain that the great mass of men and women who favor the movement headed by Messrs. Wright and Wakeman do so from the best of motives, and, as they think, in the interests of liberty. This I have never doubted from the beginning of the controversy in regard to the so-called Comstock law.

B. F. U.

[Mr. Underwood, we are sure, intends to be perfectly honest and fair to all; but we regret to see him misled by those who studiously misrepresent THE INDEX into echoing intimations which we repel as utterly untrue and grossly unjust to ourselves. He says that he "must insist that it is not fair, because it is not true, to say that those who are in favor of the repeal of the so-called Comstock law are in favor of the circulation of obscenity." He certainly cannot be ignorant that he will be understood as pointing these words at us. Have we ever made the statement that we have italicized above? We distinctly request our friend either to quote the passage, with exact references, in which we have made it, or else to say unequivocally that he does not attribute it to us at all. Again and again have we disclaimed making any reflection upon the personal intentions of the repealing majority; and again and again has the false charge of doing so been made against us in defiance of the facts. Clamorous protestations of pure intentions, when those intentions have not been impugned, are only a cunning evasion of the real issue; and we are sorry to see a thinker usually so clear-headed as Mr. Underwood falling into this obvious trap.

What we do maintain is this: that the National Liberal League has, as an organized body, unmistakably and incontrovertibly taken a definite public position in favor of repeal. We put the following questions publicly to Mr. Underwood, and request him to give them public and unevasive answers:—

1. Did not the National Liberal League, at Syracuse, reject one board of directors because they were opposed to repeal, and elect another board of directors because they were in favor of repeal—reflecting the only member of the old board who was in favor of repeal?
2. Did not the League, at Cincinnati, reelect the same board elected at Syracuse?
3. Did not the League, at Cincinnati, pass resolutions favoring "such postal laws as will allow the free transportation through the mails of the United States of ALL BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND PAPERS,"—and that without making ANY EXCEPTION WHATSOEVER?
4. Do not these three facts prove beyond cavil that the National Liberal League, as an organized body, demands free circulation through the mails for all literature whatever, including the foulest and the worst?

Mr. Underwood is so upright and candid, as well as so clear-headed, that we believe he will say yes to every one of these questions. Let him wholly disregard the false and abusive drivel with which these great decisive facts have been industriously covered up, and render direct answers without fear or favor.—ED.]

LETTER FROM MR. BLAKE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

For some reason, the letter of Mr. Elizur Wright in THE INDEX of March 11 touches my feelings, and I wish to avow it. He says I despise him. If I did, it would be no matter except to myself. Whoever assumes the responsibility of despising a fellow-being must expect himself to suffer the only injury that is done. But he is mistaken. The facts are very simple. Many years ago, when I was a mere strippling, I saw Elizur Wright for a moment, not more than half a minute; but it was one of those moments which we can all count in our lives—many perhaps, and yet few and rare—when we encounter something that cuts its figure on us as a diamond will cleave granite. There was not the least incident connected with the meeting. Mr. Wright was passing through a public building, with a paper in his hand. He looked into my face without seeing me, as, indeed, there was very little to see; but thus I had opportunity to look full into his face for a few seconds, and had a sight which has never grown dim in the least. I feel still as if it were but a half-hour ago, the interest, the surprise, the deference excited in me, increased afterward, by what I was told of him and by reading his writings, to the kind of admiration salutary to a boy and to a man. Now, in all the wretched conflict which has been going on, I have agreed mainly, perhaps entirely, with what I deem the brave, consistent, and fair course of THE INDEX. Many of Mr. Wright's communications have surprised me inexpressibly, and tried my faith severely. Still, I thought it only a difference of apprehension, though to my mind a strange and unhappy difference, until the appearance of the letter to Mr. Savage. What seemed to me the mean and degenerate party-spirit of that letter was too much for my patience. The pleasure with which I receive Mr. Wright's correction is great. But I must add, in justice, that, if I erred in my interpretation, I erred in very good company; and I must think the responsibility lies at Mr. Wright's door for writing in such a tone as could be misconceived to that degree by persons of common intelligence sincerely wishing to be fair.

Mr. Wright's allusion to my quotation-marks is a small fling unworthy of him. My note was very explicit to the effect that I supposed myself to be paraphrasing his sentiment, not quoting his words.

J. V. BLAKE.

QUINCY, ILL., March 15, 1880. ☛

PARALLEL SELF-CONTRADICTIONS.

"Islamism is the oldest, the original, the universal religion, whose substance rests on the consensus of the ages, having been held always, everywhere, and by all; and Mohammed is its prophet."

It seems to me that to every reflecting reader the above statement must appear not only false, but self-contradictory; false, as claiming something at variance with incontestable facts of history, and self-contradictory as affirming the existence of a definite theological system long before the birth of him who truly claimed to be its founder.

I find, however, in a current number of a Christian paper the following paragraph, which to my mind seems parallel in all points with the one at the head of this article, equally erroneous in point of fact, and equally at variance with itself in terms:—

"We hold fast to the oldest religion, and believe in an everlasting gospel,—in a Christianity that is from the beginning, whose substance rests on the consensus of the ages, having been held 'always, everywhere, and by all.' And Jesus is the prophet of this universal religion."

Even had these assertions been made of the substance of religion instead of the substance of Christianity, their accuracy might well be contested. But, as the statement stands, it is grossly incorrect, unless nineteen-twentieths of all who call themselves Christians are ignorant of the essence of their own system. Certainly, to all the Greek Church, all the Roman Catholics, and three-quarters of all the Protestants, identification of Jesus with "the Christ" or "the Messiah" of Old Testament prophecy is an essential part of Christianity. But this embodiment of an official function in a particular person could not possibly be recognized and accepted before the birth of that person. The expectation of a Christ (or Lord's Anointed, born of the lineage of David) was a well-known feature of the Jewish theology; but the express application of the term in question to Jesus of Nazareth, and the recognition of him thereafter as "the Christ," could have no existence before his birth, and is so far from "universal" even now, after eighteen hundred years, that it falls very far short of including even a majority of the earth's inhabitants.

As to the religions apart from Judaism existing before the birth of Jesus, some of them may have had traditional Messiahs or mediators of their own, but the majority neither recognized nor desired any such functionary. Moreover, all the then existing religions, including Judaism, made the observance of rites, forms, and ceremonies, holy places and holy days, essential parts of their respective theological systems; whereas Jesus dispensed with all these, and taught, as the essence of religion, something entirely irrespective of them; and it is largely to diversity from his predecessors, Gentile and Jewish, upon this point, that the undoubted preëminence of Jesus as a religious teacher is due.

Some historian has correctly called the Mohammedans "Unitarians," in contrast with the polytheistic peoples whom they sought to proselyte. But Mohammed insisted on his own preëminence and authority not less than on the unity of God. His confession of faith included, and still includes, only two particulars; but the system demands acceptance of the latter not less than of the former. "God is God, and Mohammed is his prophet." Whoever confesses both these is a true believer: whoever denies either of them is an infidel. But before Mohammed began to preach, the second item could not have been received by anybody: therefore that religion had no existence before that time.

If, then, Jesus assumed, as Mohammed afterwards did, to be the chief and the final messenger from God, deputed by him to decide authoritatively upon all religious matters; and if he required recognition and confession of this as an essential of discipleship, it would seem that then and there was the beginning of the system which had this confession as its cornerstone, and which was afterwards called "Christianity," or the Lord-Jesus-Christ-doctrine.

But, if the four narratives called Gospels may be depended on, Jesus did place precisely this emphasis upon such a recognition and confession of his official Messianic character; and the formula, "the Lord Jesus Christ," accepted as authentic in the whole Christian Church from St. Paul's time to our own, expresses that Church's obedience to the injunction of Jesus. If, speaking as with authority, he set some portions of his doctrine in sharp contrast with the Jewish faith and the Hebrew scriptures,—if he called himself the light, the way, the truth, the life,—if he praised his disciples for calling him Master and Lord,—if he insisted that no one could come to the Father but by him,—if he even went so far as to stigmatize all religious teachers who went before him as "thieves and robbers,"—then it is plain that he did not consider his doctrine an old one; and if he also taught, as the Gospels report, that many are called, but few chosen,—that many go the broad way to destruction, but few find the narrow path to life,—and that a final judgment shall reject large classes of human beings as aliens and enemies,—then it is plain that he did not recognize his own system as either having been, or destined to be, "universal."

Perhaps the extravagant expressions in the quotation upon which I have been commenting only show the immense influence which preconceived opinions and traditional formulas continue to exercise, even after a man has begun to recognize reason as a fit counsellor in the departments of theology and religion.

C. K. WHIPPLE.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

PARNELL has gone home.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA thinks the American newspapers beat the world.

MR. J. C. CROLY has been reëlected president of Sorosis, and presided at the annual dinner at Delmonico's, on the 15th inst.

THOSE distinguished knights and representatives of the letter K of California appear to be near the culminating point of their illustrious career. Kalloch has subsided and Kearney collapsed.

LONGFELLOW'S BIRTHDAY has just been observed by the Sunday-school of Cosmian Hall, Florence, Mass. A likeness of the poet was added to the decorations of the school-room upon the occasion.

PROF. ADLER, in a late lecture upon "The Power of the Press in Connection with Religious Progress," announced that he hoped before many months had elapsed to see the first number of a new and popular liberal journal.

THREE NEGROES who swung on the gallows, in Arkansas, the other day, were quite sure of heaven. One had "made his peace with God"; another was "ready to go"; and the third announced that he was "going to a better country."

CATHOLIC PRIESTS have always been good denouncers. Father Dowd, of St. Patrick's Church, Montreal, denounced from the pulpit the leaders of the Irish national societies for abandoning the annual procession on St. Patrick's day.

IN A PRIVATE LETTER, dated Nice, February 28, Mr. M. D. Conway says: "I have overworked myself, and am here to rest. The doctor says I must not write for a month. I am picking up wonderfully, and shall be at my post again about March 19. Mrs. Conway is with me. If you hear any alarming reports about my health, contradict them. I suffered from a prostration."

REV. C. G. AMES deplored at the Unitarian Conference in New York, the other day, the non-production of ministers in the Unitarian denomination, the Church having, as he said, to draw most of their ministers from other denominations. The difficulty is that Unitarianism is simply the transitional stage between Orthodoxy and Free Religion. Those who are educated for the Unitarian ministry are ready, by the time they get through their preparatory studies, to pass beyond it.

THE POET of the Tribune, after great labor, has brought forth the following ante mortem epitaph:—

On a Free Religionist.

B—h I—g—rs—I went—whither no one knows.
He had his faults, if you believe his foes;
He had his virtues also, if you will,
Though some aver he used his virtues ill.
Tradition says he scaled high heaven alone,
And advertised to lecture from the throne.
But, being dropped, fetched up on Satan's level,
And served His Highness as First Talking Devil;
But, if tradition errs, none surely will Deny that B—h could ably fill the bill.

"MRS. EMMA STRECKER, a wealthy and charitable lady, died about a year ago, leaving in her will bequests to a number of charitable institutions. Her heirs now contest the will. On January 26, when the case was called in the Surrogate's Court, forty-one lawyers responded. There never was sheep large enough and fat enough to satisfy such a gang. Neither benevolence nor heir has much chance for an inheritance. Moral.—Administer your own fortune. Give to the great benevolent enterprises while you can see it administered. The weakest thing in America is the will or wish of a dead man." So says the New York Christian Advocate, and we echo the sentiment.

THE NEW YORK Herald discourses as follows to physicians: "Nine families in ten are continually violating sanitary rules regarding one or the other without a word of remonstrance from their medical advisers; and there is good ground for belief that physicians' own families suffer as much as any others from neglect of these and kindred hygienic requirements. Until the days of this ignorance are gone, medical attentions will not rise above the level of mere pottering. Let the new generation of physicians regard these things, if they would secure and retain a good class of patients. To attend a family of children through diphtheria without losing any is quite a success; but a greater one would be to discover and abolish the cause when the malady first manifests itself, and the same is true of the many other diseases that are due to local conditions."

FOREIGN.

UP TO 1841, the London theatres were closed for dramatic performances on Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent. They are closed now only on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday.

THE RECENT SERIOUS accident to Cardinal Newman was caused by a trip of his foot while he was pacing his room. In falling, he struck against the sharp edge of a piece of furniture and broke one of his ribs.

THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT, alarmed at the increase in the emigration from the peninsula to an average of fully one hundred and thirty thousand persons annually, has issued a special circular to the prefects, recommending "stronger measures" to stop the stream than hitherto adopted.

A RUSSIAN "PROFESSOR" has carried analysis to the greatest length possible, having succeeded in photographing seventy "eminent personages" of hell. How Professor Leuchin contrived to visit Pandemonium unscathed is a mystery, unless fern-seed be as potent in hell as, according to tradition, it is upon earth.

PREPARATIONS are being made for holding, in April, a grand series of Shakspearean performances in the Memorial Buildings, Stratford-on-Avon. The performances will probably extend over three weeks, and many of the principal English artists will take part in them. Mr. Barry Sullivan and Mr. Samuel Bramdram have promised to assist without remuneration.

A MOST INTERESTING case is about to be heard at the Leghorn Court of Assizes. A paper called the Atheist appears to have been too much for the authorities to swallow,—of the manner in which it has been conducted we have no knowledge,—and the editor has been cited to answer the rather novel charge of lesa divinità, or offence against the Divinity. With the offence of lese Majesty, all our British lawyers are familiar; but we should think it would prove rather a difficult matter for the "several distinguished advocates" who are engaged to procure witnesses on behalf of the outraged "party" in this trial. Fairly conducted, this case ought to be a long one, since it must surely be necessary to prove the existence of the Deity ere it can be shown that any form of slander, misrepresentation, or blasphemy has been uttered respecting him.—Secular Review.

SURELY THOSE Christian clergymen who devote a large portion of their time to lectures against the doctrine of Evolution, under the idea that by weakening the theory of Darwin they are buttressing the Christian religion, are woefully mistaken. The Bed- fordshire Times has, we notice, nearly three pages of anti-Darwinism delivered to the Bunyan Meeting congregation on Sunday week. The criticisms of unscientific men upon scientific subjects are but poor reading at their very best; but it is especially ludicrous to find the critics concluding with some such syllogism as this: An acceptable theory of the universe must be complete and have no "missing links"; Evolution is not complete, and it has "missing links"; ergo, we are the offspring of a personal God, the children of a loving Father. Verily, the defenders of Christianity act wisely in setting up a man of straw called "Scientific Infidelity": when shall we find them dealing with the Scepticism of common sense?—Secular Review.

PRIVATE LETTERS received in London from Morocco report a barbarous anti-Jewish movement among the Mohammedans of Fez. The Echo says a fierce attack was made upon them in the neighborhood of the Imperial Gardens, and that many were severely beaten and wounded. A party of Mohammedans rescued a number of the Jews, and escorted them in safety to the Jews' quarter. For this service, they demanded ransom-money, which the Jewish community was compelled to pay. An old Jew, seventy-five years of age, who has always been highly esteemed for his character, was seized, drenched with petroleum, and then actually set on fire. The Jews barricaded themselves in their quarter, where they had to endure a siege at the hands of the mob. It appears that the Spanish Consul at Tangier had informed the Government of Morocco that the Spanish Government would no longer impart to certain Jews and other natives the protection with which it had hitherto guarded them, and that the news of this withdrawal of Spanish patronage let loose the Mohammedan mob upon the defenceless Jews.

Communications.

WOMEN AS CITIZENS—BRIBE-TAKING.

"There is no fellowship of honor and baseness in the same breast."—Quintilian.

Now that women are so unmistakably asserting themselves, and making their claim good to whatever position they choose to assume, it becomes a matter of interest to speculate upon the possible social and political results. In my vicinity, where the temperance reform is an absorbing topic, it has amused me to see how principles affect the action of both sexes, and what is apparent in this out of the way nook is an indication of what will be elsewhere on a larger scale.

It would seem that our Commissioner of Excise is a most reliable man; and yet he, immaculate as he was and is, was approached!

"Approached!" cried Mrs. Kinkleton. "Monstrous!"

"And his wife approached too," cried Mrs. Grundy. "His wife!" shrieked half a dozen in a breath.

"Yes," exclaimed Mrs. Grundy: "he was offered five hundred dollars for a license, and his wife a new silk dress, cost what it would!"

"I would make that silk gown cost something," echoed a trio.

"But it was a bribe to bring her husband over," returned Mrs. Grundy. "Would a woman take it?"

"Why not?" cried Mrs. Kinkleton. "Men take bribes every day, and sell their votes too."

A dead silence followed this, for it was carrying the war into Africa. It was a blank assertion that, if men were unprincipled, women were justified in being so, too. If they were false to the obligations of good citizenship, women were not to be expected to be any better.

Now I have insisted that, if women obtain the franchise, they would bring a new and better element into the political arena, they would purify and elevate the sentiment of citizenship, they would exalt manliness and integrity at the polls. But a close observation would rather indicate that, having obtained the privilege of the ballot, they, too, would sink to the grade of the mere politician, and through them the ballot would be merely duplicated, not placed upon a higher basis.

We must take men and women as we find them, and cry, Let the truth prevail, though the heavens fall. The women are entitled to all the privileges and immunities pertaining to the other sex and recognized in the high court of human justice; and, though we may fall far short of that idealism to which we aspire, I contend that, as acting, voting citizens, we shall not make political science any less pure than it now is, and the hope is latent that we may make it purer. At any rate, men have no right to claim the right even of abuse, and deny it to us. If politics are corrupt, why do they not make them better? If they are too bad for us to participate in, they are too bad for us to tolerate in our husbands and children.

Scientists have lately assumed that our brains are not only small, but are growing "beautifully less"; that our province is to conserve; that we do not advance new ideas, but hold on to what has been gained by the other sex. This is the most subtle and deadly negation forced upon us. It denies us progress, it vetoes genius.

Suppose this be true: it only helps to degrade our common humanity, to place bars to aspiration, but does not negate any existing right. At the polls, a man is not questioned as to his amount of brain. Even as a candidate for office, the capacity of his cranium is not measured, nor hardly his good morals.

If all are low together, let all act together and make the best of it, but do not let our brothers thrust us aside as too weak to bear the stress of dropping a ballot into a box, when they themselves on election days may be seen driving for dear life, carrying the maimed, the halt, and the blind, morally and physically such, to swell the vote of independent citizens.

If we are weak and all the time losing strength of brain, it might not be amiss to begin to prepare asylums for us. At any rate, men have no right to negate our pretensions or punish us for our sins, if we are dangerous even: we have a right to a voice in fixing our condition, unless it should finally appear that every woman is actually what she is in the law, an idiot or insane person.

This subject of bribery is a most appalling one, and one demanding the severest reprehension from pulpit and press. Men talk with an unction of the great Lord Bacon, who, three hundred years ago, was convicted of taking bribes, and removed from his high office, as if the sin of so eminent a man were an apology and a justification for the dishonesty of every scoundrel whose itching palm is extended for a bribe. They will quote the terrible couplet of Pope:—

"If parts allure thee, think how Bacon shined,—
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind."

as if no such thing as integrity exists, and every man has his price, without reflecting on the immeasurable distance between the great philosopher and the poor wretch who sells his vote for a couple of shillings or a glass of whiskey; a man who left a perpetual legacy of thought to mankind levelled to him who is a brawler at the porter-house at the corner; a man who, conscious of his vast substratum of worthiness despite of his degradation, could bequeath his name to posterity, and it has not failed to reverence the gift, and brood with tender regret over the pitiful fall.

Women are not merely making claim for the ballot. They are more thoroughly investigating than is generally believed. The religious denominations are losing power over them, and their faith is shaken in the dogmas so long promulgated. They see to what they lead. Honor is the religion of the man of the world; and the religious man, having joined himself to a church, has no farther need of this manly sense nor of the requirements of morality. Hence our defaulters, purloiners, bribe-takers, and commercial knaves of every kind are church-members and Sunday-school teachers, crimes arising from dogma that make faith the basis of action and morality of no account.

Women hesitate what course to pursue in this relation. With an inbred conservatism, they see that generations coming up through long ages of priestly despotism cannot readily break away from it; and, if they do so, the liberal and progressive leaders of the times supply no substitute. Their doctrines leave the children out. There is no organization as yet to extend a shelter, and enfold the little ones. Till we can thoroughly imbue them with the idea of a God who exacts the most entire moral devotion, and substitute some watchword as potent as that of "Come to Jesus," we have no hold upon their tender affections. Women cling to the Church because of this want for the children. We need create a moral enthusiasm, inaugurate a crusade against our commercial vices, that mothers may have some basis of hope for our growing youth. Men must not shrink from plain talk about the bribery of our party politics,—so monstrous as to appall the weak brains of us women!

Should the time ever come when women, fully acknowledged and panoplied in the rights of citizenship, shall emulate the political vices of men, woe will then be to our Republic. Women, growing avaricious of power and greedy for gain, with the débris of the old leaven of love of dress and ostentatious surroundings, will bring to the front the leaven of a new corruption. Bribery will wear a genteel aspect through the tenderness of sex, and we may know how the lady citizen voted by the richness of her toilet and the gorgeousness of her velvet. The honorable Member of her district will be seen playing the agreeable to feminine voters, sending Tommy a hobby-horse, and Fanny a piano, and Madam a cow of the Alderney breed. Scandal will change its aspect: there is no subverted affection, only votes secured. Will the lady candidate for office send an independent voter a pair of trowsers, a hat, or pair of boots; or, like the beautiful Duchess of Devonshire at an English hustings, give him a kiss for his vote? These are things to be considered.

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

PATCHOGUE, N.Y.

THE IRISHRY.

The Catholic Irishry, both priests and laymen, are in a sort of quasi-rebellion against the laws and peace of this country. In fact, they are in that condition at home and abroad both. Always raving against the British government as an oppression, they, in their ignorance and devotion to a foreign Italian priesthood, are the foes of all civil governments of whatever name or nature. They have not the least respect for any government which is not personal. An election is simply for them an occasion for a row, for fraudulent voting and violence, wherever they can have things their own way. A certain number of Celts will do as a sprinkling in an Anglo-Saxon community, but an excess of them is pretty sure to produce trouble. They have a genius for trouble, a morbid appetite for it, a genius for ruin. The number of rowdies and ruffians among our American-born Celts is appalling. The faces of such are characterized by a hideous animalism. They make the quarters of our cities and large towns, where they are hived, truly dangerous and criminal. The voices even of the children are harsh and bestial. Molly Maguireism in Pennsylvania, Kearneyism in California, and Scullyism in Massachusetts, are all of a piece,—genuine Celtic phenomena. The American people either know, or ought by this time to know thoroughly, the Celtic character, its innate treachery and bloodthirst. John Hay, in his Castilian Days, speaking of the Spanish Celt, says:—

"The Celt is here lord of the land. You can see the same faces at Donnybrook Fair. These large-mouthed, short-nosed, rosy-cheeked peasant-girls are called Dolores and Cathlina, but they might be called Bridget and Kathleen. These strapping fellows, with long simian upper lips, with brown leggings and patched, mud-colored overcoats, who are leaping and swinging their cudgels in that Pyrrhic round, are as good Tipperary boys as ever mobbed an agent or pounded, twenty to one, a landlord to death. The same unquestioning fervent faith, the same superficial good-nature, the same facility to be amused, and at bottom the same cowardly and cruel bloodthirst. What is this mysterious law of race, which is stronger than time or varying climates or changing institutions?"

A community packed with Celts is sure to be in a feverish condition, particularly a country with a four yearly presidential election. The New York draft riots with their massacre of negroes were Celtic outbreaks. The Irish press in this country is neither American nor republican in its tone, but bitterly the reverse. It is papal, pure and simple; entirely in the interest of a foreign spiritual despotism, which is the enemy of free government and popular education everywhere and always. With a shameless effrontery, that feels bold enough to throw off all disguise, the Catholic Irish press of this country is continually flinging its hatred of our institutions into the face of the nation. It is useless to indulge in rose-colored views of our social state, for it is full of menace. Would it were otherwise! The turbulence, pauperism, priestism, and crimes of outrage in our large cities and manufacturing towns, are almost purely Celtic. Can these things be, and overcome us like a summer cloud, without our special wonder? The American people are neither a brutal nor a criminal people, at least in the States that have always been free. Let them no longer consent to bear the onus and opprobrium of Celtic barbarism and outrage without placing it where it belongs, on that element in the population which is guilty of it. The American press is recreant to its duty in treating the Irishry so gingerly. What respectable citizen would not rejoice to see Kearney and his gang in California summarily dealt with by an armed vigilance committee? A little more impunity may result in outbreaks all through the great cities of the Northern States, which will demand for their suppression grape and canister, and will involve the destruction of thousands of lives and untold millions of property. To suppose that this fair domain of liberty is to become a stamping-ground of priests and the degraded, imported populations, of which priests are the nuclei, without precipitating a serious conflict, is to suppose that the thunder-cloud and rain-cloud will not discharge their contents upon the earth beneath.

The South outraged humanity for years before the war with impunity and with an insolent defiance of the order-loving sentiment of the civilized portion of the country, and Celtic ruffians have been and are constantly doing the same thing in our great cities. A reckoning day will surely come.

B. W. B.

HEAVEN HERE OR NOWHERE.

A FRAGMENT OF A LECTURE ON THE RELIGIOUS THOUGHT OF FICHTE.

BY EDWIN D. MEAD.

In Christ's fundamental idea of the "kingdom of God," a new principle appeared in the world, and the struggles to realize this idea constitute, according to Fichte, the real fact of all modern history. Christianity superseded antiquity's doctrines of blind authority by the principle of every individual's immediate relation with the divine, cancelling every wall of partition and bringing all men face to face with God. The political consequent or equivalent of this is the equality of men in personal as well as civil freedom,—in privileges as well as rights; and the work of history becomes the cancellation more and more of the principle of prescriptive authority in life and thought, and the realization of the kingdom of freedom and reason, "the kingdom of God."

The kingdom of God is not something outside of this world, it has nothing to do with terms of time and place: what we call heaven does not lie beyond the grave. There is no future to the soul that has risen into the forms of eternity. "I am immortal," says Fichte, "as soon as I form the resolution to obey the laws of reason: I do not need to become so. My sensuous existence may in future assume other forms, but these are just as little the true life as its present form." In one word, this is heaven, this is the kingdom of God, if we make it so. And it is our duty to make it so, and it is only as we perceive this that we come to know the meaning of life at all. "The end of mankind on earth is this," says Fichte, "that in this life they may order all their relations with freedom according to reason." Through all God's universe there is but one law, but one heaven,—the achieved heaven of each present. Wherever, whenever, whatever, our one eternal duty is to bring each here and now into harmony with the divine law. If we do not feel this and live it, then eternity is not in us. Cease dreaming of Elysian fields of ease in some vague by and by, there are none. Turn to your labor, create heaven, bring everything around you into subjection to the law of justice. These men and women in your streets, who look into your eyes, are angels crying to be born. Oh, liberate them if you yourselves are born, be prisms to refract heaven's fostering sunlight on them, be winds to lift them to the tonic upper air! You tremble at the schemes of communists and socialists. More you ought to tremble at the apathy and sensualism and selfishness, which you have made yourselves believe had something religious in them, and which put heavenly pleasures beyond some rosy cloud, and knew no present heavenly duties, and agreed to call half-justice, half-equality, half-brotherhood good enough for now. Your sin has found you out, and a loud voice is thundering in your scared ears that the rights of now shall be mightily avenged. And what is your answer, O people? What mean your texts from political economy? Are they the breathings of your genuine longings that the kingdom of God may come on earth, or are they but your cunningly devised excuses to shelter selfishness a little longer? I cannot help feeling that these men whom you anathematize and whose books you hide, this Lassalle, this Louis Blanc, have ten times more reality about them than nine-tenths of you. If there is such a thing as a kingdom of heaven, let us recognize it and act in some sort of rational accordance, that is what these men say. Do you say and feel as much? Only the true kingdom of heaven can come through no mere improvement of men's external condition for its own sake. This may easily become the very means of weaving the chains of finitude more crushingly about them, and of blinding them to the facts of their eternal destiny.

"A TRUE REPUBLIC."

EDITOR INDEX:—

I write to thank you for your excellent editorial upon the "Term-System," contained in the last number of THE INDEX, and for your hearty indorsement of the views so logically set forth in that singularly interesting essay by Col. Albert Stickney, entitled A True Republic. I also unite with you in the earnest hope that it will be generally read by our countrymen. I cannot remember when I have read a book that so fixed my attention, or that made so deep an impression upon me. The author's propositions, so at variance with my preconceived opinions, at first rather startled me; but as I followed his argument, and analyzed it, I was convinced of its force, and was compelled, in the main, to adopt his views. Our democratic system, though theoretically the best that has been devised, is not without serious imperfections, which become more and more apparent every day. Under it, a party system has grown up, that seriously threatens the permanency of our free institutions. The people have been divided into two hostile parties, and their passions so inflamed that they seem ready to take each other by the throat. Now this is a sad condition of affairs, and mainly attributable to the too frequent recurrence of elections, and the pernicious doctrine that the spoils of office rightfully belong to the victorious party. Col. Stickney's proposition to eliminate this fruitful evil from our political system, by the substitution of the "good behavior" from the existing "short term" tenure of office-holding, seems eminently wise and entirely practicable. It points out a way of escape from the horrors of anarchy towards which we seem to be drifting, that will be peaceful, and that will at the same time give us a stable government, while retaining the democratic principle in its essence and purity.

As the inauguration of a movement looking to the adoption of the proposed innovation will not proceed from party politicians, but must come from the "plain people," I will conclude this note by commending to this numerous and patriotic class of my countrymen the thoughtful study of Col. Stickney's True Republic. DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, Mass., March 13, 1880.

JESTINGS.

THE TOUCHING sentiment, "Our first in heaven," appeared after an obituary notice in a Philadelphia paper; and the father of the child came into the office, raging mad. It was the third death in the family, and he desired to know of the clerk where he supposed the other two had gone.

THE PRESENT preponderance of females over males in New England is sufficient to afford the youth of that section two mothers to one father. By a curious contradiction, however, it is discovered that they have actually forefathers and but one mother each.—Cincinnati Star.

DARWIN SAYS that animals have no religious sense, but he probably never observed the calm, reflective manner in which a chicken will stand on one leg and look up to heaven after squeezing through a hole in the fence into the strawberry-bed next door.—Norwich Bulletin.

"SOME MORE CHEESE, please," said a small boy of eight to his papa at dinner. "No, my child," was the reply of the prudent parent. "You have already had enough. When I was a child, I had to eat my bread and smell my cheese." "Well," said sonny, "please give me a piece to smell."

A FELLOW in a cattle show, where he made himself conspicuous by his bluster, cried out: "Call these prize cattle! Why, they ain't nothing to what our folks raised! My father raised the biggest calf of any man round our parts." "No doubt of it," said a bystander, "and the noisiest."

AS TWO LADIES were walking along the street, one exclaimed, as the sky suddenly darkened: "There's a thunder-storm coming on! I'm so afraid of lightning!" To which the other calmly replied: "Very well, my dear. Then let us step into that tram car, which seems to have a good conductor."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
 THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS. 1 8 7 9.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.

A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna O. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET, Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL
AT PUBLISHERS' PRICES!
—
ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupids and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafors, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.50
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Notes.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Readings for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRAOKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). The Great Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	5.00
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
COBRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses by F. H. Bradley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous in two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede.....	1.50
Illustrated.....	3.00
Daniel Deronda.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.). Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Marriage and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Letters of Adolph Harnack. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FRUEBAUGH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series.....	5.50
Occ. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each.....	1.00
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Science and Religion.....	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	3.00
GREG'S (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River.....	2.00
The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wendeholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	1.50
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Sea and Land.....	5.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Skirmishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of Talk about the Year for Young Folks.....	1.50
Rite of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. A Poem of Innocence.....	1.50
Amy's Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUXLEY (DAVID). Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.75
Law Sermons, and Reviews.....	2.50
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.75
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.50
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Ames.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Modern Conception of Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	2.00
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. V. Meyer.....	1.50
XV. Funk. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Theory of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	1.50
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesomeres. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPERT (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	4.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	2.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II. Per vol.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Countrymen.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversation of the Roman Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	1.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjective and Objective—Essay on Liberty and its One vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVAT (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes: An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	2.00
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Minerals, Metals, &c.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	2.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	1.50
Bousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. 2 vols.....	2.50
Literature. Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On the History of the Jews. Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philosophy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.00
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.2
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Girls.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.5
The Story of Avia.....	1.5
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHEELE (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.A.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventional Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life 'n the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific Folks.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Ass'n at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. PROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES.

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The Brute God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workingman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty."—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS OF 1872, '73, '74, '76, '78, and '77. five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 244. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unbridled, with Index not in other editions. $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calif. $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 254 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geography, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 536.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

THE GREEK GOVERNMENT has ordered the Bible read in the public schools. In America, the tendency is in the other direction.

WHEN STEPHEN GIRARD died in Philadelphia in 1832, the income of the estate which he left to the city was $68,000. It is now $877,165.

IT IS STATED that the Pope, while not approving of such a course, will, nevertheless, submit to the expulsion of the Jesuits from France.

THE BOSTON Herald says: "As Rev. Dr. Parker of London is a candidate for Parliament, Dr. Lorrimer may unconsciously run for Congress."

WOMAN SUFFRAGE was defeated in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, March 25, by a vote of one hundred and thirty-seven to sixty, the largest majority against it for ten years.

ERNEST RENAN is soon to repeat in London, before notable Englishmen, his four lectures on the influence of Rome upon Christianity. Renan has for years been a great sufferer from rheumatism.

HON. LEVI P. MORTON, the wealthy New York Congressman and a member of the "Syndicate," was the person who first offered to bear one-fourth of the expense of freighting the ship Constellation with supplies for the starving poor of Ireland.

IT IS ANNOUNCED that a posthumous volume of the writings of Rev. John Weiss will soon be published, consisting of ten essays grouped under the title of "The Immortal Life." Mr. Wasson supplies a preface and Dr. Bartol an introductory note.

THE INHABITANTS of the old town of Dorchester, Mass., are making arrangements to celebrate its two hundred and fiftieth anniversary. This is the mother of all towns, being the first in the world to organize a town government by the choice of selectmen; and its first free school is supposed to antedate all others.

THE BOSTON Daily Globe is responsible for this story: "One reason why the Rev. Joe Cook didn't convert Ralph Waldo Emerson is that he couldn't. This is the other reason. After a certain lecture of Mr. Cook's in Concord, which Mr. Emerson attended, it was suggested that a conversation should be held at his house,—the most hospitable home of thought that can be imagined. 'No,' said Mr. Emerson: 'the man who has slandered my friend, Theodore Parker, I shall not invite to enter my house.'"

MR. M. D. CONWAY wrote as follows to the New York Independent, under date of Feb. 9: "In your paper of January 1, I find the report of a lecture by the Rev. Joseph Cook, in which he states: 'Moncure D. Conway writes from England that marriage is fit only for common people.' I have vainly searched the report for any explanation of this extraordinary misrepresentation. I beg leave to say in your columns that it would be impossible for the brain of man to devise or for pen to write a sentiment more abhorrent to my ethical and social opinions than that which Mr. Cook has ascribed to me."

HORACE SEAVER intimates that Free Religion is another name for hypocrisy. He says in the Investigator, in answer to "R. S.": "If you can make anything else out of Free Religion than we did, you can try your hand at it. To us it is a species of infidelity, christened with a religious name in order to make it palatable with the genteel and the 'cultured' dilettante of weak nerves." Mr. Seaver is believed to be in the habit of publishing communications to his paper from himself, but signed with fictitious names to conceal the fact; and "R. S." should probably have been printed "H. S." Perhaps he will suggest an appropriate name for this sort of practice.

THE MOTHER of Dean Stanley wrote thus in her journal: "Nobody believes in another person's experience. There is a prejudice conceived on a first superficial glance of people and circumstances, which nothing but your own observation can correct; and then you look back with wonder to recover the trace of why you thought so. People are so proud of penetration, of detecting character at a coup d'œil, that they seem to forget how many little details go to form anything like a just estimate. It seldom happens that, when a violent like or dislike is conceived on first acquaintance, further knowledge will not qualify the one or soften the other, till sometimes the balance of liking is not only modified, but entirely changed."

WE FIND this curious statement in the Religio-Philosophical Journal: "Keshub Chunder Sen, a high caste Brahmin who for some time has been a rising light in India, has cast aside appearances and become a founder of a new sect. He has long and earnestly protested against the superstition of his own country, and at times the hearts of missionaries were gladdened by his praise of their works, and his seeming acceptance of the doctrines of Christ. To establish Christianity, however, was not his object. He claims to be a reincarnation of the divine Bhakti, under the name of Chaitanya, and that he is commissioned to establish the church of the future. He is the Prophet Nadiya: an organization has been completed at Calcutta, and the apostles, 'a preaching army,' have been sent forth on their mission to convert the world. This army moves from place to place with banners flying and music, and so great is the enthusiasm that devotees roll themselves in the dust before it. The object of the new prophet is to deliver his country from dry rationalism and supply a living faith. Whatever the results may be, the movement is of deep interest to the student of religious history, as an illustration of the rise and progress of sects. Keshub Chunder Sen, with his pretence of being a reincarnation, in the light of the present, is a sham and a farce: removed two thousand years into the past, and a few wonder-works would have made good his pretence, and untold millions would have received him as God."

THE Independent says: "The name of the Society for the Promotion of Ethical Culture is about as repulsive as can be conceived; but under the direction of Felix Adler it is doing some actual mission work that quite surpasses anything that was done by Mr. Frothingham's society, whose place it seems to fill. It has a kindergarten for the little children of the poor in this city, an industrial school for the larger children, a committee of supplies for the needy, and two or three trained nurses, who have each a district in which they visit the sick poor, under the direction of the hospital physicians, and care for them. This work is admirable and appears to be very well done, although it seems strange to hear that these nurses are directed to leave religious comfort to religious teachers. The sick cared for are almost wholly Catholics, and in answer to our question, what it was actually found that the Catholics do for their own poor, it was replied that, beyond giving in some cases to poor families orders for groceries, to the extent of a dollar a week, by the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, nothing seemed to be done. The Sisters are occasionally met; but they do not seem to do any nursing or to give any but spiritual comfort. The case was mentioned as happening within the past fortnight in which a poor German father in Seventeenth Street, whose sick child was at the point of death, went to the priest, only half a block away, and begged him to come and baptize the child. The priest refused rudely, giving the father a bottle of holy water and telling him to baptize it himself. 'That is because we are poor,' said the parents, with tears. Perhaps, one of these days, those parents will get attached to the Society for the Promotion of Ethical Culture, which nursed their baby in its sickness, and the Church will be wondering why it cannot retain the immigrant Catholics."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSANTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN,
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN AHRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilcoxville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MORRIS HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. B. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mt-MORRIS W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. HOPE WHIFFLE, Boston, Mass.
 T. C. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thordike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-
 EEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. FIFE, Rochester, N. Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

How to Get the Best Public Servants.

A CHAPTER FROM "A TRUE REPUBLIC."

BY COL. ALBERT STICKNEY.

It was assumed at the beginning of this argument that the general framework of our Government was good, that its division of the work and the duties of different departments and officials was a wise one. It was said that the main inquiry here would be, How we are to secure in each department of our public service—

1. Our best men.
2. Their best work.

A short examination was then made of some points in the three distinctive types of government—Hereditary Monarchy, Constitutional Royalty, and what we have called a Republic.

As to Hereditary Monarchy, the conclusion reached was that the hereditary system, as a machinery for selecting the men who were really to wield power in the State, was a failure, and that the good result which was sometimes gained under that system, that is, vigor and stability of administration, could be had under a government where the officers were elected, as well as where power was inherited. It was simply a question of how much power a people should give their chief executive; and the power could be given as well to an elected executive as to a hereditary executive.

The examination of Constitutional Royalty brought us to the conclusion that executive officials should not do work in the Legislature, and should be held responsible only for their executive work; and further, that there should be at the head of the whole executive administration one man with power, who should be held responsible for the working of that whole executive administration.

The examination of the working of our own system of government showed that, instead of our having a government where the people really have the choice and control of their officers, there has grown up a party oligarchy, which has taken from the people the choice of their public servants and the control of their public work, and has established an oppressive tyranny.

The argument then was, that party, instead of being a machinery necessary for getting wise action in the interest of the people, was only a combination of men for the carrying of elections, was the strongest hindrance to wise action; that it was the cause of endless, needless, and pernicious strife; and that, instead of being a necessary engine of free government, it is really the most dangerous enemy free government can have. And it was urged that we must devise some means of ridding ourselves of these combinations, which exist only for the purpose of taking from us the choice of our public officers and the control of their public action.

It was argued that the only means of destroying these party oligarchies, and freeing both citizens and our public servants from their tyranny, was to abolish the term-system, and reduce, as far as possible, the number of elective offices. But it was suggested that possibly those changes might interfere with the securities which the people now have for getting the best men in the public service, and for getting from those men their best work.

It was argued that the only officers to be elected by the people should be the Chief Executive and the members of the Legislature. It is to be noticed that under the national Government those are the only officers that are elected. But the arguments here brought forward are general in their bearing, and apply with the same force to State, county, city, and town governments as to the national Government.

The argument from this point forth will still be made general. And the next point to be considered is, What are the real securities that the people can have for getting in each department of the public service their best men?

That means, of course, the getting in each department of the service the best men for that department. One of the points urged against what is called Constitutional Royalty was, that the heads of the executive administration are selected for their fitness, not for the duties of their executive offices, but for work in the Legislature. And one of the worst results of party, whether under a system of constitutional royalty or under a republic, is that public officers of all kinds are selected for their fitness, not for the duties of any office, but only for election work.

To secure the best men in our service, we must, if we can, secure two things:—

1. That the best men shall offer themselves for the service.
2. That they shall be taken into the service.

How, then, shall we secure the first point of these two, that the best men shall offer themselves for the service?

It has been already said that private employers have no difficulty in finding good men to do their work. Men usually seek employments that are congenial, and sooner or later find the work for which they are best fitted. The men who are fit for the people's service will be sure to seek that service. We can here trust to the operation of natural laws, if we will only allow them to operate. To simply allow the operation of natural laws must be our first end.

To accomplish this end, the main thing we have to do is simply to remove the barriers we have raised by our system of false republicanism, to destroy this party oligarchy, which drives from the service the men who will serve only the people, and keeps in the service only those men who will serve party.

But, besides that, the people should use the immense advantages which they have over all private employers in competing for labor. As things now are, we throw them all away.

These advantages are:—

1. The people have a service that is, or can be, more permanent than that of any private employer.
2. Their affairs are more vast, more important; and the people are richer than any private employer. They should, therefore, and can, pay better in money.
3. Above all, they can in their service give fame and reputation beyond what any private employer can dream of giving.

How do we use these advantages?

All professions and occupations have their chances. But, aside from those chances, every profession or business in the country, other than our public service, gives to the men who enter it a certainty of employment for life, if they will do honest work. The carpenter, the blacksmith, the lawyer, and the physician all know that, if they only do honest work, they are certain of having work all their lives. So we deal with all private servants. Is it so with our public service?

To our public servants alone, we say, Whether you do our work well or ill, you can have a certainty of employment only for four years or two years; and for any longer time you must take your chance of carrying an election at the end of that term. You may grow gray in our service; you may give us the best labors of a long life. You may have spent many years so faithfully in learning the duties of your office that you are without any other profession, and have no other means of earning your bread. We give you no certainty of employment for any time. We warn you in the outset that, whenever the party leaders need your salary to reward some of their followers for work done in carrying elections, they will have it, and your gray hairs and your years of faithful service will count for nothing.

That is the sober truth, without exaggeration. That is precisely what we say to the men who wish to enter our employ. Can we, on such terms, get the best men?

Take the next point. Our public affairs are vastly more important than the business of any private employer: they involve larger amounts of money and property, they concern wider and more varied interests; and the people of the United States have in their possession and under their control the wealth and fortunes of all the individuals in the land. We ought to pay our public servants more than any private employers can possibly afford to pay. We thus have it in our power to draw to our service the very ablest men. We need them. We ought to pay for their work, as we can well afford to do.

Moreover, the men we need to do our government work are not the men who live the lives of elegant leisure, on fortunes that other men have made for them. We wish these men of leisure in the service, if they can stand the tests, if they can and will do the hard work. But in the service of a real government, there is no place for idlers. Here is the finest work in the world, to be done by the men who can do it best. Men's minds are like their bodies: those only are good for use that are trained in hard work of some kind. In the large number of instances, the men in the world who can do good work are not the men of fortune, but they are men who need to be paid in money for the work they do; and those men we cannot get unless we pay them well in money. There are places enough in the world where they will be well paid. To those places they will go.

Now, although we can pay, and ought to pay, in money, more than any employer in the country, what we do is this: we say to the men who wish to enter our service, Although we give you no certainty of permanent employment, we do give you a certainty of poor compensation. We are the richest employers you can find; we are the meanest paymasters. In any other service than ours, you have the possibility of a reasonable fortune. We give you the certainty, if you are honest, and give your whole time honestly to our service, of little better than poverty.

Is that a wise policy? In the war of the Rebellion, of what consequence would ten or twenty millions of dollars in salaries have been to the people of the United States if, by paying that amount of money, they could have saved the twenty-five hundred millions and the lives that were thrown away? It is always so. There is never any economy in poorly paid labor.

But it is on the third point, where we have our greatest advantage, that we make our greatest sacrifice.

We have it in our power to give to our public servants fame and reputation for good work done in our service.

We make it certain that they shall not gain fame or reputation in that service, if they do nothing but serve us well. Here, too, the term-system makes our chief difficulty.

Even if we should once get in our service all the best men in the country, putting wholly out of consideration the effects of party, the system of elections for short terms of years would certainly result in driving from our service the best men.

The expectation was, in having elections at intervals of years, that, when an official did good service, he would be re-elected at the end of his term. That is not, however, the way in which the system operates. Nearly every official act of every public officer, according as it is done in one way or the other, works a direct gain or loss to some one man or set of men. The men whose interests are injured by the action of public officers know their injuries, and can easily combine. The interests that our officials protect by upright action are commonly the general interests of the whole people, who cannot, or do not so easily, combine. Moreover, by each separate act a public officer may make a new set of enemies. At the end of his term, many men, for many reasons, wish his one place. The natural result is, that when a public officer stands for a re-election, all his enemies, and the friends of all other men, combine against him alone. And what chance of re-election, under such circumstances, has a man who has simply discharged his duty, without conciliating by improper means the powerful interests in the land, whatever they may be? Suppose the case of a man of great and varied knowledge, a master of the principles of finance, learned in jurisprudence, a man of sound sense and judgment: put him in Congress to-day, let him simply give himself to the most faithful performance of his duty, never speaking but with an honest purpose, doing his work in the most skilful but unobtrusive manner; let him neither have nor use the arts of the politician; let him neither flatter nor deceive the people who put him in his place, and will any one claim that such a man would be likely to secure a second term in Congress, as affairs now go, or as they have gone at any time in the last thirty years?

When, then, we add the certainty that this plan of general elections for short terms of years certainly brings into existence this army of men who make the carrying of elections their profession, who need all the places under government for their own purposes, what human possibility is there that the good men who do now and then get into the public service should stay there?

We see every session in Congress a few eminent men of business—bankers, mine-owners, and merchants. They never appear for more than one or two terms. What does it mean? Simply that these men, who have, by the gaining of their own fortunes, proved that they are probably men of honesty and ability, who have a strong wish to enter public life, and give to the service of the people the fruits of their experience and the use of their powers, cannot remain in the people's service, because they are independent, because they make enemies and do not serve party.

The best men cannot long stay in our service. But unless a service is permanent, men can have no possibility of gaining in it fame and reputation. In all the ordinary professions and occupations of life, reputation comes only from long and faithful service. Can it be otherwise in the public service? When we established the term-system, we made it as certain as we could that when the system had time to work out its natural results it would be impossible for men to get fame from simply doing well the people's work. We drive them into the profession of election-carrying.

By our term-system, then, and by the tyranny of party, which is its chief result, and by our practise of giving to our public servants poor compensation, we not only refuse to use the great advantages of our position with reference to other employers, but we do all we can to keep the best men out of our service.

But suppose all these barriers removed, and that the best men for our service offered themselves for it, as they certainly would. How, then, are we to make sure that the best men shall be taken into the service?

To secure this point, we must so arrange that—

1. The choice shall be made by those who are best able to make it.
2. The men who are to make the choice shall have all possible means of testing the men from whom they are to choose.
3. That the choice shall be made freely and honestly.

The first of these points, that the choice of public servants shall be made by those who are best able to make it, shuts off at once, as to the whole body of executive officials except the chief, the method of popular election.

I admit and claim that, for the selection of the Chief Executive of the nation, the free choice of the whole people, if it can be had (not the choice of a few party leaders), is the best means that can be devised. So, too, I believe that, when party tyranny is destroyed, the free choice of the whole people is the best machinery for choosing the members of a legislative body. But, as to the qualifications of the vast number of executive officials in a large public service, it is an utterly impossible thing that the people at large should be able to form an intelligent judgment, or any judgment at all.

The point I make is, not that the system of popular election places the choice of our public officials in the hands of any ignorant class of the people, but that all the people, on this point, without reference to class, are ignorant, are equally ignorant, and wholly ignorant. As to these qualifications of single Government officials, no one can possibly know anything at all, except the immediate superiors in office of the men in question.

To secure, then, that the choice of our public servants should be made by the men who are best able to form a judgment, or by men who are able to form any judgment at all, it is necessary that all subordinates in all our executive offices should be appointed by the head of the office, from the men whom he has tried in the office; in other words, that as to the great body of executive officials, election by the people or by any part of the people should be altogether abandoned.

And as far as this point alone is concerned, if we concede it as to any of the subordinates, we must concede it as to all. As to any one branch in any of the great executive departments, who is there that can know anything of the real working capacities of the men in that branch, except the man who is its head, who has the work of those men every day under his own eyes? As to the heads of the different branches, who can possibly know anything of their working capacities, except the man who sees their work every day, their immediate superior, the head of the department? And, as to the heads of departments, who can possibly make as intelligent a choice as can be made by the Chief Executive, who has had the department matters and the department men under his eyes, it may be, for years?

As far, then, as this point is concerned, all the officials of the entire service, except the Chief Executive, should be appointed, and not elected. And the appointments should be made, of the officials in each office and department, by the head of the office or department.

This system, it is very easily seen, would result simply in a steady stream, by promotion from the bottom to the top, throughout the whole executive administration, until we came to the very head,—to the Chief Executive. And that is precisely what we have in every well-organized service in the world. The Chief Executive cannot, of course, appoint himself. And he should be elected, as it seems to me, by the vote of the whole people—substantially as he is, in form, now. He should be a man who has already, in some way, made a national reputation. And if party and party influence were destroyed, no man would be elected by the people who had not such a national reputation.

The intention, in giving the people the direct choice of their officials, was to secure a wise choice. The people, as to this vast number of executive officials, cannot, from mere lack of knowledge as to the men, make as wise a choice for themselves as some one else can make for them. They should, then, trust the choice to those men who can best make it.

How, then, can these men who are to make the choice have all possible means of testing the men from whom they are to choose?

Here again we need, of all things, a service that is permanent. The men in the service must have time to show what they can do. There must be time for the processes of natural selection to operate. Make the service permanent, and the men in it will all find their level. As certainly as it happens in other professions, the able men will rise to the top, and the weak ones will drop to the bottom.

Much is now written and said in favor of what is termed competitive examination. No doubt competitive examination is a thing to be used. But examination in what? In Greek and Latin and Mathematics? They are good in their place. Give every man, in every profession, as much of them as he can have. But they will not, by themselves, give us good public servants. What we must have is the competitive examination of actual service. We must in our Government service put men to the same tests that we do in other services and professions—the test of actual work. Have men enter the public service always at the bottom of the ladder, and have them compete at the special work they are to do. Let them prove themselves. Find the best men by the natural selection that actual service will make.

But to have the possibility of any such competitive examination as this (and it is the only one that can have any real value), we must have no term of service of four years, or two years, or any term of years whatever. The public service must have the same permanence that we find in the service of our great mills and railroads, if we hope to be able to find men out, to know what they can really do. We must drop the men at the end of one day, if they so soon show themselves unfit. If they show themselves fit, we ought to keep them for their lives.

Then, as to the third point, how are we to secure that the choice of officials shall be made freely and honestly.

As far as concerns the appointments by the superior executive officers of their subordinates, we must secure honesty of official action in that respect by the same means through which we secure it in other respects. That is the point to be considered in the next chapter.

And as to the election by the people of a chief executive and of members of our legislatures, how are we to secure that those elections by the people shall be honestly and freely made?

For that we only need to destroy party. The American people can be trusted. This fear that some men have of the people's honest vote is not well grounded. Wise and honest opinions have their due weight with all men. Our difficulty now is, that party demagogues have an undue weight, which they get only from the fact that they control all this immense election machinery. Destroy that, and they will have only such power and influence among men as they can gain in an honest natural way, in honest natural employments. We have created an artificial condition of things.

Were the people left to make their own choice of the men who are to make their laws and do their other government work; were they unmolested by the arts and mechanisms of party men who have selfish purposes of their own to serve; were all the citizens, high and low, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, simply left to their own counsels, and allowed to honestly choose the men they really deem the best fitted to manage their public affairs, they would, to-day and at all times, place the Government in the hands of the best men. The mass of the American people, and of any people that has ever conquered the right to choose their own rulers and take any real part in the working of their own government, are honest men. They respect honest men. They are guided by honest and capable men in all the ordinary affairs of life. The people would choose honest men to government positions, if they were left to themselves and to the advice of their natural advisers. Is there, even now, any point that makes a man so strong a candidate as the having a reputation for honesty? Remove party machinery and the influence of party men, and the people's choice would almost invariably be a wise one. There have been many times in our history when elections by the people have been had of men to fill important stations, and when, from special circumstances, there has been no party pressure, or party pressure has had no effect. The uniform result has been that the people have made a good choice. Times of great public danger come, when the people are thoroughly alarmed, when every man thinks and acts to the best of his ability. The best men then are chosen to public place. So it was when men were sent to the Continental Congress and the Constitutional Convention. So it was throughout the early years of our Government, before party got its growth. Many times in late years, it has happened that the people have become weary and disgusted with the conduct of the professional politicians who have for years succeeded in capturing their votes. They rebel, and elect a man of character. Ordinary men, of less than the ordinary amount of education, are amenable to ordinary influences,—to reason and to honest argument. They, as well as the richer and more highly educated men, appreciate the necessity of having honest men in the Government. They would be influenced by the honest men in their voting at all times, were elections free from party pressure. In all private affairs of life, all men, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, choose their servants, their blacksmiths and their shoemakers, their lawyers and their physicians, looking to the one point whether these their servants have proved themselves to be honest and capable men. Is it conceivable that men will choose their public servants on any other grounds? Will they in all the ordinary affairs of life act like men of sense, but in their public affairs alone act like men without sense? That is not human nature. Whenever, in the history of this country, bad men have been elected to public office, it has been the work of party. Whenever the people have, for any reason, risen above party pressure, they have elected good men.

The argument of this chapter thus far amounts to this:—

1. To secure the best men for our Government service we must simply not stop the operation of natural laws. We must put our service on the same footing with the service of other employers.
2. We must use the advantages that we have over other employers. And to that end—
3. We must abolish the term-system.
4. We must have executive officials appointed by the heads of offices and departments, and not elected by the people.
5. We must destroy party. And to that end we must destroy the term-system.

The argument in this chapter has been, in form, an inquiry how, in the future, we are to succeed in getting the best men into our public service. The inquiry has been, in fact, how in the past we have succeeded in keeping the best men out of the public service.

The ablest men in the country, the men who could best serve the people, have always been, and now are, eager to enter the people's service. They cannot get there. There is nothing that spurs men like the desire for fame. And that desire has at all times, and everywhere, brought forward great generals and great statesmen, whether in empires or republics, to serve the people, whenever the people has been allowed to take their service. Public life has for most men a wonderful fascination. And in this country, before party machinery and party management became so complicated and powerful as they now are, before the term-system had worked out its legitimate results, Congress was full of able men. The ablest men and the best men in the country were eager to go there. It is not kings and emperors alone who can get great men in the service of the State. The Athenians and Romans always were, and the people of the United States always have been, able to have their greatest men in their service for the mere asking. They can have it even without the asking. These men beg to be taken into the public service. How is it that we do not take them? How are we able to hinder this common law of nature, this law of supply and demand, from having in our Government affairs its legitimate operation? Everywhere else it is in full force. Here alone it fails.

There have, in the history of the human race, been two great forces that have, at one time and another, struggled to prevent the people from selecting for themselves their wisest men to manage their Government affairs. Those two forces have been the tyranny of kings and the tyranny of faction.

The tyranny of kings we need not fear. Until we overthrow the tyranny of faction, it will be an impossible thing for the people to get the services of their best men, though those men are at all times eager to serve them.

But, it may be said, if we give up the term-system, how shall we secure any "responsibility" on the part of our Government officials—how shall we secure good and faithful service at their hands?

That is the question next to be considered.

THERE WERE TWO MEN in a Mississippi regiment, commanded by Colonel Stith, of Baltimore. One of these men contended that the Scriptures were of divine origin, and the other said they were of human invention, and asked his opponent, in one of the arguments which they were continually having, if he believed the story of Jonah and the whale, to which the other replied, "Yes." "Do you also believe that the three Hebrews passed through the fiery furnace without feeling the heat?" persisted the infidel. "Yes," came the answer again. "Do you believe," came sharply, "that Samson slew all those thousands of Philistines with the jawbone of an ass?" It was just after the battle of Shiloh, and the believer in the Bible had just had some tough experience in the difficulty of fighting only four or five to one. "Well," he answered hesitatingly to the last home thrust, "I—I—always regarded that story as a mere camp rumor!"

[FOR THE INDEX.]

UNITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

A REVIEW OF DR. MARTINEAU'S STATEMENT.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

III.

Dr. Martineau most inadvisedly dismisses Reason as private, unhistoric, and ineffectual, in comparison with "Inspiration." This can only signify his acceptance of the contrast which vulgar opinion makes between reasoned human truth, established without miracle, and recognized in the whole breadth of history, literature, and life, and technically revealed divine truth, bearing the exclusive mark of utterance produced by particular and exceptional interference, and transmitted in sixty-six Hebrew and Christian booklets, which pious fraud binds up and labels as one HOLY BIBLE. The sincere opinion of expediency which leads Dr. Martineau to thus range himself behind the Pharisees of book, dogma, and ritual, where his distinction is that he is the last attenuation of accredited Orthodox tradition, and as such more ornamental than useful, is likely to prove a broken reed. "Inspiration," in the special sense, as the method of particular revelation, concluded above eighteen hundred years ago, in contrast with reason and conscience, as organs of universal revelation, widening with living power over the whole range of advancing human culture, is discredited already to such an extent, wherever thought and learning have made way, that undisguised appeal to it, like this of Dr. Martineau, is commonly avoided rather than sought.

There is rising in all churches and all sects, and still more among all peoples and popular masters of thought, learning, and science, a new way of looking at even old truths, and still more a new way of departing from old truths, and of developing new doctrine, the essential principle of which is that Reason is the supreme and eternal means of revelation, to which all special revelations, however significant, are subsidiary, and by which they must be judged, and may be eventually set aside as merely provisional, when the divine education of the race shall have brought the advanced section of mankind to a clear understanding of the essential elements of divine truth. The shadow has crept steadily across the double page of supposed "Inspiration,"—Old Testament and New Testament,—until the advanced Christian mind everywhere begins to be conscious that the truths are to be taken above and apart from the texts, even in the case of the best written words, of psalm, prophecy, gospel, or epistle. It almost comes to this: that one need not doubt of the truth of Christ, comprehensively conveyed through such conceptions as were possible to a mind subject at that date to the limitations then universal, even if it should be made to appear probable, as surely it need not, that some Jewish misconceptions clung to the mind of Christ, and had a distinct place in his teaching, and helped his apostles to go wrong. Dean Stanley may not intend so much, when he says, in his latest volume, "It is a consolation to remember that the value of the truths which nourish the better part of our nature depends upon their own intrinsic divinity, not on the process by which they reach us"; but so much exactly is covered by the full truth of his words, and will be fully recognized, as advancement in spiritual discernment proceeds to that inevitable goal, which was perfectly anticipated by Christ's own sense of the nothingness of all other teaching than that of the very providence and spirit of God himself.

Not only does Christ always stand aside for truth, that it may shine by its own light,—the "intrinsic divinity" of which Dean Stanley speaks,—but he ever protests, with pure theistic faith, against any attempt to use him and his work or word as an image and revelation of God. The common sense of mankind but meets Christ himself when it makes allegiance to rational truth the supreme law of belief, and demands for reason and conscience rightly used an authority above that of text and tenet and tradition. That Dr. Martineau fails to understand this proceeds no doubt from the fact that his position at the farthest remove from Orthodoxy, and his consequent slight hold upon external history, has made him unduly anxious to put a hand backwards, and to grasp a tradition which is still supposed to be all strength, although in fact it is already but a number of broken links, and will soon be no more than a rope of sand. It is a most curious effect of extreme Unitarianism that it thus sets men of most advanced views to looking back for a hitch to the apostles, or the Jews' old books, or some effete respectability, at the very time when, of all the people that have always had this worthless and damaging hold, the better instructed and more thoughtful are giving it up, to escape its bondage. Dr. Martineau shelters his own consciousness of historical insignificance under "Inspiration," at the very moment when the drift of history is away from "Inspiration," in this technical church-and-creed sense, to Reason, Conscience, and Humanity, representing universal inspiration,—a kingdom of God rather than a special interference.

In the second volume of Mr. Martin's Life of Prince Albert there occur some significant indications of the real tendencies of progress at the present time, which may be pertinently adduced in contrast with Dr. Martineau's more Anglican view. At the Mansion House banquet, for example, March 21, 1850, in a speech on behalf of the Great Exhibition then in preparation, Prince Albert gave utterance to a thoroughly and admirably prophetic view of the event; an interpretation of the divine meaning of the world's present aspect, which is much more to the purpose of all human progress to-day, religious as well as secular, than any possible word of a churchman as such, or even of an advanced minister like Dr. Martineau, who tries to keep an eye on the church, and to imitate its pretension of historical antiquity and authority. As a free layman, the Prince said:—

"I conceive it to be the duty of every educated person closely to watch and study the time in which he lives, and, as far as in him lies, to add his humble mite of individual exertion to further the accomplishment of what he believes Providence to have ordained. Nobody, however, who has paid any attention to the peculiar features of our present era, will doubt for a moment that we are living at a period of most wonderful transition, which tends rapidly to accomplish that great end to which, indeed, all history points, the realization of the unity of mankind. Not a unity which breaks down the limits and levels the peculiar characteristics of the different nations of the earth, but rather a unity the result and product of those very national varieties and antagonistic qualities. The distances which separated the different nations and parts of the globe are rapidly vanishing before the achievements of modern invention, and we can traverse them with incredible ease; the languages of all nations are known, and their acquirements placed within the reach of everybody; thought is communicated with the rapidity, and even by the power, of lightning. . . . So man is approaching a more complete fulfilment of that great and sacred mission which he has to perform in this world. His reason being created after the image of God, he has to use it to discover the laws by which the Almighty governs his creation, and, by making these laws his standard of action, to conquer nature to his use; himself a divine instrument. . . . The Exhibition of 1851 is to give us a true test and a living picture of the point of development at which the whole of mankind has arrived in this great task, and a new starting point from which all nations will be able to direct their further exertions. I confidently hope that the first impression which the view of this vast collection will produce upon the spectator will be that of deep thankfulness to the Almighty for the blessings which he has bestowed upon us already here below; and the second, the conviction that they can only be realized in proportion to the help which we are prepared to render each other: therefore only by peace, love, and ready assistance, not only between individuals, but between the nations of the earth."

This is the language of a genuine prophecy, the root and ground of which reason furnishes, without any the least dependence on any claptrap of imagined miracle, or any reference to an imagined special revelation. The wise and worthy man speaks with more than pulpit or priestly authority, because humane principle rationally held has in itself supreme moral weight.

To the same general purport, Baron Stockmar, Prince Albert's private adviser, spoke, when the question of educating the heir to the throne was under consideration. After pointing out that modern thought and science are working great changes in religious opinion, to the disadvantage of faith in the supernatural, as this has been understood, and that society is already divided into those who reject and those who insist on miracles, Baron Stockmar proceeds to say: "The former class place their chief reliance for the improvement of society on the development of a knowledge of nature, and on our obedience to the natural laws of our being. They are persuaded that God actually governs the world; that he has instituted a system of all-pervading causation on earth, coincident with the dictates of the purest morality and the soundest religion, framed man in harmony with the system, and left him, by the exercise of his reason and the discipline of his will, to work out his own weal or woe in every stage of his existence. In other words, that a consequence of good or evil is attached by the Creator to every action of men, and that the good follows actions which conform to reason, morality, and religion; while evil is the consequence of error, passion, and injustice in their every form."

"This class regards the discoveries of science and the sound inductions of philosophy as so many revelations of the divine will for human instruction and guidance; and they view the occupation of the public mind by the supernatural dogmas of religion as an obstacle to the appreciation and practical adoption of these real revelations. . . . This class comprehends individuals who are moral in their conduct, sincerely attached to social order and just government, and whose dissent from the supernatural doctrines of Christianity is founded on deep historical research and the most serious reflection. . . . According to my observation, their numbers are considerable and increasing; and they include, not only many members of the aristocracy and learned professions, but a portion of the operative classes of respectable character and conditions. Every discovery in science and every increase in its diffusion adds to their strength; and they are much disposed to lament the slow progress which is made in the application of science to social life, in some measure, as they conceive, in consequence of the preoccupation of many excellent minds with supernatural doctrines. In looking to the future, I cannot avoid the conclusion that this party contains the seeds of important modifications in the opinions and religious institutions of the British empire."

"One fundamental difference between them and the adherents of supernatural religion lies in the distrust of human nature and its capabilities, entertained by the latter. The Orthodox believers regard the supernatural portions of Christianity as the basis which sustains its morality, and as the sole foundations of government, law, and subordination. Their chief efforts are, therefore, directed towards impressing deep and sacred convictions of their doctrines on the public mind; and, in their pulpit teaching, the natural world, with all its harmonies, adaptations, and laws, is too little brought into view, while many of them strongly deny that it is a theatre adapted for the practice of the Christian virtues."

This was said thirty years ago, when only a beginning had been made, in comparison with the present almost universal diffusion of rationalistic opinion. If there is a considerable appearance still of adherence to the old faith in miracle,—miraculous book, mediator or teacher, and church,—it is in part due to the fact that the report ecclesiastically placarded is made by the class among the nominally educated whose professional business it is to know the least possible outside the limits of traditional confession, and in part to the still more significant fact that the clergymen and ministers who more or less understand and accept what a leader among them calls "The Changed Aspect of Christian Theology" do not deem it advisable to be open and distinct, and are ingenious to the last degree in giving to new faith a face of nominal conformity to a creed of which not one characteristic constituent remains. The men of the Church, the universities, and the sects, either will not avow, or will not see, how entirely the face of the world has changed; but practical men see and confess it, and scorn the ignorance or the unvaracity which the professional teachers of religion seem unable to rise above.

A good illustration of this appears in a letter written by Sir Robert Peel to Prince Albert, Oct. 27, 1847, in criticism of Dr. Whewell's views of university instruction. The letter is as follows:—

"I think Dr. Whewell is quite wrong in his position: that mathematical knowledge is entitled to paramount consideration, because it is conversant with indisputable truths; that such departments of science as chemistry are not proper subjects of academical instruction, because there is controversy respecting important facts and principles, and constant accession of information from new discoveries, and danger that the students may lose their reverence for professors, when they discover that the professors cannot maintain doctrines as indisputable as mathematical or arithmetical truths. The Doctor's assumption, that a century should pass before new discoveries in science are admitted into the course of academical instruction, exceeds in absurdity anything which the bitterest enemy of university education would have imputed to its advocates. Are the students at Cambridge to hear nothing of electricity, or the speculations concerning its mysterious influence, its possible connection with the nervous system and with muscular action, till all doubts on the subject are at an end? Will they be at an end after the lapse of a hundred years? If the principle for which Dr. Whewell contends be a sound one, it will be difficult to deliver a lecture on theology. But the fact is that adherence to the principle, so far from exalting the character of professors and heads of houses, would cover them with ridicule. There can be nothing more useful to a young mind than to know the progressive discoveries of science, to have a history of error and the slow process by which it was corrected, to hear of the conflicting theories of the present day,—the points on which learned men differ, as well as those on which they are agreed; and the professor who told the students these things, who cautioned them against hasty conclusions, who boldly avowed that the light was not yet separated from the darkness, would be much more estimated than one who lectured about nothing but the conic sections, and such matters, although the latter proved everything that he asserted."

Although said mainly with reference to other knowledge than religious, the principle to which Mr. Peel points in these remarks applies peculiarly to study of religion, and is so understood by the cultivated world. If Dean Stanley and Dr. Martineau continue to imagine that deference to old tradition is useful, or harmless even, it is because they are so imperfectly aware what the judgment of public opinion is, and so unsuitably under the control of the peculiar motives of the pulpit, which give a sacramental character to the continuity of Church and creed, almost without regard to the relation of this to genuine and pure truth. The time is not distant when Broad Church and Liberal Christian make-believe toward the fictions and falsities of Orthodoxy will be felt to have been inexcusable hypocrisy.

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

TRANSLATED BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS AND EDITED BY
PROF. F. MAX MUELLER.

[The following circular announcement, just received from Professor Müller, will be of great interest to many of our readers.—ED.]

Comparative Theology, or a comparative study of the principal religions of mankind, is beginning to attract the attention not only of theologians, but of all who take an interest in the origin and development of religious ideas, both from an historical and philosophical point of view.*

The only sound basis for such a study is to be found in the texts recognized as sacred or canonical by the followers of each religion. They must be read and carefully examined before it is safe to consult any other works, however excellent and authoritative.

Hitherto, though there have been translations of some of the Sacred Books of the Eastern religions; there has been no comprehensive collection of them, carried out on uniform principles, and perfectly trustworthy both as regards the original texts from which the translations are made, and the scholars to whom they have been intrusted.

In the collection of the Sacred Books of the East, published under the editorship of Professor Max Müller, the most competent Oriental scholars have been selected for each department, and a uniform plan has been followed with regard to the style of the translation, the notes, and the introductions. The translation is before all things to be faithful, even at the risk of being sometimes not quite idiomatic. The notes are chiefly meant to enable any educated person to read and understand the translations. All Oriental words are transcribed according to one and the same system of transliteration, which, while it does away with the necessity of using Oriental types, will enable every Oriental scholar to know what letters are used in the original. There will be complete indices at the end of each work.

The collection is intended at first to consist of twenty-four volumes, each volume of about four hundred pages, and it is hoped to publish three such volumes in every year. Should the undertaking be successful, there will be ample material to continue the series, till all the more important works have been translated which can claim a canonical character in the religions of the East.

The works which have been selected for translation are:—

I. ANCIENT VEDIC RELIGION.—Hymns of the Rig-veda. The Satapatha-brâhmana. The Upanishads. The Grihya-sûtras of Hiranyakesin and others.

II. LAW-BOOKS IN PROSE.—The Sûtras of Apastamba, Gautama, Baudhâyana, Vâsishtha, Vishnu, etc.

III. LAW-BOOKS IN VERSE.—The Laws of Manu, Yâgyavalkya, etc.

IV. LATER BRAHMANISM.—The Bhagavadgîtâ. The Vâyu-purâna.

V. BUDDHISM.—1. Pali Documents. The Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta, the Tevigga Sutta, the Mahâsudassana Sutta, the Dhammakakkappavattana Sutta; the Suttanipâta; the Mahāvagga, the Kullavagga, and the Pâtimokkha.

2. Sanskrit Documents.—The Divyâvadâna and Saddharmapundarika.

3. Chinese Documents.—The Phû-yao King, or life of Buddha.

VI. GAINISM.—The Âkârânga Sûtra, Dasavaikâlîka Sûtra, Sûtrakritânga Sûtra, and Uttarâdhyayana Sûtra.

VII. PARSÎ RELIGION. 1. Zend Documents.—The Vendidad, Yasna, and Vispared; the Yasts and the Khordah Avesta.

2. Pahlavi and Parsi Documents.—The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, Shâyast-lâ-shâyast, Dâdistâni Dîni, Mainyôî Khard, Sikand-gumani.

VIII. MOHAMMEDANISM.—The Qur'an.

IX. CHINESE RELIGION. 1. Confucianism.—The Shû King, Shih King, Hsiâo King, Yi King, Lî Ki, Lun Yü, and Mêng-tse.

2. Taoism.—Tâo-teh King, Kwang-tsze, and Kan Ying Phien.

The following are the names of the scholars who have promised to supply translations:—

S. Beal, R. G. Bhandarkar, G. Bühler, A. Burnell, E. B. Cowell, J. Darmesteter, T. W. Rhys Davids, J. Eggeling, V. Fausbøll, H. Jacobi, J. Jolly, H. Kern, F. Kielhorn, J. Legge, F. Max Müller, H. Oldenberg, E. H. Palmer, R. Pischel, K. T. Telang, E. W. West.

The three volumes already published contain:—

Vol. I. THE UPANISHADS. Translated by F. Max Müller. Part I. The Kândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âranyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-sambhitâ-upanishad. 8vo. Cloth. Price 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. THE SACRED LAWS OF THE ARYAS, as taught in the Schools of Apastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtha, and Baudhâyana. Translated by Georg Bühler. Part I. Apastamba and Gautama. 8vo. Cloth. Price 10s. 6d.

Vol. III. THE SACRED BOOKS OF CHINA. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious Portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiâo King. 8vo. Cloth. Price 12s. 6d.

Three more volumes will be published in April, namely:—

Vol. IV. THE VENDIDAD. Translated by James Darmesteter.

Vol. V. THE BUNDAHIS, BAHMAN YAST, and SHAYAST-LÂ-SHAYAST. Translated by E. W. West.

Vol. VII. THE INSTITUTES OF VISHNU.—Translated by Professor J. Jolly.

The following volumes are also in the press, namely:—

Vol. VI. THE QUR'AN. Part I. Translated by Professor E. H. Palmer.

Vol. VIII. THE BHAGAVADGITA with other extracts from the Mahâbhârata. Translated by Kashi-nath Trimbak Telang.

Vol. IX. THE QUR'AN. Part II. Translated by Professor E. H. Palmer.

Vol. X. THE SUTTANIPATA, etc. Translated by Professor Fausbøll.

Vol. XI. THE MAHAPARINIBBANA SUTTA, THE TEVIGGA SUTTA, THE MAHASUDASSANA SUTTA, THE DHAMMAKAKKAPPAVATTANA SUTTA. Translated by T. W. Rhys Davids.

Oxford: Printed at the Clarendon Press, and published by Macmillan & Co., London, also may be had at the Clarendon Press Depository, 116 High Street, Oxford.

LATE VIEWS OF THE AGE OF THE WORLD.

Geologists, astronomers, and physicists alike have hitherto been baffled in their attempts to set up any satisfactory kind of chronometer which will approximately measure geological time, and thus give us some clew to the antiquity of our globe. It is therefore worth noting that Mr. Mellard Reade, of Liverpool, has lately contributed to the Royal Society a very suggestive paper, in which he endeavors to grapple with the question by employing the limestone rocks of the earth's crust as an index to geological time. Limestones have been in course of formation from the earliest known geological periods, but it would appear that the later found strata are more calcareous than the earlier, and that there has been a gradually progressive increase of calcareous matter. The very extensive deposition of carbonate of lime over wide areas of the ocean bottom at the present day is sufficiently attested by the recent soundings of the "Challenger." According to the author's estimate, the sedimentary crust of the earth is at least one mile in average actual thickness, of which probably one-tenth consists of calcareous matter. In seeking the origin of this calcareous matter, it is assumed that the primitive rocks of the original crust were of the nature of granite or basaltic rocks. By the disintegration of such rocks, calcareous and other sedimentary deposits have been formed. The amount of lime salts in water which drain districts made up of granites and basalts is found, by a comparison of analyses, to be on an average about 3.73 parts in 100,000 parts of water. It is further assumed that the excess areas of igneous rocks, taking an average throughout all geological time, will bear to the exposures of sedimentary rocks a ratio of about one to nine. From these and other data, Mr. Reade concludes that the elimination of the calcareous matter now found in all the sedimentary strata must have occupied at least 600,000,000 of years. This, therefore, represents the minimum age of the world. The author infers that the formation of the Laurentian, Cambrian, and Silurian strata must have occupied about 200,000,000 of years; the Old Red Sandstone, the Carboniferous, and the Poikilitic systems, another 200,000,000; and all the other strata, the remaining 200,000,000. Mr. Reade is, therefore, led to believe that geological time has been enormously in excess of the limits urged by certain physicists; that it has been ample to allow for all the changes which, on the hypothesis of evolution, have occurred in the organic world.—London (Eng.) Academy.

"DO ANIMALS have fun?" asks some unobserving individual. Of course they do. When a cow switches her tail across the face of the man who is milking her, steps along just two yards and turns to see him pick up his stool and follow, she has the most amused expression on her face possible, and if she can kick over the milk-pail she grows positively hilarious.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE WISDOM OF TRUST.

QUESTION.

"If hope be vacant,—baseless faith,—
Our dreams of future bane and bliss
The hollow menace of a wraith,
And lust of inborn selfishness:
What were the purpose, then, of life,
If this be so?" the doubter asks:
"Why stay the combat and the strife
Of that which naught but chaos masks?"

ANSWER.

To him the truster: "Spare thy pains.
Why tarriest thou with hope and fear?
The now is thine. Rack not thy brain
With sequence of thy being here.
Thy path is duty's. Our behest
Stands validly on either shore,—
To make bad better, better best:
Good follows good for evermore."

A. OBERNE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 27.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Joseph Barnsdall, $4; H. R. Russell, $1.50; H. L. Bancroft, $6.40; A. J. S. Wise, $3.25; E. H. Neymann, $3.20; Hugo Andriessen, $3.20; Miss Hattie Woods, $2; J. A. Weston, 75 cents; Jason Allard, 25 cents; Wm. E. Mott, $4 Cash, $3.20; Dr. William Park, $1; W. H. Hamlen, $3.20; New England News Co., $2.68; Julius Freyburg, $10; William Hill, $5; Chester A. Greenleaf, $1; Mrs. S. D. Curtis, $3; W. R. Conell, $1.50; J. C. Martin, $2.25; Benj. Brown, $3; E. R. Brown, $1; Frank L. Pope, $3; J. L. Cutler, $3.20; G. F. Lapham, $1.60; A. Osborne, $1.50; M. B. Linton, $6.40; Mrs. H. D. Hunnewell, $3.20; Dr. J. Church, $3; Dr. N. H. Webster, $5; T. T. Reid, $3.20; William Frothingham, $7.20; B. B. Griswold, $5; Ralph Davidson, $4.70; Z. S. Wallingford, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

*See Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Religions of India. Delivered in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey, in 1878, by F. Max Müller. Third Thousand. Longmans, Green & Co., 1878. Also, by the same author, Introduction to the Science of Religion. Longmans, 1873. Chips from a German Workshop, Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Second Edition. Longmans, 1868.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 1, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 251 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FARR, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM P. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. GRENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARAH A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged March 4.	$1,740.00
ARMAND PIONNIE, Newark, N.J.	1.00
F. E. PARSE, " "	1.00
I. W. FRANKEL, " "	1.00
N. DERRY, " "	1.00
Dr. S. S. LYON, " "	1.00
A. B. GUNUNG, " "	1.00
Mrs. A. B. GUNUNG, " "	1.00
F. KEIB, " "	1.00
F. S. GUNUNG, Paterson, N.J.	1.00
EDWARD B. HYDE, New York.	5.00
JAMES GOLDSMITH, " "	5.00
C. N. WAYLAND, " "	5.00
LOUIS STINER, " "	2.00
Dr. R. G. WIENER, " "	1.00
FREDERICK BUSE, " "	10.00
Mrs. L. C. BULLARD, " "	5.00
Miss HANNAH HART, " "	1.00
Mrs. BUNNELL, " "	5.00
THOMAS JONAS, " "	5.00
MORRIS ARNOLD, " "	2.00
L. M. KAHN, " "	1.00

JOSEPH H. LOUIS, New York.	5.00
JULIUS ADLER, " "	2.00
ISAAC SCHUER, " "	1.00
Dr. A. JACOBY, " "	10.00
N. S. MARVIN, Brooklyn, N. Y.	5.00
D. M. TREDWELL, " "	1.00
Dr. MARY PUTNAM JACOBY, New York.	10.00
Dr. ELIZABETH CUSHIER, " "	5.00
M. DAVIDSON, " "	3.00
SIMON ARP, " "	1.00
C. E. CADY, " "	1.00
Dr. T. A. MCBRIDE, " "	1.00
ARNOLD LEO, " "	5.00
B. NEUMORGEN, " "	5.00
D. KISH, " "	1.00
Dr. EMILY BLACKWELL, " "	2.00
GEORGE L. WELLMAN, " "	2.00
CHARLES WATROUS, " "	1.00
ALBERT HERSON, " "	1.00
Dr. KUNDLICH, " "	2.00
HENRY BERNHARD, " "	1.00
C. W. GERNEISEN, " "	1.00
M. W. BENJAMIN, " "	1.00
S. PHILLIPS, " "	1.00
E. MOLDOON, " "	1.00
Dr. GRUENING, " "	5.00
L. G. REED, " "	2.00
I. D. OPPENHEIM, " "	1.00
MERRITT TREMBLE, " "	5.00
Miss JENNIE TURNER, " "	1.00
Dr. LANGMAN, " "	2.00
A. LOEBELL, " "	1.00
CASH, " "	1.00
D. N. THAYER, " "	1.00
CASH, " "	1.00
CASH, " "	1.00
CASH, " "	1.00
ROBERT GOGG, " "	1.00
CHRISTIANA METZGAR, " "	5.00
H. P. LOVERMAN, " "	5.00
REUBEN ARKUSH, " "	1.00
S. F. BALLARD, " "	1.00
S. J. ARKUSH, " "	1.00
MAX H. SCHARLES, " "	1.00
JACOB HELLMAN, " "	1.00
PHILIP SCHARLES, " "	1.00
AARON HIRSH, " "	1.00
JOHN F. TONK, " "	1.00
JOSIAH FLETCHER, South Orange, N.J.	1.00
ADOLPH RAWITZER, Stafford, Conn.	1.00
Mrs. S. H. M. BELKNAP, New York.	5.00
ALEX. LEVERETT, " "	5.00
P. E. FARNSWORTH, " "	1.00
H. W. FARNSWORTH, " "	1.00
AGNES WEIL, " "	1.00
JAMES MCQUEERE, " "	1.00
JULIUS BINGE, " "	1.00
M. GOLDMAN, " "	1.00
OTTO ROTHSCHILD, " "	5.00
W. H. STUDLEY, " "	5.00
JACOB SCHOOLE, " "	5.00
RICHARD J. HINTON, " "	1.00
JAMES MORAN, " "	1.00
Mrs. E. M. ROBESON, New Bedford, Mass.	1.00
Mrs. M. V. ROSS, Florence, Mass.	1.00
R. T. HALL, Sydney, Australia.	25.00
Hon. JOHN M. FORBES, Milton, Mass.	50.00
Dr. CLARA E. ALDRICH, Portsmouth, Ohio.	1.00
A. OGBORNE, Brooklyn, N. Y.	2.00
JASON ALLARD, West Burke, Vt.	1.00

Total. $2,022.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

GARRISON THE GREAT.

Less than a year has passed since William Lloyd Garrison died; but already he has taken his place without controversy among the few, the very few, who will be gratefully remembered by men so long as there are men to remember. The reason is simple enough. He gave a long life with unreserved devotion to the establishment of NATURAL MORALITY as the foundation of human society and the test of all its institutions, customs, and laws; it is the supreme interest of mankind that this should be done; and in the long run they honor with supreme affection those who unselfishly labor to this end.

It is quite true that Garrison supposed himself to be laboring for the establishment of Christian Morality. To him, as perhaps to all of his co-workers, freedom, justice, and love were the essence of Christianity, and he opposed slavery, war, intemperance, and all forms of human iniquity, because he supposed them to be un-Christian. This was merely an intellectual mistake, common even now to the vast majority of his fellow-citizens—certain to be corrected by succeeding generations, to whom a severer but juster interpretation of Christianity will become an established truth. It does not in the least diminish the magnitude of the man or of his work; it was only part of the fashion of the time, for which no one is responsible. That equity is a law rooted in the very nature of things, impossible alike of creation, annihilation, and change,—that it has never been fully embodied in any religion, much less in any actual state of society,—that every age learns to comprehend it better and to apply it more adequately,—these are simple truisms, destined though they are to revolutionize the estimate now placed on Christianity by the world at large. The transcendent glory of Garrison is to have discerned a higher application of this eternal law of equity than was desired by his generation,—to have placed so unspeakable a value on it, and to have given so tremendous an energy to it, that he, more than any other man, at last compelled his country to abandon its besetting sin and ordain righteousness instead of iniquity. As Dr. Bartol splendidly says of Garrison, in his just published Principles and Portraits: "He was the hydrostatic paradox reduced to actual practice in civil and social affairs, holding the ocean in check with a drop; one columnar man in the other side of the scale against and resisting the drift and subsidence of the race. He was original in this ethical weight." And again: "After seasons during which fair dealing seems to have disappeared from the earth, this lustre of righteousness, like a star out of its occultation, in such an aspect and figure as that of Garrison returns."

One has but to read Oliver Johnson's new and noble book on Garrison and his Times to appreciate (if Nature has granted the gift of such appreciation) the "ethical weight" of this plain, common, not highly educated, not remarkably intellectual, but yet mighty and marvellous man. We must all thank Mr. Johnson for having so fitly and so seasonably outlined a story which, for hundreds and thousands of years, will be one of the grandest traditions of the human race. Emerson in the world of thought—Garrison in the world of action: both these, out of the millions in this century who will sleep unremembered through the centuries that succeed, are lifted up to earthly immortality by their sublime devotion to the Ethical Idea.

Former ages admired as "great" only mighty conquerors and puissant sovereigns; they revered visible power as the grandest attribute possible to man. Let the nineteenth century be the first to recognize the superiority of moral power, to single out of the crowd the humble citizen in whom it shone with such surpassing brightness, and to place on his dead brow that diadem of the people's recognition for which monarchs have sighed in vain. Yes, let this generation hand down to its successors with fitting honor the memory of him whom it reverences as morally greatest among all those who helped to free the slave from his fetters and the republic from its shame. Let the nineteenth century itself, with undelaying gratitude, set the crown of its supreme veneration on the head of GARRISON THE GREAT.

A WORD FROM THE ANTIPODES.

THE INDEX has made its way all around the globe. For several years, it has had, one may venture to say, no more diligent reader or firmer friend than a gentleman whom it has met in Australia. This gentleman is a thorough believer in the cause of free religion. But, like many believers in the cause, he is somewhat doubtful whether it can be efficiently organized. Nevertheless, he has just sent twenty-five dollars to the Free Religious Association to help forward its new enterprise, willing to see the experiment fairly tried. His word, too, in spite of his doubt, is a word of cheer; and, since he gives permission for its publication, it is here transcribed:—

"I have just recently received THE INDEX for the month of December, 1879. In the number 519, Dec. 4, I find your earnest 'Appeal' for help in the further organization of your society [Free Religious Association] and the promulgation of its principles.

"Judging from my own experience, extending over forty years, in the working of 'Free Thought' societies in England and in Australia, I am not very sanguine of any great success as the result of your labors. Nor does the recent unfortunate division into two hostile camps, of the 'National Liberal League' in America, tend to increase my hope. I am not an admirer of 'Individualism,' but I incline to the opinion that, when an idea has taken root in the minds of a few energetic men, that idea will spread without the aid of societies,—more slowly than with it, perhaps, but yet more safely, more profitably as to results.

"Nevertheless, as I am but one poor thinker, and almost a recluse, and you are a body of educated and intelligent thinkers who believe in and strongly recommend organization, I readily respond to your appeal for funds to help you in your work, by forwarding to you the sum of five pounds sterling."

If the doubters do as well as this, what ought the believers to do? If these should do as much proportionately to their faith, the Association would have no lack of means for its new activities. And I suspect that, when the new methods are fairly in operation, the class of doubters, of which our antipodal friend is a type, will disappear. For probably they will then discover that these methods do not at all interfere with individual liberty, but that their chief aim is to nourish and circulate ideas and to get these rooted in the minds of energetic men and women, whence they will issue in some form of practical benefit; and then to furnish facilities by which these men and women, scattered through many communities, may compare thoughts and work with each other to the better advantage of all. This seems to me to be the substance of what the Free Religious Association proposes to accomplish by its enlarged methods of activity; and it looks now as if Publication would be a dominant agency in the work.

W. J. P.

A LETTER FROM MAX MUELLER.

The following letter from one of the most distinguished scholars of modern times, whose name stands second to none in the illustrious list of those who are revealing to Europe and America the wonderful treasures of Oriental literature and Oriental religion, was evidently not intended for publication; but we believe that the writer will generously consent to our sharing with the friendly readers of THE INDEX the great encouragement it has given in the continued prosecution of a work which is strangely misunderstood and purposely misrepresented to-day, yet which will be well remembered and appreciated in time to come:—

7, NORHAM GARDENS, OXFORD, 9 March, '80.

DEAR SIR:—

I feel truly obliged to you for sending me the numbers of THE INDEX. It keeps me au courant with intellectual, social, and religious movements which are going on in your country, and of which other papers prefer to take no notice. It reminds me sometimes of Prof. Palmieri's Seismeter, which tells the observer of rollings and rumblings beneath, when all above ground seems quiet, green, and sunny. The more we know of those subterranean commotions, the better shall we be prepared to meet them. Some of the threatened eruptions may seem dangerous, may be dangerous; but until humanity has become an extinct volcano, we must learn to face them. Besides, in spite of some smoke and sulphurous odor, there is a straightforwardness, honesty, and true nobility in the most of the religious and social impulses which you register in your paper, very different from the lava that was seething in the crater of the eighteenth century. I admire your fearlessness and kindness of heart; they are the true and trusty armor of the friends of truth.

I have just been trying to collect the numbers of THE INDEX, to have them bound. Do you think you could send me the missing numbers which my book-binder has marked on the enclosed slip? I should feel truly obliged.

You have not yet expressed your opinion of my Hibbert Lectures on the Origin of Religion. I feel convinced they contain the only true solution of the problem of all problems—How does the Finite reach the Infinite? All other metaphysical and religious problems depend on this—are only variations of this fundamental problem. I have placed the scene of the battle in India, but it requires no knowledge of Sanskrit to translate my story into English or German. Believe me, yours very truly,

F. MAX MUELLER.

"WHY WE HAVE NO MAUDSLEYS AMONG US."

Under the above caption, Dr. George M. Beard contributed the following striking letter to the New York Nation of March 11:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

Sir,—In one of your late issues, you ask very pertinently the question why we do not have in this country men of the capacity of Dr. Maudsley to discuss the subject of insanity. As the same question precisely had occurred to me on reading the two volumes of his last edition, I venture, with your permission, to state briefly the answer, so far as it is possible to frame it.

1. It is impossible for works of an American origin to obtain any audience, if they are very far in advance of the average thought. If Maudsley's book had been first published in this country, it would have secured no recognition until it had been stamped with European approval; and it would have cost the author most of his friends, if he had any, and would certainly have blocked and impeded, if not entirely cut off, his pathway to professional success. Even in England, as I have reason to know, he has not entirely escaped.

2. Philosophical works of an original character cannot obtain in this country any considerable amount of intelligent criticism, either favorable or adverse. An original thinker may attain great influence and fame, even though his works have no audience, or almost none, as is shown in the lives of Hume and Young; but criticism of some kind, public or private, is indispensable to power or fame. If it do not come before the death of the author, it must come after, as with Montaigne. When Maudsley's book was first published (in 1867), the oldest and the leading medical journal of this country devoted page after page to show how absurd and worthless a treatise it was, and what a terrible influence it would have on society. The consequence is that all our philosophical ideas are either direct importations or reimportations; that is, originated here and approved abroad.

Our ideas, like our silks, must have the stamp of Europe upon them, even if manufactured here.

The above remarks need two qualifications: First—Philosophical works of a scientific character of foreign birth are more widely read here than in any other country. They are read, however, with the emotions more than with the intellect, as fables and tales, and, without any certain conception of the philosophy that so much interests them, the readers do not know what side the author is on. It is this fact that saves the few thinkers we have from social ostracism and actual failure in life. Copernicus, as we all know, was saved in the same way. Secondly—There is constant and rapid improvement in all these respects: criticisms are becoming more valuable, and the audience for works that contain new ideas is widening; but even now very few individuals and few journals are able to decide whether any new contribution to thought is a great truth or a great folly until England and Germany have been heard from.

At the present time, it would appear that, in spite of all the popularization of German thought and modes of thinking among the English-speaking peoples, Germany is the only country where one can think without paying a tax so heavy as not to be almost prohibitory; and German criticism and indorsement are what a man who is organized for thinking chiefly cares for. GEO. M. BEARD

NEW YORK, March 8, 1880.

We wish to note here that, even at its first appearance, the originality and genius of Dr. Maudsley received prompt recognition in this country. At the request of the then editor of the North American Review, we wrote a critical notice of Dr. Maudsley's Physiology and Pathology of the Mind, which filled about nine pages of the Review for January, 1868. In this article we said: "The few insignificant blemishes we have noticed are as nothing compared with the solid merits of the book. It is a work of great power, and we anticipate for it a wide influence." And we may as well add that the editor omitted in our article several passages expressing a still stronger admiration of the ability and originality of Dr. Maudsley's work—probably preferring not to commit the Review to what he may have deemed a hazardous indorsement of a new writer, whose reputation was yet to be established.

It has given us pleasure, however, to see that time has abundantly justified the high estimate we placed on Dr. Maudsley's work at the time of its first publication. There is but one opinion now among scholars as to his merit. We believe that time will no less justify our admiration, already repeatedly and promptly expressed in these columns, of the originality, power, and immense force of truth manifested in Colonel Stickney's A True Republic. Here is a new writer of genius, on a topic which concerns most closely the destiny of this great republic; and, despite certain serious faults (especially of literary form and arrangement), he has by no means yet received the recognition which we unhesitatingly predict for him in the near future. How to recover for the people the political power which is now fast slipping out of their hands into those of the menacing Machine,—how to obtain for the public service the benefits of the highest ability and best character to be found among the people,—how practically to establish democratic government on its only sure basis, natural intelligence and natural morality,—these are problems which can only be solved in the manner that Colonel Stickney points out. Only a little in advance of public opinion, we hail this prescient and most forceful thinker as one whom his countrymen will yet delight to honor—those most of all who most love truth, justice, and freedom.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

SOME TWENTY WOMEN of Florence, Mass., voted at the recent town meeting.

REV. A. B. DUFRESNE, the French Catholic priest at Holyoke, Mass., has been arrested for selling liquor in the church basement, and heavily fined.

A SON OF STARR KING, now in California, a youth of about eighteen, and said to resemble his father in person and intellect, is to enter Harvard in the fall.

REV. MR. HEPWORTH has got back from Palestine, and is engaged in Ireland as one of the Committee for the distribution of the New York Herald Relief Fund.

REV. DR. HEDGE recently discoursed on "Ghosts" before the Philosophical Society, Cambridge, Mass. It is not the first time that a hedge has evoked such imaginations.

MRS. ABBA GOOLD WOOLSON is delivering a series of lectures on "English Literature," in connection with English history, at the parlors of Ex-Governor Claflin, in Washington, to audiences of high appreciation.

MRS. DIAZ, author of the William Henry Letters and other well-known juvenile books, is giving a course of "Household Talks" to good audiences, in the parlors of Dr. Zakrzewska, Roxbury district, Boston.

REV. DR. JOHN HALL, the distinguished Irish

Presbyterian minister of New York, finds that it pays better to do the Lord's work than some of his professional brethren. His salary has just been raised to $15,000.

THE PHILADELPHIA Methodist Conference has expelled the Rev. T. B. Miller from the ministry, and suspended the Rev. William Major for one year, on account of financial irregularities in connection with a Medical College with which they were associated.

INTELLIGENCE OF Mr. O. B. Frothingham has lately been received from Naples, where he is temporarily sojourning, through a letter from Mrs. Frothingham to a friend in New York city. He is cheerful, though his restoration to health proceeds but gradually.

THE SALVATION ARMY is concentrating its prayers upon the conversion of Mayor Cooper. Would it not be well for it to confine itself to such personal labors? When the army is done with Mayor Cooper, there are many other notable persons that might be experimented upon in New York and elsewhere.

MR. CARLYLE has not been well of late, having been unable to take even carriage exercise. He sees no society beyond his own family circle and a few literary friends, including Mr. Froude and Mr. Lecky. An occasional failure of memory is said to be the only sign of mental weakness shown by the Chelsea sage.

EDWIN ARNOLD, so well known as a poet that few knew him as a newspaper man, has resigned his place at the head of the London Telegraph, and it has been offered to Mr. Drail, who declined it. The London Times has also lost its chief editor, Mr. Chenery, who has been more successful in his Oriental studies than in journalism, having resigned.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Congregationalist thus writes from Washington of one of its notable women: "Vinnie Ream Hoxie is another young woman who has succeeded in her chosen work, that of sculpture. Her statue of Lincoln, for which she received $15,000, whatever the critics may say of it, pleases many a soldier who loved the great man. Her statue of Farragut, which she is now having cast in bronze at the Navy Yard, where we saw her in her working-dress,—a small, winsome woman with dark eyes and darker curls, who puts her heart into her work,—will give her $20,000 more. She has built for herself a large brick home, which contains many beautiful, life-size statues from her own hand. Among these stand her harp and guitar, upon both of which she plays."

M. CREMIEUX, the recently deceased French statesman, never lost an opportunity of telling his young friends how happy life can be made through the choice of a sympathetic wife who stands on an intellectual level with her husband. This remark he would fondly illustrate by a reference to his own domestic happiness. Often and often he would tell his friends that, when he selected his bride, he was the first in France who demolished a barrier of prejudices which prevented a Jew of Spanish extraction from selecting for his spouse a maiden of German Jewish origin. He declared a short time before his death that the affection which he bore to his bride in her young days had made his married life appear to him, even amidst many trying sorrows, a cloudless day of domestic bliss.

MR. JOHN BRIGHT, the English Liberal, has written to a Georgian these pointed words: "As for your old slave South, you will have few Englishmen settling there, so long as the temper of your people continues to exist. We hear of ill-treatment to the negro, and of the hostile disposition of many of your white population toward families who come from the North. I know not how much of this is true; but, so long as the belief in its truth exists, your Southern States will make small progress in comparison with the North and West. You have soil and climate, but you will not easily or speedily shake off the old curse; and men from Europe will prefer a country where slavery has not prevailed, and where the negro is not a considerable portion of your population. They will think that North and West offer a better field for them, with more real freedom and less of the elements of disorder."

FOREIGN.

DR. ANZOUX, the well-known anatomist, has died in Paris. He was the inventor of plastic anatomy, or reproduction in wax and pasteboard of the parts of the body.

A NUMBER OF English and Irish Catholics will go on a pilgrimage to Lourdes in a few weeks, headed by Cardinal Manning, who will be accompanied by several members of the nobility.

WE UNDERSTAND that the Russian Minister of the Interior has under consideration a project for the colonization of Saghalien by several thousand peasants from the province of Penza, during the ensuing summer.

IT LOOKS AS though there were danger of overdoing the opposition to the Jesuits in France. The Senate has just rejected the seventh clause of the Ferry Bill by a majority of nineteen. That clause provided that Jesuits should not be allowed to teach in any schools, public or private; and it was thought, even by some of the foes of the Jesuits, that it was a very illiberal and unjust provision.

THE REPORT OF THE Challenger Expedition promises to be almost a unique work when completed. It is to extend to fifteen volumes, and will cost to produce upwards of £4,000. It is not quite easy to understand why only a limited number of copies are to be printed, and why these are to be distributed solely among learned societies. Once produced, the whole cost would be greatly lessened if the work were permitted to have a general sale.

THE INCREASE in the German army is arousing the very gravest apprehensions in Paris. In official circles, the question is constantly being asked, What enemy is Prince Bismarck afraid of? It is, of course, possible that he may have cognizance of Russian designs upon Germany; but the prevailing impression is that these new preparations mean hostility to France. It is obvious that Germany cannot forever continue to bear the crushing burden of her present armaments, and people ascribe to Prince Bismarck the wish to thoroughly overwhelm France before the Germans commence to rebel against the present taxation. But the mood of the French nation is now eminently pacific, and, however much the wily Chancellor may try to pick a quarrel, he will have to go very far and show his hand more openly than he usually cares to do, ere he succeeds in making France fight.—Examiner.

THE SHEFFIELD Independent, of the 6th inst., contains the following item: "A few workmen, who have learned to appreciate the museum established at Walkley by Mr. Ruskin, have opened a subscription to defray the cost of a wing to the building. The last time Mr. Ruskin visited it, he made important additions to his magnificent collection of art treasures. There are there gems of almost priceless value, that cannot be displayed. The curator, Mr. Swan, and his wife take almost as deep an interest in the museum as the founder himself. Mr. Swan talked the matter over with some visitors. The brief list was shown to the founder, and, when Mr. Ruskin saw one of the men, he addressed him by name, and thanked him for his shilling. Art students from other towns take lodgings at Walkley, and stay for a week or two, in order that they may attend the museum daily and study the art treasures therein contained. Yesterday Mr. G. J. Holyoake, who is an old friend of Mr. Ruskin's, visited the museum; and he not only expressed his willingness to contribute to the fund, but promised to solicit subscriptions from his friends in Sheffield, Birmingham, and elsewhere. Had he known what a cabinet of precious treasures there is at Walkley, and that funds were needed to enlarge the building, he believes he could have obtained the entire sum in New York, where Mr. Ruskin is held in honor."

Communications.

"WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The above proposition, like every other, has its advocates and opponents. Now both parties are, it seems to me, right. One side affirms that every thing is right, or, to use another term, good; the other, that some things are wrong, or evil.

Evil is a stimulus to progress. That which is a stimulus to progress is good. Therefore evil is good. Every railroad horror that occurs, for example, is an added stimulus to the production of conditions which will render its recurrence impossible. Therefore it is good as well as evil: good, in that it tends to the ultimate prevention of similar horrors; evil, in that it is productive of present misery.

In the passage of mankind from a low to a perfected condition, fraud and violence, in all their forms, are inevitable. Therefore, although we justly term them wrong, hold their perpetrators responsible, and exert ourselves to eradicate them, it is yet right that they occur. That is, the Infinite cannot be held responsible for creating us under conditions which render fraud and violence, for the present, inevitable. For he could not have created us under different conditions. Different conditions would have produced, not us, but personalities answering to the different conditions. Under existing conditions, we are: under other conditions, we should have been not.

Wrong or evil is right or good, because without it progress would be impossible. Progress, in its present stage at least, involves wrong-doing. Wrong-doing involves its remedial consequences. Result, the wrong-doing is outgrown.

If it can be proved that, absolutely speaking, there is no originality, it can be demonstrated that, while relatively there is wrong, absolutely there is no wrong. Originality requires time. Between the production of the old and the production of the new, or original, there must be an interval of time. Now it does not matter how much time has transpired or may hereafter transpire, nothing ever has been, nor ever can be, added to eternity; for, being without a commencement, it can never be more than it always has been, i. e., infinite. Absolutely speaking, therefore, there is no time.

Now, as originality requires time, and as, absolutely speaking, there is no time, it will at once be seen that nothing absolutely original ever has been, nor ever can be, produced. Hence, all growth, change, progress, all new forms,—in a word, all increase is, in the absolute, apparent, not real. Therefore, everything, in the absolute, is at this moment precisely the same as it always has been and always will be. Relatively, therefore, there is wrong, because, relatively, there is change or progress. Absolutely, however, there is no wrong, because, absolutely, there is no change or progress.

Most people, however, will find it extremely difficult to admit that the existence of evil is right, not unless it can be shown, merely, that it is a means of discipline for the race, whereby it acquires a knowledge of and control over the causes of that which operates against its welfare, thereby attaining a condition of comparative perfection, but unless it can be shown also that it ultimately in the permanent benefit of themselves individually. And permanent benefit, a benefit which will be to any extent a compensation for the ills endured by man, can accrue to the individual only through immortality.

Now the argument for whatever is, is right, is an argument for immortality.

It is evident, without further elucidation, that, if the argument for non-originality in the absolute is conclusive, it is equally conclusive for infinite intelligence. And as infinite intelligence involves eternity and excludes progress, so finite intelligence involves immortality, and necessitates progress.

If we assume the existence of one, absolute, all-inclusive substance, it is not a mere assumption, however; for it is evident that two absolutes are impossible; as they would necessarily limit each other, and to limit is to affect, to affect is to prove akin. Take matter and spirit, for instance. Some might argue that they are the same in substance, for the reason that two absolute opposites could not coöperate; but the truth, however, is, as aforesaid, that two absolutes are impossible,—the simple fact of their existence proving their substantial oneness.

To resume: there being one, absolute, all-inclusive substance, it follows that man, the finite, is of and from the Infinite. Hence, in substance, he is the same as the Infinite. Therefore, he is himself, so to say, potentially infinite; that is, as he must always be potentially, never actually, infinite, he never ceases to progress, and is, consequently, immortal.

In conclusion, the term "Whatever is, is right," does not imply, as some seem to think that it does, that wrong is to be fostered and perpetuated, be winked at, or pass unbuked; but that it is simply a temporary condition, necessary, and leading to a higher one, and to be dispensed with as soon as possible. E. B. B.

ORTHODOXY NOT DYING.

As I am brought almost daily into intimate relations with those who hold the popular traditional faith in supernaturalism, who look upon nature and life in no other than the authorized ecclesiastical way, I am led to ask whether those of us who have forsaken this mode of thinking for the more scientific, philosophical, and exact, do not fail to appreciate the empirical power which the popular faith gives the clergy and those who lead and influence the currents of emotion, prejudice, and passion in society at large.

The philosophic mind is less easily moved than the common mass of men, women, and children.

At the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, at Saratoga last summer, I met only the natural method of thought, the scientific spirit. Returning to my country village home, I found the air charged with supernaturalism and intolerant of any doubt. And now, as I go into a popular assembly, I see hundreds of human beings swayed and held in suspense by the spirit of the speaker's faith in supernaturalism. The belief is wide-spread and deep and strong that God will move the hearts and lives of men in answer to prayer. Hence the churches are strong, active, enthusiastic. They control public opinion. They make the state of society. They spend vast sums of money to perpetuate and extend their faith. They have courage and perseverance because of their faith.

Now, this being the case, do not the liberals and scientists who ignore or reject supernaturalism voluntarily, deliberately, unwisely cut themselves off from the most accessible avenues of influence, from the sources of greatest power, satisfaction, and usefulness?

I am not ignorant of what may be said in defence of the leaders of new thought. But, if supernatural religion be real (and we have to admit the great comfort and joy men derive from it), do not such men as Prof. Marsh, in teaching the supremacy of natural evolution, contravene and abrogate the order of the Church and the work of evangelists and priests? Observation teaches that mankind, whether civilized or uncivilized, hold sympathy and feeling supreme over thought and reason. The masses are not reached by reason, and are carried by appeals to emotion and sentiment.

If preponderance of belief is ground for certitude, as has been claimed, then are we not one-sided and unphilosophical when we fail to consider and fully appreciate the great force of Orthodox supernaturalism in the popular faith?

It is claimed that science is making inroads upon the old superstitions. It may be true in a measure; but supernatural faith, so called, holds its own, and millions of children are brought up to cherish and defend it.

Liberals deceive themselves, who imagine that Orthodoxy is dying out. It is strong and growing, and the opposition is scattered and disorganized. In many communities all over the country, the dominant clergy are successful in suppressing all expression of progressive ideas.

Those in more favored localities do not understand it, but the old faith is deep-rooted and growing vigorously in many a dark corner. I have called attention to these facts, because I think there is a tendency to underestimate the strength and wide-spread hold of the Orthodox faith. A. N. ADAMS.

FAIR HAVEN, Vt., Feb. 22, 1880.

"DIDN'T YOU 'SPLAIN to me dat if I settled up dat account you would give me a 'lowance?" said the darkey to the merchant. "Yes, I did say so, Sam," said the merchant. "If you are ready to settle your bill now, I will make a good allowance," and the merchant waited for the colored individual to pull out his pocket-book. "Well, sir, I hasn't got the money jus' now; but I thought I'd come in and get de 'lowance. My wife wants a shawl."

FREETHINKERS' SCHOOLS.

NEITHER OF THE DIFFERING TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE, NOR KORAN, NOR ANY PRAYERS.

At a meeting, a week ago yesterday, of the women's section of the German socialists, headed by Mrs. Becker and Mrs. Stiebling and others, the wives of well-to-do east side Germans, thirty-seven families paid in advance for a month's tuition of their sixty-seven children in the new school that was opened at No. 10 Stanton Street, on Saturday. Mr. William Gundlach, of No. 170 Ludlow Street, was engaged as the teacher. He was educated in music in Germany, and, since his arrival in America, has been a music-teacher; and was teacher of music in the Sunday-school that the German socialists have supported for many months in Fourth Street. At length, he became the leader of that school; and now he is to be at the head of a like school that is to be open on both Saturdays and Sundays,—a school in which the pupils are to be taught in German exclusively, and in which there will be neither prayers nor any reading of the Bible. As Mrs. Dr. Hoffman, of Seventh Street and Second Avenue, expressed it, "It will be an educational institution in which the child will not be taught from either the Koran or one of the three widely differing translations of the Bible, nor will he hear any Pharisaical prayers therein." Briefly, religion is to be rigidly excluded from this school, as it is from the Fourth Street Sunday-school.

Other Socialists' Schools.

"It is," Mr. Gundlach says, "a little beginning of our own, which we intend to work out without asking for assistance, as was done by Mr. Dewey, who founded the first school of the kind in this country in Newark, N.J. There are many schools like it in Germany, and already one in West Forty-fourth Street is flourishing, having sixty-three pupils. It was opened on the first Saturday in February last; and, after I am fairly started in my school at No. 10 Stanton Street, another school is to be opened in Yorkville and one in Harlem, and we hope ere long to have our schools in every ward in the city. The terms on the east side of the city, where children are numerous, will be much lower than on the west side. For example, the charge to families that send their children to the Stanton Street school will be only fifty cents per family per month; whereas, on the west side, it is one dollar per month per pupil. I am not a member of the socialists' party; but I am a freethinker, and the children are to be so taught that they may become good freethinkers. They are to be taught to obey the laws and be good citizens; that the American flag is the flag of their own nation, and that under it there is freedom of thought and freedom of speech; that they must be always on the side of truth; and that they must live in obedience to the laws of nature. In short, they are to be taught in the light of modern science."

Only on Saturdays and Sundays.

When asked whether the founders of the Stanton Street school contemplate any additional days of instruction at any future time, Mr. Gundlach answered: "Oh, no: the public schools teach in English much better than we can hope to teach. We shall teach in German on Saturdays and Sundays, without the prayers and the Bible reading of the public schools, and we shall teach the truths of nature. We shall keep the children out of the Sunday-schools, and teach them to be freethinkers."

"But if your children attend the public schools on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, and they are hived in your school on Saturdays and Sundays, where will be their time for rest and recreation?"

Mr. Gundlach answered that the children are to be kept in school at No. 10 Stanton Street for two hours only on Saturdays and Sundays, and that they are not to be required to commit lessons to memory at home, as the public-school children are. "And, besides," he continued, "we shall not keep them indoors a minute longer on Sundays than the people who call themselves good Christians do, and there will be ample time for their play. We don't intend to cram them: instead, we shall have easy lessons in school hours in reading, writing, geography, and history, and in science, according to the age and attainments of the child."—New York Herald.

THE SECRET OF NIHILISM.

M. Leroy-Beaulieu, who has, during the last two or three years, been contributing a series of very interesting studies on Russian politics and society to the Revue des Deux Mondes, makes in the number of February 15 an apparently valuable attempt to throw light on the most obscure question of contemporary politics, the composition and aims of the Nihilist sect; for sect, rather than party or faction, it seems to be. There have been before now many secret societies in various countries and at various times, seeking to accomplish political changes by acts of violence directed against the constituted authorities. In other words, political conspirators using assassination or arson or brigandage as means are nothing new. But we believe in all previous cases the conspirators have had behind them some well-known condition of public opinion, and have been the champions of some definite and easily described form of popular discontent; and, if not connected with a regular political organization, have at least had in view the same ends as some large or small body of visible enemies of the Government. Those, therefore, who condemned the instrumentalities to which the conspirators resorted, as in the case of the Italian Carbonari, for example, or the Irish Fenians, had no difficulty in finding out what they sought, and in pointing to large numbers of peaceable and well-disposed citizens who shared their opinions to a greater or less degree. Who the Nihilists are, however; to what extent the Russian people of any class sympathize with them; what is the exact nature of the changes they desire to bring about; what they would substitute for the régime of which they apparently desire the overthrow; what principle or idea or motive it is which sustains them in the dreadful conflict which they are carrying on with the Government, and enables them, apparently without difficulty, to obtain the needed supply of agents of the most extraordinary fortitude and audacity, and to maintain their courage in the teeth of terrible punishment and frequent failures,—are questions to which, up to the present moment, no satisfactory answer has come from any quarter.

Turgeneff's novels have made every one familiar with the prevalence of Nihilism among the young Russians of the educated class as a form of strong Pessimism, which, however, is no novelty. A sense of the vanity of all that exists, of all efforts, of all hopes, of all knowledge, of all fruition, of all human institutions and relations, is a mental condition by which the educated youth of many generations past has been more or less ravaged, and with which the world is now so familiar that it is frequently treated as one of the phenomena of physical immaturity and growth. But no Western reader of Turgeneff's books a few years ago ever dreamed that we should witness in our time the conversion of this disgust with human society into a motive of action hardly less powerful, apparently, than that which sent the early Christians unflinchingly to martyrdom. The Nihilists, too, do not seem to have any founder or prophet; that character has been ascribed to Tchernytcherski, who has recently died in Siberia after eighteen years of exile; but his works contain little which is not found in those of Lassalle and Marx and the English economists. In other words, he preached great social changes, but his new society was to be built on old foundations. He was, in short, little else than a somewhat mystical political economist of the advanced Socialist school. He, as well as the western reformers of the same type, would have used most of the existing social and political machinery in regenerating society. The Nihilists, on the contrary, as far as can be ascertained, insist on absolute destruction of everything that can be called a social institution—government, society, family, and religion—before they will even talk of the order which is to succeed. One of them was asked six or seven years ago what his doctrines were, and he replied, "Take the earth and heaven, church and state, take kings and Deity, and spit on them,—that's our doctrine." Turgeneff relates that at Heidelberg, in 1865, a Nihilist paper was issued by Russian students there, who had been expelled from their own colleges, which had for its motto, "I spit on all comers." This is not in Russian as strong an expression of contempt as in English, but it is sufficiently strong.

The rapid growth of this state of mind M. Leroy-Beaulieu ascribes to the vague expectation and unrest excited by the emancipation of the serfs and other reforms of the present Emperor, and to the great increase within twenty-five years of collegiate education in which literature largely predominates. That the reforms, thoroughly material though they were, should have led to wild hopes and stimulated social speculation among the classes which have leisure for it, is easy enough to understand. The same phenomenon has been witnessed elsewhere. The overthrow of the French monarchy produced a widespread and peculiarly vivid sense of the near approach of some sort of great social transformation, in which most of the more prominent existing miseries of human life would either disappear or be greatly mitigated. Great changes either in the distribution of property, or in the relations of men before the law, in fact, have always and everywhere had a strong influence on the nerves, either exciting or depressing, and have opened up large vistas either of possible increased misery or of possible increased opportunity of enjoyment.

But there appears to be no evidence whatever that this influence of the reforms has reached the Russian peasantry. The possession and regulation of the common land in the village community called the Mir had made them familiar enough with changes in the ownership of land to prevent the emancipation from having in their eyes the character of a revolution, and they appear to be thus far completely untouched by the passion for social equality, so much so that the Nihilists have been unable even to make them comprehend it. M. Leroy-Beaulieu gives some amusing illustrations of the failure of their attempts at propagandism in this field. The peasantry are not only unfamiliar with the nomenclature of European Radicalism, but they seem unable to lay hold of its fundamental ideas. Nevertheless, it seems possible that their familiarity with the process of redistributing landed property, which they witness in the Mir every year, might yet be made the means of initiating them into the mysteries of social revolution. Thus far, however, no impression whatever has been made on them by the Nihilists or any other body of malcontents. The Nihilists apparently get no recruits and no assistance from them. None of those arrested during the past two or three years have come from the peasant class. They have generally been students, or Government employés, or small shop-keepers, or traders, or old soldiers. The core of the movement seems to be composed of students, both male and female, in whose pessimism the recent reforms have sown the seeds of an immense and fanatical faith in the possibility of a sort of materialistic heaven on earth as soon as the ground has been cleared of existing institutions. And this faith has many of the characteristics of a religious enthusiasm of the old sort. Many of the young men and women on whom it has seized are known to have given up wealth and social position and luxury to become part of the people whose misery they expect to put an end to. They have made themselves laborers and artisans, and entered workshops on small daily wages, so as to have a full sense of the sorrows and privations of the people; and most of the propagandists of this sort are, as might be expected, women. In fact, it is among the women that the new faith shows itself in the strangest ways. They have furnished Nihilism with its most courageous missionaries and martyrs, and with the most audacious expression of its contempt for social conventions. Many of them have married, while solemnly devoted to a life of celibacy, for the mere convenience of being able to live and travel with a married woman's freedom, but without any intention of filling a wife's position. Solovieff, who made the first attempt on the Emperor's life, seems to have had a wife of this sort. On the other hand, these marriages seem frequently to be made for the sole purpose of enabling the couple thus legally united to display their contempt for the institution of matrimony by the subsequent practice of free love. This use of the marriage contract has played a prominent part as an incident in a Nihilist novel by Tchernytcherski. Their readiness to put their own lives in peril of course makes the sacrifice of such other lives as seems necessary to carry out their objects a regrettable but not very serious feature in their work. They blow up the soldiers in the guard-house in order to get at the Emperor, with as little hesitation as they would kill them in battle. They give their martyrs, too, a sort of poetic canonization, and preserve their memory in hymns of greater or less literary merit. The opinion of the western world—that is, of foreign nations—counts for nothing with them, owing to the deep-seated belief which has long pervaded the Russian educated class, and the counterpart of which may be found in our own Western States, that Russia is a peculiar country, which has nothing to learn from old Europe, and is destined to evolve a new social and political system of its own, to which old Europe will make no contribution either in theory or practice.

This complete emancipation, even of a small class, from the dominion not only of religion, but of all the received social morality, and of what is called the common sense of existing civilization, would a few years ago have been considered impossible. It is not surprising, therefore, that some observers should now pronounce it an epidemic disease, in the nature of hysteria, growing out of the unhealthy physical condition of the student or literary class in Russia, and the absence of any career for them calculated to maintain the proper balance of their faculties. But this will not account for the ease with which they make converts among persons without any tincture of letters at all, and command at pleasure, for the most desperate enterprises, agents drawn from various callings. The more probable explanation, if explanation it can be called, of the phenomenon is that we are witnessing the display in a very striking form of some of the peculiarities of temperament of the Slav race, of which, in spite of the large space of European soil it has covered ever since the fall of the Roman Empire, but very little has as yet been known. But it is certain that there is no other great division of the population of the western world in which race characteristics have been preserved in such purity, which has been so little modified by crossing with other breeds, and in which the earlier founts of feeling and motive have been so little affected by modern civilization. The growth of the Russian Empire, which now furnishes the great mystery and marvel of recent history, has brought this race for the first time prominently into view, and it may be that Nihilism is but the first of the surprises which its full contact with the ideas of the older world has in store for us. —Nation, March 11.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The North American Review for April has for its leading article a paper entitled "McClellan's Last Service to the Republic," which covers the whole period of McClellan's military career, from the flank movement to the James to the battle of Antietam. It is intended to vindicate the General against the charge that he was over-cautious and unnecessarily slow in his movements, and contains many statements of an interesting character. Sir Francis Hincks contributes a paper on the "Relations of Canada with the United States." The author's principal object is to show that the recently enacted Canadian Tariff is not an act of retaliation against the United States for their refusal to establish reciprocal free trade between the two countries in products that are natural to both. Canada, he says, is desirous of renewing the reciprocity treaty, and is ready to concede all reasonable demands. The Rev. David Swing writes about "The Failure of the Southern Pulpit." According to him, the Southern Pulpit is without influence on public opinion in the South, whereas it might be, and ought to be, a great engine for the moral and material regeneration of the people. The discussion of the third-term question, begun in the February number of the Review, is continued in the present number by the Hon. George S. Boutwell, who insists that, whatever may have been the practice and the teaching of "the Fathers" with respect to a third term, circumstances make it in the highest degree expedient that General Grant be again elected to the presidency. Charles Stewart Parnell sets forth the reforms in the laws of land tenure which are advocated by himself and his political associates, under the heading "The Irish Land Question." The Book Notices are by Mr. Edward Cary.

SMYTHE was telling some friends about a wonderful parrot. "Why," said he, "that parrot cries 'Stop, thief!' so naturally that every time I hear it I stop. Now what are you all laughing about?"

JESTINGS.

A HARDY SEAMAN, who had escaped one of the recent shipwrecks upon our coast, was asked by a good lady how he felt when the waves rolled over him. He replied, "Wet, ma'am,—very wet!"

ONE OF OUR preachers said on Sunday afternoon: "The little good any of us can do must be done with our hearts thumping against the hearts of other men." And every young woman in church looked at every other young woman, and smiled approvingly.

CINDERELLA's glass slipper has been smashed into smithereens. It was not made of glass (verre) at all, but of fur (vair). And a person hired to write paragraphs for the Graphic—he could never have been a child—unfeelingly says that "writing verre instead of vair was a slipper the pen."

SEVEN YOUNG LADIES received the degree of A.B. at Northampton, not long since. The Lowell Courier asks: "But how can a young woman be a bachelor?" It is all clearly explained: A.B., in such cases, means after bachelors, or that such young ladies are qualified for matrimony.—Cambridge Tribune.

"SO YOU WANT to marry my daughter, do you?" said the father to twenty-two years' growth of trembling manhood. "Yes, sir: I like her, and—and—" "How can you support her? What salary do you get?" "Oh, my salary's small, but I'd come and—and—live—with you!"—New York Express.

MR. CURTIS once asked Mr. Greeley, in response to a similar question put to him by the great editor: "How do you know, Mr. Greeley, when you have succeeded in a public address?" Mr. Greeley, not averse to the perpetration of a joke at his own expense, replied, "When more stay in than go out."

ON THE RIVER: "What's the matter, Alfred? You look uneasy." "Well, my wife, who is fond of swimming, dived off the boat some time ago and has not yet come to the surface. I am afraid that something must have happened to her." "How long has she been under?" "About two hours."

"IF YOU MARRY GRACE," exclaimed an irate father to his son, "I will cut you off without a cent, and you won't have so much as a piece of pork to boil in the pot." "Well," replied the young man, "Grace before meat," and he immediately went in search of a minister.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

A GENTLEMAN in a draper's shop had the misfortune to tread on a lady's skirt. She turned around, her face flushed with anger, but, seeing the gentleman was a stranger, she smiled complacently, saying: "I beg pardon, sir. I was going to be in a dreadful passion: I thought it was my husband."—French newspaper.

A MINISTER once told Wendell Phillips that, if his business in life was to save the negroes, he ought to go to the South where they were and do it. "That is worth thinking of," replied Phillips; "and what is your business in life?" "To save men from hell," replied the minister. "Then go there, and attend to your business!" said Mr. Phillips.

A LITTLE GIRL who was spending her first month on a farm in the country was asked, "What do you like best in the country?" Replied the child, "I like the country because there are no corners! When I am home, mother tells me not to go farther than the corner of the street; but don't you see there are no corners here, and I can go anywhere!"

"I WANT TO SELL you an encyclopædia," said a book-agent to one of our foremost pork-men the other day, who, by the way, is better posted on pork than he is on books. "What do I want with your encyclopædia?" snarled the pork-man. "I couldn't ride one if I had it!" He thought it was a new variety of velocipede.—Cin. Saturday Night.

A CINCINNATI paper tells this story: "I want to sell you an encyclopædia," said a book-agent to one of our foremost pork men the other day, who, by the way, is better posted on pork than he is on books. "What do I want with your encyclopædia?" snarled the pork man: "I couldn't ride one, if I had it!" He thought it was a new variety of velocipede.

"WHO'S YOUR PASTOR, my dear?" asked a good old lady from the country, addressing her daughter, who has been living in the city for half a year or so. "Really, mother, I hardly know: I never saw him. He was away on vacation last summer, and now he has started on his lecturing tour for the fall. I hope to get acquainted with him during the winter some time."

"WELL, MY SON," said a good-natured father to an eight-year-old son, the other night, "what have you done to-day that may be set down as a good deed?" "Gave a poor boy five cents," replied the hopeful. "Ah, ah! that was a charity, and charity is always right. He was an orphan boy, was he?" "I didn't stop to ask," replied the boy. "I gave him the money for licking a boy who upset my dinner-basket."

A CERTAIN MAN got mad at the editor and stopped his paper. The next week he sold all his corn at four cents below the market price; then his property was sold for taxes because he didn't read the sheriff's sales; he lost $10 betting on Mollie McCarthy ten days after Ten Broeck had won the race; he was arrested and fined $8 for going hunting on Sunday, simply because he didn't know it was Sunday; and he paid $300 for a lot of forged notes that had been advertised two weeks and the public cautioned not to negotiate them. He then paid a big Irishman with a foot like a derrick to kick him all the way to the newspaper office, where he paid four years' subscription in advance, and made the editor sign an agreement to knock him down and rob him if he ever ordered his paper stopped again.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.	13 to 25 " "	26 to 51 " "	52 " "
13 " "	25 " "	26 " "	51 " "
14 " "	26 " "	27 " "	52 " "
15 " "	27 " "	28 " "	53 " "
16 " "	28 " "	29 " "	54 " "
17 " "	29 " "	30 " "	55 " "
18 " "	30 " "	31 " "	56 " "
19 " "	31 " "	32 " "	57 " "
20 " "	32 " "	33 " "	58 " "
21 " "	33 " "	34 " "	59 " "
22 " "	34 " "	35 " "	60 " "
23 " "	35 " "	36 " "	61 " "
24 " "	36 " "	37 " "	62 " "
25 " "	37 " "	38 " "	63 " "
26 " "	38 " "	39 " "	64 " "
27 " "	39 " "	40 " "	65 " "
28 " "	40 " "	41 " "	66 " "
29 " "	41 " "	42 " "	67 " "
30 " "	42 " "	43 " "	68 " "
31 " "	43 " "	44 " "	69 " "
32 " "	44 " "	45 " "	70 " "
33 " "	45 " "	46 " "	71 " "
34 " "	46 " "	47 " "	72 " "
35 " "	47 " "	48 " "	73 " "
36 " "	48 " "	49 " "	74 " "
37 " "	49 " "	50 " "	75 " "
38 " "	50 " "	51 " "	76 " "
39 " "	51 " "	52 " "	77 " "
40 " "	52 " "	53 " "	78 " "
41 " "	53 " "	54 " "	79 " "
42 " "	54 " "	55 " "	80 " "
43 " "	55 " "	56 " "	81 " "
44 " "	56 " "	57 " "	82 " "
45 " "	57 " "	58 " "	83 " "
46 " "	58 " "	59 " "	84 " "
47 " "	59 " "	60 " "	85 " "
48 " "	60 " "	61 " "	86 " "
49 " "	61 " "	62 " "	87 " "
50 " "	62 " "	63 " "	88 " "
51 " "	63 " "	64 " "	89 " "
52 " "	64 " "	65 " "	90 " "
53 " "	65 " "	66 " "	91 " "
54 " "	66 " "	67 " "	92 " "
55 " "	67 " "	68 " "	93 " "
56 " "	68 " "	69 " "	94 " "
57 " "	69 " "	70 " "	95 " "
58 " "	70 " "	71 " "	96 " "
59 " "	71 " "	72 " "	97 " "
60 " "	72 " "	73 " "	98 " "
61 " "	73 " "	74 " "	99 " "
62 " "	74 " "	75 " "	100 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
fy, N.Y.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that each a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE OF THE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newn, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
fy, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal end for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 50 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literary and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism, with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 1 vol.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Moral Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLOD (EDWARD). The Childhood of Childhood of Religions.....	1.10
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Education to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched. Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	1.50
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Effects of Cross Fertilization.....	1.75
Effects of Cross Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.10
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series, Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the Church of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, &c., other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Religion and Science.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.10
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	10.00
Stories from the Bible as a Teacher.....	1.00
Student of the Patriarchs.....	1.70
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Safest Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (HILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.....	1.50
Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Syrian Arab and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wendeholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine Illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
New American Stories.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Ski-mishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	.85
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nolly's Silver Mine. Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of Humboldt Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critique and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Phylogeny, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
No. III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
No. IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
No. V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
No. VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
No. VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
No. VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
No. IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
No. X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Ames.....	1.75
No. XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
No. XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
No. XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Rehnard.....	1.50
No. XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
No. XV. Fungi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
No. XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
No. XVII. Money. The Science of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
No. XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
No. XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesosomes. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
No. XX. Fermentations. By F. Schützenberger.....	1.50
No. XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
No. XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
No. XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPET (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II. Per vol.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and Other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	1.50
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.10
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.10
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume of his Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Ability and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.75
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.0
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Vol. I.....	2.50
Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Vol. IV. Comparative Philosophy, Mythology, etc., completing the work.....	2.50
Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Oathic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Thelma, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations, A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.0
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.2
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.5
The Story of Avis.....	1.5
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. Three Light Science for Leisure Hours. Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. L. Gore.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
Principles of Psychology.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the Extent of them developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Comparative Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2
STRAUSS (D.F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	3.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	4.0
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.0
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Memorial Volume of his Works.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The Brute God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workingman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,
THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Moses Stephen, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calif. $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 90 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $5.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS'
LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address

CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 537.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

HARRIET MARTINEAU wrote after her visit South: "The clergy were boasting at public meetings that there was not a periodical south of the Potomac which did not advocate slavery."

HON. A. R. SPOFFORD, Librarian of Congress, writes of THE INDEX deposited in that library: "It is frequently referred to, and I should regard the completion of the file up to date as a highly valued contribution to the Library of the United States."

A NEW YORK subscriber not long since wrote: "While in England last year, I met in a railway carriage a man reading your INDEX. Asking him what he thought of it, he said in effect that he considered it the best paper published in the English language, and that he had never finished reading one number without experiencing a feeling of impatience for the next."

MISS SELMA BORG will give two lectures at the rooms of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, 4 Park Street: the first upon Tuesday, April 6, at 7.30 P.M. Subject: "Kalevala, the Epic of the Finns." Second, upon Tuesday, April 13: "The History of the Finns and the High North." Tickets to course, 50 cents; single tickets, 25 cents. The profits of these lectures are to be shared with the Union.

OUR UNITARIAN friends see clearly the impropriety of retaining Orthodox creeds, yet reading all the Orthodox out of them. For instance, the editor of the Christian Register says: "Mr. Cook falls into the characteristic injustice of putting his own interpretation of Orthodoxy in the place of its confessions and standards." That is exactly our criticism of Unitarianism, which puts its own Neo-Christian interpretation of Christianity in the place of the latter's great historic "confessions and standards." We marvel that what is so clearly perceived by the Unitarians in others should not be perceived by them in themselves.

THE CHURCH TAXATION question, as appears in another column, is now raised in the New York Legislature. The clergy are actively engaged in opposing the bill proposing to tax all church buildings that have cost over $10,000. The bill itself is a bad one. Those who oppose church exemption on principle will rather wait till that principle is established without any justifying exception. The passage of the bill as it is would perpetuate the practice of State aid to the churches for many long years. It is not the amount of exemption, but the principle of exemption, that is the grievance to far-sighted liberals. Let us have no degrading compromises on a question of simple justice.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, writing from Scranton, Iowa, March 31, says: "I have just received a letter, saying my trial will come off at Irwin Station, Pennsylvania, April 12. I suppose I shall have to revoke engagements, and sacrifice time and money to gratify the spite of a few bigots in that little town." This is a case of real and outrageous persecution on account of religious opinion, uncomplicated by any side issues. Mr. Underwood's reputation as a citizen and a gentleman is spotless; there is nothing whatever against him save the fact that he has exercised his indefeasible right of expressing publicly, as a lecturer, in the most unexceptionable manner, his views on the subject of religion. The annoyance, trouble, and expense of this trial, imposed upon an innocent and noble man, are a shame to the State of Pennsylvania, and will excite the strongest indignation in all true liberals throughout the country.

REV. DR. CORDNER, a distinguished Unitarian clergyman of Montreal, recently said in the Boston Transcript: "Channing's three fundamental doctrines of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and the dignity of human nature, formed his solid standing-ground in all works of philanthropy and reform. And all his thought and utterance as philanthropist and reformer were the logical and legitimate outcome of these fundamental doctrines of his theology. Affirming these great doctrines, he denied all doctrines in conflict with them. But, in these his negations, Mr. Cook tells us, Channing completely misconceived the orthodox doctrines. Let those who will believe that. To my mind, it sounds so much like a joke that I cannot consider it seriously. To reconcile and 'harmonize' things—total depravity with a depravity not total, vicarious atonement with an atonement not vicarious—is one of the exigencies of the present-day Orthodoxy. The simplicity of Channing's mind, however, was not equal to the task of so mixing up affirmations and their negatives as to deprive them of plain meaning to the common mind. He had nothing of the intellectual circus-rider in his composition, nor was he ever tempted to try the feat of riding two diverging horses at the same time." We are a little surprised that, in enumerating Channing's "fundamental doctrines," Dr. Cordner should omit all reference to the "Lordship of Jesus." This well-known doctrine of Channing's, and his other equally well-known doctrine of "spiritual freedom," were "two diverging horses" which the great Unitarian certainly tried to "ride at the same time." The result of his attempt may be seen now in the final separation of Unitarianism and Free Religion.

MR. EDWIN D. MEAD's lectures on "The Pioneers of German Religious Thought," in this city, must, judging from the reports, have been thoughtful and brave; and we regret not having been able to attend them. The first lecture was given on March 11, at Wesleyan Hall. "It was a general discussion of the present condition of religious thought, with special reference to the influences of German philosophy and criticism. Mr. Mead maintained that we are passing through a religious revolution greater than that of the sixteenth century. The inadequacies of the traditional theology were sharply exposed, and the nature of the changes which the studies of the last half century have effected in our views of creation, of the Bible, of Christ, of miracle, of the development of doctrine, of the world's religions, and of the general laws of history, were clearly indicated. Science has forever broken with the old theology; the Thirty-nine Articles and the Westminster Confession can no longer be tortured into harmony with the modern view of the world. The religion of our literature was discussed with considerable fulness, the writings of Emerson and Carlyle receiving special attention, the speaker urging that our best literature has entirely swung away from the old theology and is informed by a new and altogether higher spirit. Miracle fades out, because the sacredness and wonder of everything become more deeply felt, and miracle is seen to be intrusive and undignified. It is from Germany that the main impulses have come, which have wrought the changes which we see. The character and influences of German philosophy and literature were discussed, and the importance of the study of the higher German thought was urged with great earnestness. The growing devotion to German literature and scholarship was pointed out as one of the most noticeable features of our present intellectual life. It is not the mere overthrow of superstition which chiefly concerns him who has at heart the interests of rational religion, but the advance of genuine spirituality; and there is no modern quarter from which the student may derive so deep spiritual convictions, where he may gain so fine spiritual insights and so great inspirations, as in the field of the highest German thought. Mr. Mead closed with an earnest appeal for sincerity and thoroughness in religious thought and study, for faith in the soul and its affirmations, and for courage of conviction."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLBY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, Ind., N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUEDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N.Y.
 HARRY, N.Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 EBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. N.Y.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, B. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

[For THE INDEX.]

Thoughts on Dr. Channing.

BY MRS. CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

The centennial anniversary of the birthday of William Ellery Channing is an occasion of no mere passing interest and importance, nor one which should engage the attention only of that body of liberal Christians which still regards him as its revered teacher and guide; for, during his lifetime, the name of Channing was associated with far larger measures of intellectual freedom and human well-being than those coincident with any denominational interest or purpose. Among his contemporaries, he stood for what he believed to be complete mental and spiritual emancipation, as, shortly before he was born, his ancestors had stood for the same principle, under the guise less bold of political enfranchisement. Nothing is more interesting in the study of Channing than to note his continual application of the principles of '76 to the moral concerns of men. It was to the grand leading ideas of social equality and the moral dignity of man that he always made his final appeal. For this unswerving fidelity to principles, and for the remarkable purity and nobility of his character, his name will ever be treasured in the hearts of all lovers of liberty and virtue.

There is an ideal beauty and finish in the life of Channing, which, seen in certain lights, tempts us to pronounce it a fair copy of that "perfect life" he was so fond of delineating. From childhood to grave manhood, a kind of moral uniformity is manifest in his character, which constitutes its chief and singular charm. It is as though he were some favored child of destiny, about whom all fortunate circumstances conspired to lead by the gentlest of transitions from one stage of growth to another. This is the impression we gain as we pass in review his many and resplendent virtues; though, looking at Dr. Channing all around, one feels compelled to the conclusion that his was a character more finished than complete. There were no great faults, but there was a palpable absence of certain strong traits of judgment and insight. The feeling will arise that here was a nature so overstocked in two or three directions as to be left quite bare and empty in others; or perhaps it would be more exactly just to say that it was turned wholly in a certain set current of thought and feeling. His prevailing opinions concerning men and affairs were characterized by loftiness of sentiment, and not always by clear and comprehensive knowledge. His favorite and natural outlook on the world was through "the soul's east window of divine surprise." He was in a state of constant spiritual elevation; always on the heights, never moody, angry, or distracted like other men, never careless, gay, and self-forgetting like them either. Martineau, in a review in Westminster of the Memoirs of Channing, says, "He was not a man of such dimensions as to require great distance for his admeasurement"; and, at the distance of nearly half a century since his death, the conviction gains upon us that it was the spirit of the man quite as much as his actual services to mankind which stamped the measure and worth of his work. His was not the natural leadership of aggressive force and strong determination, but that which the times and circumstances imposed upon him by virtue of his high character and secure social position. What Channing really did, others might have done almost as well as he, save for that rare temper of mind which distinguished every word and act. What he said and thought, the world gratefully remembers, even that which it has tenderly put by in favor of the more stirring and broader truths of to-day. That Channing was a much greater power in his own time than it would be possible for one of his peculiar mould to be in this later day is apparent to any one of even very slight knowledge of the different tendencies and requirements of the two generations. His power lay in a large and illuminative wisdom more than in a direct and searching intelligence. It is the province of present leaders to enlighten and energize their followers rather than to uplift their souls and enkindle their hearts. The world turns a careless and inattentive ear to the fine beatitudes of forty years ago; not because it has less faith in them, but because it sees the necessity of paying more heed to the study of the methods by which they are to be practically realized among men.

Dr. Channing was born and reared under the happiest of circumstances, and in the midst of the most favorable surroundings. The parent-stock was something to be proud of, for on both the Channing and Ellery side was the combination of sound mental qualifications with strict moral integrity. The father, Wm. Channing, was a lawyer of considerable ability and renown, whose habitual austerity and high-bred reserve might have made him wholly cold and unapproachable, had destiny seen fit to cast his lot in a bleaker latitude. As it was, the generous hospitality and other genial influences, which were due to the mixture of Northern and Southern elements then constituting Newport's "best society," had the effect, in Mr. Channing, as in many others, of adding an exterior ease and courtliness of manner to intellectual force and precision. Of the mother, the son said her strongest traits were "rectitude and simplicity." Her absolute loyalty to conviction made her at times uncomfortably plain in speech. She was of a more active temperament and lively disposition than her husband. She liked her bit of fun now and then, but kept a watchful eye on the children to see that they should not get more than was good for them. Like a woman, she was prone to occasional worrying disturbance over the ever-present vexations and grievances of housewifery; and it is pleasant to read how in this case the difficulties and discourage-ments of perplexed womanhood were smoothed away by the wise and gentle words, "It will all be right," which fell from the lips of the grave and dignified head of the family. Between William and his mother, we are told, was the bond of a peculiar sympathy and love. Though quite undistinguished for precocity, there was something about the beautiful boy, with his pure instincts and quiet, thoughtful ways, as surely indicative of his future greatness as if he had accomplished prodigious tasks in the primer and spelling-book while yet in babyhood. His family and friends confidently expected good things of him, and his mother was especially hopeful and certain. The child was father to the man, slow, serious, and contemplative. As a boy, he lived not in the ordinary world of boyhood sports and ambitions, but liked best to retire within himself and think things over. Not but that he was enough of a boy to win the respect of his fellows, among whom he was both companion and prince. He could wrestle and shout with them or play the preacher, but he never missed a chance of settling a quarrel and defending everybody's rights.

There was nothing in the merely outward career of Channing to distinguish it from that of many others of gentle birth and breeding, whose lives were devoted to religious and moral culture. To know Channing, one must become familiar with his thought, and the successive periods of his mental and spiritual development. For the most part, this inner life was one of sweet and orderly progress, unmarked by discordant strife and tormenting doubts. We discover three important crises in this growth, but they are rather stepping-stones in the soul's ascending pilgrimage than sharply defined turning-points in his life. It was a life in which there was very little wavering or turning about, the path seeming to lie smooth and even before him from the beginning to the end. The first of these three critical periods is observed in the terrible impression made upon his mind, when a boy, by a rousing sermon to which he listened in company with his father, in which the lost state of man, the sovereign grace of God, and the mixed doctrines of election and free-will were expounded with mighty eloquence and power. And it must be all true, the boy thought, as he heard his father give the approving comment, "Sound doctrine that," to a neighbor. Then how was it that he could whistle on the way home, and on arriving there commence reading his newspaper as if nothing had happened? It could not be true, it was not true, the boy declared to himself; and then and there this young soul entered upon its revolt against any such God-insulting scheme of religion. Years afterward, while a student at Cambridge, while reading Hutcheson beneath his favorite clump of willows, there came the second culmination of feeling and resolve, the second inpouring of light, where in one brief moment he seemed to see all things clearly. Then it was that the thought of the "dignity of man" rushed upon him with overpowering conviction, taking such entire possession of him as to become the inspiring principle of his life. In his resolution to enter the ministry, the third period of self-revelation is indicated. This resolution was taken during his Senior year, and after a re-examination of the evidences of Christianity induced by the widespread influence of French infidelity. After this, he had his periods of gloom and self-distrust, but never of doubt. He never regretted his choice of a vocation. "In my view, religion is but another name for happiness, and I am most cheerful when most religious," he wrote to a friend.

After leaving college, Mr. Channing spent eighteen months as tutor in the family of D. M. Randolph, of Richmond; and this period for many reasons was one of the most interesting of his life. Here he sees slavery under its more pleasing aspects, yet turns from it with none the less loathing. He is welcomed to the highest social circles, and is deeply impressed with the chivalric politeness and refined courtesy of Southern gentle-folks. But the duties of his position and professional studies give him but little time for society; and here, as always, we find him depending on the hidden sources within for strength and happiness. It was but natural that one of his pure and lofty purpose should sooner or later have fallen under the spell of the Stoic philosophy. His admiration for the principles of this school of ethics, together with his straitened circumstances, led him to practise such austerities on himself that an originally fine but delicate constitution gave way, and when he left the South it was with ruined health and a shattered physique. So cruelly does Nature punish us for some of our best intentions. Not yet twenty-one, his life in Richmond was roseate with visions of human greatness and the fair future of life.

Dreamy, high-flown, full of longing and ardent expectation, he was at that season when the danger is that the mind will grow too accustomed to turn in upon itself for joy and satisfaction. He finds that he has fallen into the habit of "musing." These musings are of the most elevated order and rarefied substance, yet none the less to be condemned, and he took himself as rigorously in hand as though the habit were that of opium-eating; and in his view it was about as bad. "Musing wears away my body and my mind," he says; and in maturer years, referring to this period of his life, he said, "I found that the imagination tended to inflame the passions, and that if I meant to be virtuous I must dismiss my musings." But he continued to dream of and forecast the ultimate perfection and happiness of the race. He had vague notions of some scheme of social benefaction where there should be perfect community of interests, and a few wise, select souls should set an example to the world of the best living. His friends laughed at and remonstrated with him, but did not wholly cure him. He gave up his scheme, but never the determination to spend his life for the good of others. Among the writings belonging to the period of his sojourn in the South, his biographer mentions one recording his self-consecration to the great mission of his life. We cannot but think that one of such commanding spiritual presence as Dr. Channing, and of his deep and all embracing sympathy, was predestined to the profession of the ministry. Two great facts,—no need to say moral facts, for to Channing it was impossible to regard either life or the universe from any other than the moral side,—the two facts of the love and immanence of Deity and the dignity of human nature had taken controlling possession of him very early in life. The profound religious significance which to his mind attached to all the affairs of life came from the conviction which he held so firmly from youth upward, that the present life is but a preparative state for a future spiritual existence. This belief in immortality was one of the moulding forces of Dr. Channing's work and character, giving form and coherence to both. He no more doubted this future life than he doubted his own existence; and it is quite safe to say that, were he living to-day, he would have but little sympathy with that modern spirit of honest materialistic inquiry which rests all assumptions concerning the nature of mind and the origin of life on a purely physical basis. So far as this spirit of doubt was honest and reverent, he would have respected it, even while turning from it with a shrinking repugnance. The dread and hesitancy with which he would have received the new-time scientific interpretation of things is plainly indicated in a letter to George Combe on the publication of the Constitution of Man, where he says, "I have a strong aversion to theories which subject the mind to the body."

As a practical reformer, Dr. Channing felt a growing interest in the developments of science, as he did in every thing that bestowed increased happiness and enlightenment on mankind. We know that the scientific method of thought was that which most commended itself to him, and one which he conscientiously strove to abide by; but to him the realm of exact knowledge was not confined to logical definition and outer sensation; the soul's vision of truth, goodness, and beauty being as vivid and unmistakable evidences of the real as the images of external nature. And yet Channing was no transcendentalist, with a strong and elevating assurance of the authority of intuition. We find him disagreeing with Parker on the nature of conscience, the latter claiming its infallibility, the former insisting on the necessity of its education.

Dr. Channing liked best to describe himself as a "rational Christian." In the judgment of some radical thinkers, this will appear like a contradiction of terms, nor will such be likely to concur in the opinion which pronounces Channing a rationalist first, and Christian afterward. But a careful perusal of his writings, including those inmost thoughts which lie revealed on the pages of his journal and in letters to friends, must convince every unprejudiced mind that here is one who continually and conscientiously endeavored to make pure reason the sole guide in his search for truth. Rationalism is distinguished by the method, not the outcome of thought. To deny this is to declare that those only are true rationalists who are without limitations, and who among us is willing to make that high avowal of himself? On the other hand, and with equal justice, it must be admitted that temperamentally Dr. Channing was Christian first, and rationalist second; for in him, as in all, the mental faculties were bound in and directed by all the other secret forces of his nature, bestowed by birth and education. We may proudly claim and as proudly exercise the gift of reason, but some power "not [and before] ourselves"—the fatalities of heredity and surrounding circumstance—determines the measure and import of our reasoning. It is not pure obstinacy, but some cause lying far back along the line of ancestral endowment which keeps one man's gaze persistently fastened to the silver side of the shield, and another's to the golden.

We should err on the side of over-statement, however, if, in a desire to do perfect justice to the rationalistic bent of Dr. Channing's mind, no mention were made of the limitations imposed by the peculiar form of modified Christian faith and doctrine, of which he became the chief promulgator and representative head. Too ardent an advocate of liberty to question the right of any man to his opinions, and claiming to have arrived at his own views solely by the aid of reason and judgment, he yet failed to understand how others, entering upon the same investigation and apparently with his own good intent, should bring their researches to a point far beyond the bounds of the Christian revelation. But his condemnation of open infidelity was pronounced more in sorrow than in anger, to whom indeed the latter feeling seemed wholly unknown. He blamed Calvinism for the malformed genius of Byron and Shelley, though he believed that the extreme reaction of the latter from the abuses and perils of the Church was the result of a wilfully misguided intellect giving conscious preference to the worst instead of the better interpretation. But Shelley was a genius; and genius with one comprehensive sweep of vision takes in all the essential truths and broadest relations of life and time. There is a moral insight, finer and more discriminating than this, which still is not more just.

In Dr. Channing's view, there was no more sacred calling in life than that of the ministry, a conviction which strengthened with his growing years. When a young minister, he was troubled with despondency and doubts of his fitness, which the knowledge of his wide popularity as a preacher could not dispel. Increased influence, with one of his high ideals and sensitive conscience, meant increased responsibility, a further cause for additional self-seeking. Every page of his journal reveals this same tireless scrutiny of motives and unwearied urging of the spirit on to the attainment of the highest. This habit of probing to the depths of all mental experiences lasted throughout his life, though the shadow of morbid self-depreciation passed away with his youth. He became more trustful toward himself, as toward God and his fellow-creatures. The arresting hand of physical weakness held him back from many things he longed to accomplish; but still he grew in sweetness and serenity, accustoming himself to a few short hours' labor upon the tasks he loved best, and the remainder of the time to the rest so imperatively demanded.

Dr. Channing considered that the first office of the minister was that of teacher and guide, his first duty the instruction of the people in the great truths of religion and morals. The pastoral relations, as they are ordinarily interpreted, commanded but little respect from him, while for social intercourse in general he cared but little. At the time of his entrance upon the duties of Federal Street Church, he is described as of a very serious manner, producing even then an impression of "matured wisdom and virtue." The same qualities which enabled him to shine with such conspicuous brightness as one of the great religious illuminators of history made him look forward with grave reluctance and dread to the approaching crisis in religious thought, when he should be forced into the distasteful business of theological controversy. To him religion was a spirit, a life, not a set of ideas; and only as through it men attacked the universal principles of freedom, and the moral worth of man, did he feel called upon to reply. All his life he had upheld the right of free inquiry in religion, and he protested against taking the defensive in the now rising controversy between the "Liberals" and "Evangelicals." He is roused to a noble scorn at the insinuations that they—the Liberals—have concealed their real opinions, and have surreptitiously introduced the teachings of Belsham and Priestley. These new notions over which the Orthodox world is working itself into such a fury are not new, he declares. They parted company with the trinity years ago, and with a perfect right, resting their conclusions not on the word of Calvin, but on those of "the Master." Then followed arguments reiterating the policy of Congregationalism, which places the government of each church in its own hands. But all this was taking a too exalted view of the matter. Dr. Channing had very likely been a consistent liberal, as liberalism was then understood, during the whole of his ministry; and there was, perhaps, some degree of logic in his refusal to define his creed in the terms of Calvinistic dogma. But somehow, in these quarrels of religious history over the homestead rights of the new faith and the old, the latter generally has the best logic as well as the largest numbers on its side. In all controversies of this kind, the Liberals have contended for rights they did not possess, insisting that the one point of law which signifies something beside possession is quite as good a foundation for that claim as the other nine. But, in the separation of Unitarianism from Congregational Calvinism, the household gods remained in the hands of the despoilers, owing to the accidents of time and place. For once, the heretics had everything in their favor; and consistent Orthodoxy was compelled to move on, and begin life anew. During this long period of agitated discussion, it has been said that Dr. Channing took the lead, but left the defence to others. He was keenly alive to the innumerable evils attendant on such disputes, and it was one of the serious defects of his mental vision not to be able always to distinguish incidental from essential error. The deep delight which he took in the contemplation of abstract truth, as it appears to one of his poetic temperament in the more attractive forms of lofty vision, and ennobling sentiment, together with an exquisitely refined conscientiousness, and a somewhat fastidious distaste for methods less fine and scrupulous than his own, prevented his active coöperation in a number of schemes for human improvement. No man saw the necessity of reform more plainly than he, but generally he had but little faith in the reformer.

Dr. Channing was a man of peace. He did not go so far as some of his associates, and advocate the entire unjustifiableness of war under any and all circumstances; but he held the severer measures of reform, such as threatened the sudden upheaval of the old and the revolutionary enactment of the new, in strong, determined opposition. His relation to the anti-slavery cause is well known. From boyhood, he had understood and condemned slavery. He saw what a blot this human traffic was on the rising fame of the young republic, how huge an obstacle it was to the nation's progress, how by reason of it Columbia's fair name was already covered with shame and ridicule in the Old World. But he saw a good deal beside this, and his too charitable heart impelled him to consider this question from every possible point of view. The remembrance of his brief residence in the South shed a glamour over all his reflections on this subject, and, while it cast no softening glow over the evils of slavery itself, it strangely dimmed his perception of its true relation to Southern manners and civilization. As he pitied the slave, so he sympathized with the master; as he condemned the "institution," so he deplored the, to him, fatal effects of political strife and anarchy which would succeed its too swift destruction. With an almost childlike simplicity of faith, he trusted that the milder means of moral suasion and the peaceful arbitrament of the council-chamber might serve to rid the country of an evil grown to such gigantic proportions that the life-interests of millions were clustered about it, whose deadly fibres had become entwined with the very heartstrings of the nation, and the shadow of whose desolating presence still hangs like a cloud of despair over the fairest portion of the land.

It was Dr. Channing's great misfortune that he could not lend the weight and lustre of his name to the cause of young abolitionism; and though sympathy is instinctively bestowed upon that small band of heroic mal-contents whose prayerful entreaty for the support and countenance of the most illustrious man in their midst was sorrowfully denied, yet we are bound to take into account the few incidental good results of this denial. Nature did not bestow on Dr. Channing the piercing, alert vision of the practised reformer, but she did send him into the world with a born hatred of the partisan spirit and methods. Thus he was doubly hindered, both in a positive and negative sense, from entering into the mêlée of controversy. He did not arrive at conclusions after the methods of the majority of men, and could not work according to their rules. He hated slavery as much as the abolitionists did, but would not look upon it from the stand-point of alarm. Though he could not become the leader of the abolitionists, to many of them he always remained the beloved friend and guide. Mrs. Childs says that, where she at first inclined to think him "timid and time-serving," she soon became convinced that his hesitancy was due only to the highest motives. "At every interview, I could see that he grew bolder and stronger, while I felt that I grew wiser and more just."

He, too, fully understood why he could not enter into full fellowship with these zealous reformers who were so lustily pushing the world forward. "It is the misfortune of my position to satisfy no party," he wrote to Miss Martineau; and to Mrs. Childs, "I am made of but poor material for a reformer." He went on to explain how his mind always instinctively turned away from thoughts of present evil to the contemplation of the perfect. As often happens to those who aim after broad rather than exact and searching views, Dr. Channing, in his noble desire to do full justice to all, missed the opportunity of doing signal and immediate justice to those who should have been, by virtue of nearer heart-kinship, his first concern. Still we do not forget that it was because he wished to do this full justice to all that he waited and doubted. At last the doubt began to turn in the other direction, away from the crude extravagances of the abolitionists to the underlying motives of the slave-holders, who, he begins to perceive, are not more magnanimous and sinned against than other men. Let him once be convinced that slavery, so far from being an accidental feature of the Southerner's policy, is the one cherished article of his creed, which it is his hard, deliberate purpose to maintain at any cost, why, then, "I am prepared to speak as I have not," he wrote in 1837, cautiously apprehensive of a fact which all the world, with vision cast straight before, had seen for years.

How characteristic of him was the word he had to say in the little book on "Slavery" that finally appeared! and how still more like him was it to reconsider his intention of publishing a book disclosing the evils of slavery, to which he had been an eye-witness on his visit to the West Indies, for fear that it would lead men's minds away from principles to details! In his book, he aimed to fix the reader's attention on the central truths of justice and freedom. To battle for truth and the right simply for the sake of truth and the right, this was the single high motive he would have engendered in the hearts of all. Surely the world can afford not to count the missteps of those great souls, which are made because their vision is on the stars. What he said of Péguyon, we may repeat of him: "When a pure mind errs by aspiring after a disinterestedness and purity not granted to our present infant state, we almost reverence its errors; and still more we recognize in them an essential truth."

A single essay—which high appellation is not claimed for these scattered and imperfect thoughts—would afford insufficient space for a complete portrayal of Dr. Channing's character. By many he is, not without reason, considered to have conferred as eminent services on mankind in the domains of politics, philanthropy, and letters as in that of religion. His patriotism was on the grand scale, which attaches hope for one's country to the abiding principles of truth and honor which she is pledged to maintain. On the few notable occasions when he appeared before his countrymen as a political writer, it was to arouse them to a braver and more resolute defence of these cherished liberties, to recall their wandering attention away from schemes of mercenary ambition and political greed to their duties as guardians of the present rights and future fame of their country. His letter to Henry Clay, on the annexation of Texas, was a masterly performance, which elicited unbounded admiration on both sides the water. As a philanthropist and reformer, his biographer says, "The central principle of love, one in essence and universal in aim, was his animating motive." Reading his addresses on temperance, the care of the poor, the labor problem, and other similar themes, in the light of the more scientific knowledge of these subjects which prevails to-day, we see that Dr. Channing, with his wide, luminous views, his rational and practical methods of reform, was a social scientist before social science, as a means of true insight into the needs of the race, was known. Dr. Channing was a thorough and consistent democrat. The general temper and tone of his mind kept him far above, but not apart from, the multitude. His heart was always with the people. He had no sympathy for the aristocratic pretensions of rank or the spirit of caste as it is seen in the Old World, and looked with great disfavor on the distinctions that were growing up in America between the wealthy and poorer classes. The predominating influence of the dollar was a source of real anxiety and sorrow to him.

I cannot close without calling attention to the deep and respectful regard with which Dr. Channing always looked upon woman. He held her nature in high esteem and reverence, not only because it was part of the general human nature of which he had such high hopes, but also because, being hers, it seemed to his fine, chivalric soul to possess an additional claim upon his consideration. Without being in the least effeminate,—effeminacy being as undesirable a trait in a woman as a man,—he possessed the highest womanly and manly attributes, wedded in the complete union of his own beautiful personality. Women were among his dearest friends and nearest confidants, and his bearing toward them was of that courteous regard, wholly unmixed with any lighter sentiment, which both bespoke and evoked the highest that was within them. The cause of woman knows no truer help than that which lies in the friendship of such men.

In private life, with his high standard of duty and all-pervading sense of right, Dr. Channing was ideally true to the varied relations of son, husband, father, friend, neighbor, and citizen. No professional calling could restrain his sympathies or limit his activities, no sectarian badge shut out from his vision the claims and deserts of the whole human brotherhood. The dominating motives of his character were piety and beneficence. There were but two sides to his soul, the God-ward and that which turned in loving commiseration and hope towards his fellow-man. In his revolt from the doctrine of man's total depravity, he went to the other extreme of the innate dignity of his nature. We know now, or think we do, that, as mere theories, neither of these is capable of very satisfactory proof. Whether man is innately great or innately mean and contemptible, we may not determine; but Dr. Channing's work was well done, if he but persuaded us of the nobler wisdom of acting on the first hypothesis. "I suppose I should pass for a wiser man, had I hoped less," he said of himself; but Posterity refuses to verify this melancholy prediction, and finds large stores of the highest wisdom in the largess of love, faith, and hope bestowed upon the world in the life and work of William Ellery Channing.

CHICAGO, March 20, 1880.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

UNITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

A REVIEW OF DR. MARTINEAU'S STATEMENT.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

IV.

UNDERBANK PARSONAGE, STANNINGTON, {
Near SHEFFIELD, Eng. }

To return now to Dr. Martineau's statement of Unitarian Christianity, there remains to be examined his declaration of Unitarian adherence to the error of the apostles in regard to the office of Christ. The denial made by Dr. Martineau of the Christian standing of Pure Theists, who follow reason and conscience independent of tradition and history, is followed by a claim for what is called "Christian Theism," as contrasted with Pure Theism, which is set aside as "non-Christian." Dr. Martineau's statement is in these words:—

"There are many Unitarians to whom the discovered fallibility of Scripture brings no shock, and spoils nothing that has been the object of their trust and love; who had long ceased to look out for any 'external authority,' or ask for foreign information respecting things divine; who expect no help in their approach to God and ascent to higher duty, except through the hierarchy of greater and holier minds; but who see in Jesus Christ the supreme term in that hierarchy, the realization of life in God, the image of a pure and tender humanity made perfect in weakness and sublime in humiliation by utter self-surrender to his loftiest call. In this aspect, his figure looks upon them with the power of an objective Conscience, still clear and living, scarcely dimmed by its encumbering traditions, and unhurt by fiction, because transcending it. They affect no independence of this spiritual ideal, and decline to part from it. It has rendered possible to them a consciousness of divine relations, a faith in the resources of humanity and the uplifting presence of an infinite compassion, and an apprehension of the range of duty which no private experience, no intellectual speculation, would have enabled them to reach. . . . It is the distinctive glory of the Christian religion that it is a tissue of Personal Affections, sweetening, expanding, exalting human life, by ties of relation with all known ranks of being: fraternal service to equal men, filial trust towards 'the Father in heaven,' reverent allegiance to the 'Son of Man' who has brought them into open communion. . . . Unless this glory is to fade, no living object in the associated family of minds must be removed, either dropped from the series as a superfluous link, or construed from a reality into a dream, reduced from One who thinks and loves to That which blindly necessitates. Religion, it has been said, is 'morality colored with emotion': yes, but the emotion of a dependent mind looking up to a Mind, all-righteous and supreme. Again it has been said, religion is 'moral idealism': yes, but with eye upon an ideal which has been humanly realized on earth, and forever constitutes a divine perfection in heaven. Take away all objective seat for your inward vision, turn it from a perception into a phantom, let it hang in the air and never have been; and, though it may raise a sigh and pour a plaintive music over life, it can inspire no worship and nerve no will. There is a wave of heathen pantheism sweeping over our time, which threatens to obliterate the consciousness of this truth, and to leave us only the phrases of ancient piety with the life washed out, the empty ghosts of the saint's prayer and the martyr's cry. Trust, love, reverence, between person and person, speaking in living communion and quickening all faithful action, are the central essence of pure religion and the special gift of Christianity. This gift, it is the highest function of spiritual philosophy in our age to protect and hand down with unabated power." *

The confidence and tone of authority with which Dr. Martineau here lifts up an attenuated relic of the Athanasian conception against the wave sweeping over our time, which it suits his momentary lapse into an exclamatory pulpit mood to call "heathen pantheism," may be helpful to such faint dogmatic anxieties as survive in some Unitarian minds; and yet his attitude but repeats the customary mistake of those who have filled up the successive stages of the struggle to save the quite non-Christian apostles' creed. The truth of Christ does not provide for any hierarchy between man and God; nor for any the least worship of the supreme term of a hierarchy which is confessedly human to the very top. Were we sure that Christ stands at the head of even a super-human hierarchy, it would still be impossible for us to offer him the least religious service, or in any way make him a religious object, without flagrant disregard of his most explicit, most undoubted, and most decisive teaching. He does not offer himself as an objective conscience, nor as an image, either of God or of ideal truth. He ever points the soul to its Divine Father, and to the direct revelation in reason and conscience of that Father's will and working. What Dr. Martineau depreciates as "private experience," Christ ever encourages us to trust as an open path to heavenly understanding. He does not say, "Look on me, and ye shall see God"; but, rather, "The pure in heart shall see God." The conditions of grace and truth do not relate to his person, but to principles which in no way depend on him. Fraternal service of man and filial trust toward God are held to be sufficient allegiance to him, and he forbids these passing into any the least making him more than a simple, human, and providential teacher. "Trust, love, reverence, between person and person," he strictly confines to two moods, the filial toward God and the fraternal toward man. He claims no more, in any honest reflex of his mind, to be a worshipful "Son of Man" than to be a worshipped "Son of God." He is no middle term in "an organization of the universe," nor is he even part of "an omnipresent network of moral sympathies." It is just as possible to have his cause advanced without his name as with it, if historical circumstances advise this; although commonly, with us, it would be as unadvisable as it is unnecessary to attempt anything of the kind. But, if use of the name of Christ is to mean that he "forever constitutes a divine perfection in heaven," though only "an ideal humanly realized on earth," and that the divine perfection of God Our Father is to be dismissed as a phantom hung in the air, destitute of all objective reality, then will that name serve, not Christ in truth, but anti-Christ. And here Dr. Martineau exactly stands, in the mildly pugnacious and satirical conclusion of his statement on behalf of Unitarian Christianity. His mind is, no less strenuously than Peter's was, on the things humanly substituted for God rather than on the things of God himself. In his enlightened way, he dismisses worship of God in spirit and in truth, as the use of a phantom Moral Ideal, which "can inspire no worship and nerve no will." Not only does he insist on Christ as an object of worship, though only a man; but he assumes that, if this human idol is removed, there is nothing left to worship, not even in heaven,—nothing but a "phantom hung in the air." But such disposition of the divine ideal, which exclusively held the eye of Christ, and to which alone he directed the eye of all true reverence and worship, has no force or veracity. It is the voice of tradition, without an accent of truth. No one will suppose that Dr. Martineau really means it: it is no more than an attitude of rhetoric, a survival of Anglican endeavor to stand right with such historical dignities as the apostles, the fathers, and the churchmen, who still sway so largely the superficial respectability of Christendom. When the spirit of truth shall have cast out this deference to tradition, from the bondage of which so few professional ministers of religion ever make a judicious escape, such a judgment as Dr. Martineau's, of compromise with infidelity to the pure theism of Christ, and conformity to the false apostolic and Athanasian conception of a second and nearer divinity in Christ, will cease to be possible. At present, the tendencies of honest and truthful dealing in religious criticism and thought are to an excess of negation, from which minds unarmed with special strength and boldness, or held back by circumstances, naturally and most properly shrink; while those who should become, by wiser thought and sounder learning, the prophets of just progress, content themselves with such partial pursuit of truth as their places favor, and toward all other advance adopt the tone of semi-Pharisaic judgment with which Dr. Martineau gives thanks that Unitarians are not as Prof. Newman and Miss Cobbe,—"non-Christian."

The odd tricks which this mood can play with a fine mind like Dr. Martineau's have been amply shown above; but one more illustration may be noted to conclude, in the use Dr. Martineau makes of the example of John Stuart Mill, in the following passage:—

"The relative persuasiveness of natural theology and of a living embodiment of pure religion is strikingly seen in Mr. J. S. Mill's posthumous essays. In speculation, he reaches only so dismal a world and so mere a dream of faith as to depress and even irritate his temper. His eye, changing its direction, falls upon the figure of Christ; and its uncertain look appears to vanish, and words of reverence succeed, as if some mysterious power passed upon the troubled waters, and left a sudden calm."

If the logic of this appeal to Mr. Mill's case is good, it means, Don't be so foolish as to pursue the dismal

* Introductory chapter to J. J. Tayler's Retrospect of the Religious Life of England. pp. 40-42.

dream of God with you in spirit, but bring your worship to the historically present man Christ, and attain comfort, instead of the depression and irritation which are the lot of those who seek God, and who try to be "followers of God, as dear children." It is possible, however, that Dr. Martineau most unadvisedly takes Mr. Mill as a specimen of what may come of waiting on the Lord; and that, if he had taken Christ as an example of faith in God our Father, or even Miss Cobbe, there might have been no chance to argue the depressing and morally damaging character of such faith, as compared with a half Comtean reverence for Christ. If Mr. Mill is to set the rule of our faith, it may come quite to the Comtean conclusion of worshipping humanity in the person of a beloved one not so far away as the historical Christ. That substantially is the faith which Dr. Martineau makes the name of Christ stand for, only he flavors it to quite another sense by keeping it where the shadow of Athanasius will fall on it. A more confused fiction it would be difficult to frame than this faith in Christ, which is a false worship of a man, equally in disregard of the natural claims of God and of the plainest teaching of Christ.

CHURCH TAXATION IN NEW YORK STATE.

Bishop Doane Invites the Faithful to Sign a Protest.

TO THE CLERGY OF THE DIOCESE OF ALBANY:—

A bill is before the Legislature of the State of New York, changing the tax-laws in such way as to make liable to taxation all church buildings costing over $10,000. I am so well satisfied that this proposition is against the judgment and the instincts of the community, that I suggest to the clergy of the diocese that it would be well for them to submit for signatures, at the parish meeting in Easter week, the following protest against the passage of the bill, and, having secured the signatures of those who are opposed to this taxation, to return the paper that same day to me.

WILLIAM CROSWELL DOANE,
Bishop of Albany.

March 23, 1880.

TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK:—

The undersigned, clergymen and lay members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New York, knowing that a bill has been reported to the Legislature which will exempt from taxation only "every building for public worship to the value of ten thousand dollars and no more, and the land belonging thereto and used exclusively therefor," do earnestly petition the Legislature of the State of New York against the adoption of the above clause in the proposed "act to amend chapter thirteen of part one of the Revised Statutes," on the ground that to lay such a burden upon our churches would endanger the continuance of some and make difficult the maintenance of all; would be an injustice to men, who, for the glory of God, have built costly and beautiful houses of worship for the good of all people in all time; would tend in the future to dishonor God and religion by commending, if not compelling, the erection of cheap churches; and would be a blow struck at the work which all religious bodies in the State are striving to do, in the reclamation of the wicked, the relief of the poor, the maintenance of good order and social purity, the enforcement of law, the advancement of God's glory, and the good of men.

Meetings of Albany Clergymen on the Subject.

At the close of the anniversary meeting of the Bible Society, the clergymen present met at request of Rev. Dr. Darling, when Dr. Magee was called to the chair. Dr. Darling then referred to the bill now before the Legislature for the taxation of church and educational property. After some discussion, the following committee was appointed to appear before the Legislature and oppose the bill: Rev. Drs. Eaton, Upson, Darling, Clark, Magee, and Rev. Messrs. McChesney and Humpstone. Rev. Dr. Clark was designated as chairman of the committee.

At a meeting of the Methodist clergymen yesterday, the same subject was discussed, and a feeling averse to church taxation was manifested. A committee of three, consisting of Rev. E. McChesney, Rev. J. E. C. Sawyer, and Rev. J. F. Clymer, was appointed to give expression to the views held by the body in opposition to such taxation.—Albany Press and Knickerbocker, March 23.

HOLYOAKE IN HISTORY.

In the course of this year, a "system of ethics," to which its author gave the name of Secularism, was widely and currently propagated by Mr. G. J. Holyoake. We place before the reader the definition of the system in the words of its founder:—

"Secularism is the study of promoting human welfare by material means; measuring human welfare by the utilitarian rule, and making the service of others a duty of life. Secularism relates to the present existence of man, and to action, the issues of which can be tested by the experience of this life; having for its object the development of the physical, moral, and intellectual nature of man to the highest perceivable point, as the immediate duty of society; inculcating the practical sufficiency of natural morality apart from Atheism, Theism, or Christianity; engaging its adherents in the promotion of human improvement by material means, and making these agreements the ground of common unity for all who would regulate life by reason and ennoble it by service. The secular is sacred in its influence on life; for, by purity of material conditions, the loftiest natures are best sustained, and the lower the most surely elevated. Secularism is a series of principles intended for the guidance of those who find theology indefinite or inadequate, or deem it unreliable. It replaces theology, which mainly regards life as a sinful necessity, as a scene of tribulation through which we pass to a better world. Secularism rejoices in this life, and regards it as the sphere of those duties which educate men to fitness for any future and better life, should such transpire."

Secularism... does not necessarily clash with other religions; it does not deny the existence of a God, or even the truth of Christianity. . . . It differs little, if at all, in substance from the opinions of the freethinkers of the last century, but it differs widely from them in its manner of propagation, and the persons by whom it was embraced. The old freethinkers made few converts, and these chiefly, if not exclusively, among the upper classes; but Secularism was embraced by thousands and tens of thousands of the working classes. . . . The success which attended the attempts made to propagate it was due partly to the fact that great masses of the working classes, especially in the large manufacturing towns, . . . had, in many cases, almost unconsciously adopted the ideas which Mr. Holyoake fixed and shaped into distinct doctrines; . . . partly to the zeal, activity, ability, and boldness with which Secularism was propagated and defended; and in no small degree also to the qualities of Mr. Holyoake, who had assiduously cultivated great natural gifts, who delivered his opinions with a calm, quiet, and persuasive earnestness, and had won the favorable attention of the working classes by the enlightened interest he had on many occasions taken in their welfare, and the thorough mastery he displayed of many social problems in the solution of which they were deeply interested.—History of England, by the Rev. William Nassau Molesworth, M.A., vol. ii., pp. 304-306.

ARTIFICIAL DIAMONDS AT LAST.

Professor Story Maskelyne, who examined Mr. Jame MacTear's presumed "diamonds," an account of which was published on page eighty-eight, present volume, has written the following letter to the London Times on those produced by Mr. Hannay:—

"SIR: A few weeks since I had to proclaim the failure of one attempt to produce the diamond in a chemical laboratory. To-day I ask a little space in one of your columns in order to announce the entire success of such an attempt by another Glasgow gentleman.

"That gentleman is Mr. J. Ballantine Hannay, of Woodbourne, Helensburg, and Sword Street, Glasgow, a Fellow of the Chemical Society of London, who has to-day sent me some small crystallized particles presenting exactly the appearance of fragments of a broken diamond.

"In lustre, in a certain lamellar structure on the surfaces of cleavage, in refractive power, they accorded so closely with that mineral that it seemed hardly rash to proclaim them even at first sight to be diamond. And they satisfy the characteristic tests of that substance. Like the diamond, they are nearly inert in polarized light, and their hardness is such that they easily scored deep grooves in a polished surface of sapphire, which the diamond alone can do. I was able to measure the angle between the cleavage faces of one of them, notwithstanding that the image from one face was too incomplete for a very accurate result. But the mean of the angles so measured on the goniometer was 70° 29', the correct angle on a crystal of the diamond being 70° 31.7'. Finally, one of the particles, ignited on a foil of platinum, glowed and gradually disappeared exactly as mineral diamond would do.

"There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Hannay has succeeded in solving this problem, and removing from the science of chemistry an opprobrium so long adhering to it; for, whereas the larger part of the great volume recording the triumphs of that science is occupied by the chemistry of carbon, this element has never been crystallized by man till Mr. Hannay achieved the triumph which I have the pleasure of recording to-day. His process for effecting this transmutation, hardly less momentous to the arts than to the possessors of a wealth of jewelry, is on the eve of being announced to the Royal Society.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
"N. STORY MASKELYNE.

{ "MINERAL DEPARTMENT, BRITISH MUSEUM,
February 19."

TAHITI: ITS EARLY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCES.

A friend described the island to me, at the missionary meeting.

Tahiti was called on some of the older maps "Otaheite," from misunderstanding the language at first, the "o" simply meaning "the." He said it was indeed beautiful, and well deserved to be called "Queen of the South Sea Islands." As it is approached from the east, it presented the appearance of a magnificent cone or pyramid of foliage rising abruptly from the sea. Its beautiful cocoa, palm trees, and other tropical plants made a gorgeous picture. From his description, it was easy to supply the poetry which he doubtless would have done in a more poetical company than a Friends' yearly meeting.

Being from the land of Tennyson, it was strange that he did not at least mention,—

"Larger constellations burning; mellow moons and happy skies; Breathings of tropic palms in cluster, knots of Paradise."

The cone rises to nine thousand or ten thousand feet above the sea, presenting a striking appearance on approaching it. It was supposed to be the first island visited by missionaries. Ninety years ago they landed there, and made an effort to proclaim the gospel, but made no converts at all. The people were under the rule of heathen priests. Their children were sacrificed to the extent that not more than one or two were left in a family. The people were cannibals and seemed joined to their idols. A second attempt met with a better result. The king of the island was himself converted, and, being no half-way man, he acted king-like under his new convictions, and immediately destroyed idol-worship and caused every image to be burned. The superstitious islanders trembled lest some fearful calamity should come upon them for burning the gods; but as none came, they grew reconciled and were converted to the true faith. The king also caused the building of an immense chapel for the worship of the true God. It was so large that it contained three pulpits, which were so far apart that even if the preachers raised their voices as he had heard the American brethren do, they would not disturb each other. A broad river flowed through the centre of this chapel, where the rite of baptism might be administered without extra trouble. In 1848 a French man-of-war, under King Louis Philippe, anchored off the island, and sent in a paper to Queen Pomari to sign. This gave the island to the French, under whose control it has been ever since.

Roman Catholic priests were sent at once, and found the people with the Bible in their own tongue. They said, "You must destroy that dreadful book at once;" but the natives answered, "We will keep it; it has taught us all we know of good. If it had not been for it, we would cook and eat you."

Finally the priests announced that the Virgin Mary was very angry with them for reading the Bible, and that on a certain day fire would be sent from heaven to destroy all the Bibles, which were to be collected in the great cathedral. An open Bible was placed on the altar, and in the presence of the multitude the priests were to pray for fire from above to fall and consume it. The priest prayed a long prayer and when he ceased he called aloud for the miracle to be performed, when a voice shouted from the roof, "Master, the fire has gone out." A servant had been stationed on the roof, with coals of fire to drop, but they had gone out during the long prayer.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Poetry.

"ONLY A SOLDIER."

AN INCIDENT.

Unarmed and unattended walks the Czar,
Through Moscow's busy street one winter's day.
The crowd uncover as his face they see,—
"God greet the Czar!" they say.

Along his path there moved a funeral,
Gray spectacle of poverty and woe.
A wretched sledge, dragged by one weary man,
Slowly across the snow.

And on the sledge, blown by the winter wind,
Lay a poor coffin, very rude and bare.
And he who drew it bent before his load,
With dull and sullen air.

The Emperor stopped and beckoned to the man:
"Who is't thou bearest to the grave?" he said.
"Only a soldier, Sire!" the short reply.
"Only a soldier, dead."

"Only a soldier!" musing, said the Czar.
"Only a Russian, who was poor and brave.
Move on. I follow. Such an one goes not Unhonored to his grave."

He bent his head, and silent raised his cap,—
The Czar of all the Russias, pacing slow,
Following the coffin, as again it went
Slowly across the snow.

The passers of the street, all wondering,
Looked on that sight, then followed silently;
Peasant and prince, and artisan and clerk,
All in one company.

Still, as they went, the crowd grew ever more,
Till thousands stood around the friendless grave,
Led by that princely heart, who, royal, true,
Honored the poor and brave.

AGNES MACDONELL.

March 2, 1880.

NOTE.—This incident is narrated by a lady who was living in Moscow when it took place.

—London Spectator.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 3.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Mrs. S. E. Whitney, $5; Col. Geo. E. Bryant, $2; James Singer, $3.20; H. Richie, $7.74; J. A. Gager, $1; Hon. J. B. Weston, $4; William Boynton, $3.20; William Julich, $6.40; Marshall Pierce, $3.20; J. Whiteley Ward, $6.96; Daniel Fitzhugh, $5.20; Mrs. Lee A. Carter, $3.20; Dr. A. Jacobi, $5; A. Schneider, $2; Mrs. Geo. E. Letcher, $4.80; D. Sandman, $1; D. Rigdon, $5; D. D. Holmes, $1.50; J. C. Chandler, $1.38; C. Elliott, $1; Miss E. Homer, $4.24; M. Trumbower, $13; W. N. Clark, $3.20; John Hendree, $3.20; Charles Truesdale, $3.20; Clayton F. Woods, $1; S. B. Weston, $2.35; Abraham Roth, $6; F. E. Abbot, $400.00.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 8, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCOIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged April 1.....	$2,022.00
Dr. EMIL NOGGEROTH, New York	20.00
Geo. H. JONES, " ".....	10.00
F. M. HAWLEY, " ".....	1.00
Mrs. H. COURTES, " ".....	1.00
S. M. ROTHENHEIM, " ".....	1.00
Mrs. C. WEBSTER, " ".....	1.00
P. F. LANE, " ".....	1.00
M. SCHNITZER, " ".....	1.00
Total.....	$2,058.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

VICARIOUS TAXATION.

A bill for the limited taxation of church property is now pending in the New York State Legislature. The clergy, as shown in another column, have promptly come forward in defence of the unjust privilege now enjoyed by the churches. They have appointed a Clerical Committee to state their case to the Joint Committee of the Legislature. Rev. Rufus W. Clark, D.D., Chairman of this Clerical Committee, has already presented a written argument on the subject, which is published in full in the Albany Evening Journal of last Friday, April 2. Although long, we deem it of sufficient interest to occupy a place here in THE INDEX, in order that our criticisms may be fairly compared with the text. Dr. Clark's paper is as follows:—

Hon. W. H. Steele and Gentlemen of the Joint Committee of the Assembly and Senate, of the Legislature of the State of New York:

Allow me to address your honorable body in regard to the act reported to the Legislature which will exempt from taxation, only, "every building for public worship of the value of ten thousand dollars, and no more, and the land belonging thereto, and used exclusively therefor."

Many of the clergymen and citizens of Albany have expressed the earnest desire that this act should not be adopted, and become a law; and among the objections to it we would submit for your consideration the following:—

1. It is certainly not in accordance with the history of the past, or the usage of national governments, to levy a tax for their support upon the worship of God. This is also directly contrary to the genius of our civil institutions, under which the Church and the State are free and independent organizations, as far as relates to their control and support. Religion, in our republic, does not ask the State to furnish the means for its support; and it does not seem expedient or just for the State to ask religion to aid in its support. Especially, might we reasonably suppose that this Empire State, with its vast wealth and numerous resources for legitimate taxation, might carry on its government and maintain its laws, without resorting to this measure, that is without a precedent with, possibly a single exception, in the history of the States of our American Union. To compel the churches by law to contribute to the support of the civil government is to make them vassals of the government, and to introduce a principle that may lead to consequences beyond the taxation of edifices in which worship is rendered to God.

2. We object to the taxation of churches, because the Christian religion is the bulwark of our national freedom, the basis and support of human rights, and is absolutely essential to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people. While with us the Church and State are disconnected and independent, there is a vital connection between pure religion and our civil government. This doctrine was fully recognized by the fathers of our Republic, and has been strenuously maintained since, not only by the most eminent Christian writers, but also by our most influential and distinguished statesmen. Daniel Webster, in one of his orations, said: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but, if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us, and bury all our glory in profound obscurity." William H. Seward said: "The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influence of the Bible." Similar testimonies might be indefinitely multiplied, as expressive of the Christian and patriotic sentiments of the whole land. It is obvious that the strength and prosperity of our government lie in the moral principles of the people, in their inward sense of right and justice. An enlightened conscience is a mightier national power than constitutions, laws, courts, and prisons. The national life is closely allied to the life of religion, and hence the State should encourage and not discourage and burden religion.

The churches form a moral police force for the protection of life and property, for the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order. They cultivate loyalty and patriotism. During the late civil war, none surpassed the members of our churches in the ardor of devotion for the preservation of the government and the Union. From a single denomination, the Methodists, thirty thousand members, sacrificed their lives in defence of the Republic. May I ask you, gentlemen, can the State afford to paralyze or even weaken the right arm of its power? Will the revenue of money received from the taxation of the churches be an equivalent for the loss of the services they now gratuitously and gladly render to the State?

3. A third objection to the proposed tax is that it will fall upon those citizens by whose liberality the churches have been built, and who freely contribute to sustain them, and the benevolent objects and Christian missions that they originate and foster. The very large class in every community who contribute nothing for the support of the gospel will be exempt from this burden, while they share equally in all the advantages that accrue to the State from the maintenance of the churches. Their lives and property are safer; their business affairs are conducted on a surer basis on account of the integrity, honesty, and truth that religion inculcates; and whatever prosperity flows from free institutions based upon the moral sentiments of the people, they participate in equally with others. Is it, therefore, just to tax those citizens who have already taxed themselves to support the institutions of religion, having done this for their country as well as for their God, while the majority of the inhabitants are entirely exempt?

Under the proposed act, as nearly as we can form an estimate from the data before us, the churches of the State of New York would have to pay into the treasury over a million of dollars annually for the privilege of serving the State, after having expended, according to the United States census for 1870, sixty-six millions for the erection of their church buildings. Besides the injustice of this unequal taxation, it is obvious how largely such a tax would draw from the funds that are now devoted to charitable objects, to the support of the poor, to sustaining mission churches and Sunday-schools, and extending Christianity over the destitute portions of the land and in heathen countries.

I am fully aware of the complicated character of this whole question,—of its bearings upon municipal matters, to which we need not allude, and of the arguments that influence those who differ from us in opinion. But, viewing the subject in its broad aspects, in its direct and obvious injurious results, and in its possible effect upon Christianity, and upon the harmony that should unite the religious and civil forces of the State, we cannot but regard the levying of this tax as impolitic, unwise, and unjust, and as fraught with dangers that it may be too late in the future to avoid.

4. We would next urge upon your attention the difficulties that would attend the raising of this annual tax by most of the churches, that already have as much as they can do to maintain the stated worship of God. The recent financial depression has been severely felt by many of the churches in both city and country, and some have only been carried through the pressure by the great liberality of individual members. Heavy debts have recently been paid off, and after a long struggle the people now breathe freely, and are rejoicing over their improved financial condition. To throw upon them another burden in the form of a tax, unexpected and uncalled for in a time of peace and increasing commercial prosperity, just as they are emerging from past trials, would be in the highest degree discouraging. These philanthropic and Christian citizens are not toiling to sustain these churches for gain, or to advance any temporal interest, but to serve the God whom they adore and the country in which they dwell. They believe that "righteousness exalteth a nation," and that "happy is that people whose God is the Lord." It has been said that the proposed measure will lead the people to build cheaper churches in the city and country. But already, in the country especially, there are too many inferior and unattractive church edifices. They tend to repel rather than invite worshippers, particularly from among the young. They should be rendered as spacious, cheerful, and attractive as the means of the people will allow. The requirement the Lord made of his ancient people was "to beautify the place of my sanctuary," and then follows the promise, "And I will make the place of my feet glorious."

The costly churches in our large cities have been erected under exemption from taxation. And, besides being ornaments to those cities, they improve the real estate in their immediate neighborhood, and thus add to the value of taxable property, and in various ways are the source of local and municipal benefit. To tax them, even under a large reduction of valuation, would only be to seriously burden them.

The churches in Albany, only a few of which may come under the class of expensive churches, were valued a few years since at over $3,000,000. Should they be valued for taxation at $2,000,000, at three per cent, they would have to pay into the city treasury $60,000 every year. Under such an oppressive burden, must not the cause of religion, and the interest of humanity and good morals greatly suffer? It should be borne in mind that much of the property belonging to churches is already taxed, such as parsonages and buildings that yield a revenue to the church. The parsonage belonging to the First Reformed Church of this city pays an annual tax of about $400. Trinity Church in New York, in 1875, paid over $100,000 in taxes, and the Collegiate Reformed Church of New York also pays a large tax upon its property,—the precise amount I cannot at present state.

There is another feature of "The Act to amend chapter thirteen of part one of the Revised Statutes," to which you will allow me to direct your attention. While provision is made to exempt from taxation "every public school-house" and "every poor-house, almshouse, house of industry, and house of refuge, with the real and personal property belonging to and connected with the same," and "every public library, the use of which is given to the public without charge," there appears the following clause under the head of exemption, "every building used for a college, or incorporated academy, or other seminary of learning, over which the State exercises supervision." Now it is well known that there are institutions of learning in the State, over which the State does not exercise supervision, and among them are our theological seminaries. Are we to infer, because provision is not made in this bill (No. 401) for their exemption, that they are liable to taxation? If so, we would protest against the measure with all the force that argument and appeal can furnish.

These seminaries are as purely and exclusively religious institutions as the churches. They are founded and sustained by the free contributions of the Christian public to prepare young men for the gospel ministry. All the arguments we have used, and all others that can be used, against taxing churches, apply with equal force to theological seminaries; for they furnish the men to conduct the public worship, to instruct the people out of the Holy Scripture; and when we speak, as we have, of the influence of our churches in promoting order, good morals, and strengthening the civil government, we largely refer to the power of the pulpit. And if the loyal and Christian people of the State are to be crippled and hindered in their efforts to produce an educated ministry, and then crippled again in sustaining the worship of God, I would ask, in the name of all that is valuable in national freedom, and all that is sacred in religion, whither are we drifting?

In the great State of New York, abounding in resources of every kind, with its large and wealthy cities, with its admirable schools and numerous higher institutions of learning, with its intelligence and virtue, and supposed to possess all the elements of moral strength and civil power,—is this State willing to take the lead in the ungracious task of piling burdens upon theological seminaries and churches, that will crush some and greatly weaken others, at the same time dishonoring religion, and strengthening the hostile forces with which Christianity here and everywhere has to contend? Is the State of New York ready to set such an example to the nation, and bid the other States of the American Union follow them in a course that seems to us fraught only with public peril and national disaster?

Respectfully submitted,

RUFUS W. CLARK,

Chairman of the Clerical Committee on Church Taxation.

In the first place, the proposed bill, by exempting church property to the amount of $10,000, recognizes the justice and expediency of indirectly subsidizing the churches from the State treasury. No thorough radical on this question, therefore, can favor the bill. There is no difference whatever, in principle, between direct appropriations and indirect appropriations; a tax forgiven is in all respects equivalent to a gift outright. If the $10,000 exemption is approved by any one as just, he thereby acknowledges the truth of Dr. Clark's premises, and has no standing-ground against his argument. But if he deems those premises unsound, the injustice of an exemption of $10,000 is exactly as evident as an exemption of $100,000. It is not a question of amounts, but of rights. The State has no right to tax the community, directly or indirectly, for the support of private institutions uncontrolled by the State—which is the case with all churches. If it has a right to subsidize the churches at all, no objection can be successfully based on the mere amount of the subsidy. Logic is logic; the radicals give away their whole case if they concede the exemption of $10,000. Therefore we have no sympathy whatever with the bill now pending in New York, but should oppose a limited exemption in that State just as strenuously as we opposed a limited exemption in Massachusetts in 1874 and 1875. It is to be hoped that the New York radicals will not stultify themselves and deny their own cause, by weakly consenting to this miserable compromise. Better let the bill fail wholly, and continue to agitate for the establishment of the only just principle—the right of not being taxed for the support of religion AT ALL.

Now we will very briefly notice Dr. Clark's arguments.

1. Dr. Clark appeals to the "genius of our civil institutions," but proves his own utter ignorance of their spirit and tendency. He considers "the Church" and "the State" to be "free and independent organizations," neither having the right to tax the other. This is preposterous. The State knows nothing of "the Church," as such; it knows only a number of private associations and corporations and ecclesiastical bodies, which, so far as the State is concerned, stand precisely on the level of all other private corporations. Presumably, all private corporations contribute something to the general welfare; presumably, they all do good in one way or another. The churches ought to be "vassals of the government" just as much as banks, railroads, and other corporations are—no more and no less. Dr. Clark talks just like the Pope about the right of "the Church" to be set high above the authority and control of the civil government. If his argument means anything, it concedes the premises of Roman Catholicism to their full extent; and the Pope will reap all the benefit of it.

2. Dr. Clark falls back on that strongest of all arguments adduced in support of church exemption—the argument that "the churches form a moral police force," etc. We recognize the truth of this argument to some extent. It is true that the churches do exert a wholesome influence in the support of morality in some directions; and the National Liberal League has done all in its power, by exhibiting itself as a pernicious demoralizing influence, to strengthen and clinch this argument in the public mind, as decisive. But here again Dr. Clark proves too much for his own side. If the churches ought to be exempted from taxation because they do good in promoting morality, so ought banks, railroads, telegraph and telephone and manufacturing companies, etc., be exempted from taxation because they too do good in other directions. Doing good is no just ground for exemption. Taxation is not a penalty for not doing good. Every individual and every corporation, if not engaged in injurious enterprises, does good more or less. Taxation is a public burden, imposed on the whole community by the necessity of protecting life and property from aggression; and it ought to be assessed impartially and equally on all the interests protected. In this view, the churches are on the same footing with all other private associations; and they ought to be taxed accordingly.

3. Dr. Clark objects to the tax on churches because it will fall on those who are able to pay it! This is all we can make of his third objection; and a curious objection it is. The churches have been built by the liberality of certain citizens: granted. But these citizens have not built the churches as public enterprises, free to all alike. As the Nation well described them, the churches are nothing but "religious club-houses," built for the benefit of the members, and not of the public at large. Why should not those who build them for their own purposes pay for the public protection they demand and receive? Was Dr. Clark aware of the irony of his own words, when he urges that the members of these religious clubs support them "for their country as well as for their God," although they exclude from enjoyment of the offered advantages all those of their countrymen who cannot pay the usual club-fee in the shape of a pew-tax? Such arguments cruelly and pitilessly betray the feebleness of the reasons alleged for the perpetuation of a great injustice.

4. Dr. Clark next pleads the difficulty of paying the tax—as if tax-paying were not to most men a difficult and heavy burden at all times. Because church-owners have enjoyed exemption from taxes so long, he thinks they ought to feel aggrieved at not enjoying it forever, instead of feeling grateful for what they have already had. Is it nothing that other people are compelled to pay these "difficult" taxes in their stead, and thereby still more heavily saddled with the "difficulty" in question? In these days, the doctrine of the "Vicarious Atonement" has tapered off into the doctrine of VICARIOUS TAXATION! The doctrine in which radicals believe is that all sinners should smart for their own sins, and that all saints should pay their own taxes. The churches do not teach good morality when they reverse either of these doctrines. Sooner or later the American people will find this out; and the gospel of Vicarious Taxation, now preached by Dr. Clark in charming unconsciousness that it badly damages his other argument that the churches are a "police force" for the defence of morality, will yet be emphatically rejected by the people for the very reason that this gospel is fundamentally and hopelessly immoral.

HEAD OR HEART.

THE INDEX of Feb. 26 contained a contribution from the pungent pen of Mr. H. Clay Neville, of Missouri, which may well arouse the attention of those ardent advocates of mere materialism, who confidently count upon finding an easy explanation of the complex mysteries of the universe, including the gradual development of the intellectual powers of humanity, in the now generally accepted working hypothesis of "natural selection" and "survival of the fittest."

"Is it possible for man to know too much for his own happiness?" asks Mr. Neville; and the answer of one of the great poets recurs to memory, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." That ignorance is bliss, under some circumstances, is scarcely to be denied. Were it possible for a man to foresee in minutest detail all the untoward incidents between his cradle and his grave,—the inevitable ills of life, sickness, old age, the loss of friends,—even the most thoughtless and fortunate of mankind would find it difficult to enjoy existence; and it is not only true, as Mr. Neville remarks, that "man's happiness depends more upon what he feels than on what he knows," but he might have made his case very much stronger, and asserted that even the purest and most rational forms of happiness depend almost entirely upon physical and moral health and the delicacy and sensitiveness of the nervous system, rather than upon any degree of knowledge or ignorance whatever.

But is not this view, after all, almost a begging of the question, in so far as it assumes that men are born to be happy? At least, it may be argued, upon the other side, that duty points to the pursuit of the very truth, without reference to consequences.

In the same number of THE INDEX, Mr. Neville will find an answer to his plea for "Emotionalism" in Friend David Newport's communication, entitled "The Scientific Intellect," in which the latter asserts truly enough that "natural truth and spiritual truth belong to separate and distinct spheres," faith being as much the basis of the one as fact of the other. The real is to the ideal as Nature to art or truth to poetry, and mind claims its own realm, conceding its sister sphere to matter. Admitting the ideas of God, immortality, and the human soul divine, to be entirely efforts of the imagination to conceive the incredible,—responding simply to those wishes which are parents to the thoughts themselves,—it does not follow that the fact should be permitted to displace the fiction. This materialistic age, gone crazy in its idea that the ocean can be bailed dry by industrious buckets, that any human skull can contain ideas of the Absolute, persists in asserting that the highest good consists in a search after unadulterated truth, utterly unmindful of Pilate's question as to what the truth itself may be. Our most vivid conceptions are the truest, in a certain sense, and to suppose any one can ever frame for himself a perfect representation corresponding exactly to the objective reality is to ignore the conditions under which the human intelligence must always continue to exert its limited powers. Not until men have realized the futility of their striving after any real knowledge, beyond a comprehension of the natural laws dominating the universe, is there hope of farther progress. To accept the inevitable in unaffected humility, and believe all's for the best, appears the wisest philosophy; but the temper of the age is rather to chafe against our prison-bars, dispute the right of the great, first Cause to veil itself in mystery, and even, by subtle sophistry, to deceive ourselves into believing the finite can not only comprehend, but analyze, weigh, dissect, and sit in judgment upon the Infinite, as if a consensus of the really competent could ever be obtained from among weak mortals, who are all only more or less incompetent!

Conceding, however, that happiness is the chief end of man, and that any reasonable definition of enduring happiness must restrict it to such pursuits as do not tend to the injury of either the subject or the object (which is merely to assert that any innocent pleasure can be known and proved by simply asking if it is enjoyed at the expense of the human family, as the reading of the works of eminent authors, the delight in a beautiful landscape, the conversation of sympathetic souls, the satisfaction of doing good,—these, contrasted with the grosser forms of animal pleasure, such as gluttony, drunkenness, sensuality, and avarice, are seen at once to be harmless to the person who enjoys, and devoid of injury to others, while the latter injure not merely those concerned directly, but every one else, through their example), it would appear to follow that the intellect should indeed guide the emotions in their effort to realize their object in life, thus making the reason supreme, as Plato taught it should be; but here we are confronted by one of those stern facts which it is impossible to ignore,—the essential difference between what ought to be and what really is; for it cannot be denied that the very large majority of mankind take counsel of their feelings rather than from their reasoned convictions, and follow their animal desires and inclinations just as far as they dare or find to be possible, without coming into immediate contact with the laws.

It is but a miserably small minority of mankind that calmly discuss and coolly decide as to what it is right and best for them to do in their sojourn upon this mundane sphere: the heart influences the head a thousand times for each instance where the head succeeds in dictating to the heart. And to a certain extent one may pardonably cling to the illusions that gild as with a rainbow's hues the sombre clouds that lower before our eager gaze. This world is never quite so interesting to us after we have lost our child-faith in Santa Claus and the fairies; and credulity in the possibilities of our adult future is the all-sufficient excuse for over-optimism. But the glamour passes with most of us ere middle age, and the realities of the darker side of life make themselves felt, spite of us, so far as regards those facts capable of demonstration; and yet, so great is the elasticity of the human temperament, every healthy man and woman will supplant the boy and girl ideas with others,—probably not more real,—thus creating a reason for continuing to exist in ignorance.

And so the wisest ends with the faith of the little child in the beneficent possibilities of the future. And why should he not? "There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of" in any man's philosophy! If Auguste Comte could pray to his self-invented God, and Spinoza defend the idea of immortality, surely the vast army of lesser minds may respond to the unselfish heart-beats that cause them to hope for a reunion with the loved and lost. "Who rises from prayer a better man, his prayer is answered"; and whoever—crucifying the innate vanity that would cause him to believe himself worthy of immortality, because born with articulate speech—dares to hope for a continuance of his selfhood, dedicating his powers to the increase and perpetuation of the good within him, will not fail of his reward, here and hereafter. And thus will "Emotionalism," recognizing the insoluble mystery of life, ever continue to contest the supremacy of "Materialism," "Rationalism," "Agnosticism," and "Atheism." Reason for the mind! Religion for the heart! All the mental gymnastics and pyrotechnical dialectics in the possible grasp of humanity can never succeed in helping one single individual to lift himself off the ground by his own boot-straps. And not until

"When the fish swims out of the water,
And the bird soars out of the blue,
Shall man's thought transcend man's reason,
And his God be no image of You!"

A. W. K.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

LORD BEACONSFIELD is reported in excellent health and distinguished as a pedestrian.

EUGENE FAIRFAX WILLIAMSON, who has been troubling Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix of late, if he gets his deserts, will find himself among less gentlemanly surroundings for a while, at least.

PROFESSOR RITCHELL has perfected a flying machine, and contemplates an aerial voyage of exploration to the North Pole. That will be one way of rising above some of the difficulties of the undertaking.

B. F. UNDERWOOD concludes his lectures at Scranton, Ia., April 4, and speaks at Ames, Ia., April 5; Peru, Ill., April 7, 8, 9; Climax, Mich., April 12, 13, 14; Athens, Mich., 15, 16, 17, 18; Tipton, Ind., April 20, 21, 22; Anderson, Ind., April 23, 24, 25.

THERE ARE THOSE so rash as to declare that, if none of the candidates now before the people should be nominated, there would still remain one or two citizens to whom it might be safe, in the distressing emergency, to trust the republic.

MISS CAROLINE TALMAN has paid for the ground and building of an Episcopal Church in New York city. It cost $100,000, and is to be known as the Church of the Beloved Disciple. Radicalism is not without some noble examples of kindred philanthropy, but needs more of them.

SENATOR EDMUNDS is tall and square-shouldered and somewhat angular. He would at once be regarded as a man of great ability, of severity of culture, and of personal dignity. His voice is precise in its enunciation, confident in its tones, and it does not belong to the class of voices which popular and magnetic orators are considered to possess.

PRESIDENT HAYES participated in the ceremony of the opening of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, on Tuesday of last week, and delivered this little speech: "Ladies and Gentlemen,—By the kindness of the Board of Trustees of this institution,—an institution established to promote the interests of free and popular art education,—I have now the honor to make the formal announcement that the Metropolitan Art Museum is open to the public."

DR. J. L. DIMAN, of Brown University, in the sixth of his Lowell Institute lectures, delivered a few days ago, advanced views which are looked upon as important, in that they are perhaps the first public avowal on the part of a professed theologian of full faith in evolution as a philosophical principle, applicable in the historic sciences. He avowed his implicit confidence in it as a valuable, if not entirely fresh, addition to formal philosophy; and it will exert, in his opinion, a wholesome influence upon the methodology of historic and scientific theology.

REV. MR. HODGE has incited a schism in Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia. Mr. Hodge is one of those clergymen who favor Romanistic innovations in his church. He is the assistant minister of Rev. Dr. Foggo, the rector of Christ Church; and the immediate cause of the present disturbance is his effort to introduce the confessional into the chapel that he has in charge. Some sixty pew-holders of Christ Church have protested against the action, and the rector leads the condemnation. Two of the vestrymen have been removed for abetting the assistant minister in his retrogressive endeavors, and there is a squally condition of affairs in the church generally.

PROFESSOR JOHN FISKE, the critic and lecturer, is described as a large, tall man, with dark, curling hair and a thick, red beard, with a pale face and gold-rimmed spectacles. He passed his boyhood in Connecticut. While still in college, he wrote a criticism of Buckle, which led that writer to send to this country for the name of the author of it. He has a great memory. He is a step-son of E. W. Stoughton, but is a democrat in politics. He has long been writing a work upon the Aryans, as an introduction to the history of European civilization. Upon its completion, he will begin a work on "America's Place in History." He will sail for England in May, to lecture on American political ideas before the Royal Institution of Great Britain, being, we believe, the first American ever invited to lecture there.

FOREIGN.

SIR F. GOLDSMITH'S Life of Sir James Outram will be published in May.

PRINCIPAL CAIRD'S "Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion" will be ready by the end of this month.

THE ANCIENT superstition that it is unlucky to wear black at a wedding appears to be dying a natural death in England. That it is utterly disregarded by the guests is proved by the number of black satins, velvets, and brocades worn at recent weddings.

THE INDEFATIGABLE Mr. Goldwin Smith is credited with the design of writing a book advocating the union—as a means of preserving the peace of the world—or confederation of all the Anglo-Saxon communities in the world. Monarchy and aristocracy are, of course, to be given up as luxuries or obstructions to progress.

SIR FRANCIS HINCKS and the other directors of the Consolidated Bank at Montreal, against whom true bills were found at the last assizes for making false returns, have been formally acquitted at the Court of the Queen's Bench, the private prosecutor having withdrawn his accusation, and the crown having no evidence to offer.

THE OLDEST BISHOP in Catholic Christendom at present officiating—John, Archbishop of Tuan, to wit—has just entered his ninetyeth year. And he still sails about the wild isles of the West, carrying his crozier and preaching in the native tongue: he holds his monster stations on the hillsides, and takes care of the politics of his archiepiscopal province.

THE LATE MR. CHAPMAN, senior partner of the firm of Chapman & Hall, London, had "a certain modest part in the production of 'Pickwick.'" Among the distinguished authors publishing through this firm in Mr. Chapman's time may be mentioned Thomas Carlyle, Charles Dickens, the Brownings, Mrs. Gaskell, Mr. Gaskell, Miss Muloch, and the Trollopes.

AT THE LONDON AQUARIUM recently there was a special performance of Mr. Farini's Zulus, to introduce to the public three Zulu women, supposed to be daughters of Cetewayo, or at least to have lived in his kraal. The most attractive thing about these young ladies is their names, which are sonorous and poetically significant, Unolala, Unomadloza, Unozendaba. They seemed rather uncomfortable in the very scanty attire thrust upon them by relentless Western civilization, but otherwise gentle and affable.

ONE OF THE CANDIDATES for election on the West Bromwich (England) School Board, who advocated what is known as the London Syllabus of religious instruction, recently asserted that John Bright, among other English Liberals, was in favor of giving religious instructions in the Board Schools. Somebody wrote to Mr. Bright about this, and in reply received a note in these words: "I must not take any part in your discussions or contests, but my opinion is that, if you go beyond the old practice of the British school system of reading a portion of Scripture without note or comment, you will find yourselves in great difficulties, without doing anything to promote religion or peace."

MR. EDWIN ARNOLD, whose poem, The Light of Asia, has passed through two editions here and eight in America, has received the following letter from the King of Siam, together with His Majesty's order of the White Elephant: "GRAND PALACE, BANGKOK, Dec. 5, 1879. Sir,—My father devoted much time to the study and defence of his religion, and although I, being called to the throne while young, had no time to become a scholar like him, I, too, have interested myself in the study of the Sacred Books, and take a great interest in defending our religion and having it properly understood. It seems to me that, if Europeans believe the missionary preaching that ours is foolish and bad religion, they must also believe that we are a foolish and bad people. I therefore feel much gratitude to those who, like yourself, teach Europeans to hold our religion in respect. I thank you for the copy of your poem, The Light of Asia, presented to me through my minister in London. I am not a sufficiently good scholar to judge English poetry, but, as your work is based upon the similar source of our own information, I can read it through with very much pleasure; and I can say that your poem, The Light of Asia, is the most eloquent defence of Buddhism that has yet appeared, and is full of beautiful poetry; but I like Book Second very much, and am very much interested in the final sermon. I have no doubt that our learned men would argue with you for hours or for years, as even I can see that some of your ideas are not quite the same as ours. But I think that in showing 'love' to have been the eminent characteristic of the Lord Buddha, and Karma, in Siamese 'Kam,' the result of the inevitable law of Dharma, the principle of existence, you have taught Buddhism; and I may thank you for having made a European Buddhist speak beautifully in the most wide-spread language of the world. To mark my opinion of your good feeling toward Eastern peoples, and my appreciation of your high ability and the service you have done to all Buddhists by this defence of their religion, I have much satisfaction in appointing you an officer of our most exalted Order of the White Elephant, of which you will soon hear further from Mr. D. K. Mason, my Consul-General in London. I am yours faithfully, CHULALONGKORN, King.

"To EDWIN ARNOLD, C. S. I., etc."
—Athenæum.

Communications.

LETTER FROM GERMANY.

TUEBINGEN, March 13, 1880.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I send you a translation made by Miss Francis of a document discovered some time since by the police in St. Petersburg, and afterwards copied into the German papers. It is the most concise statement of the objects and intentions of the Nihilists I have seen, and may serve to show your readers what sort of thought supports the would-be murderers of the present Emperor of Russia.

I find THE INDEX a very pleasant weekly visitor, and never appreciated it so fully as now. The short article "Religion in Germany," in No. 531 of THE INDEX, which came to-night, prompts me to say that religion in Germany and religion in America are two entirely different articles.

Yesterday, Sunday, in returning from a long walk through the woods, I met three men with their dogs and guns hunting. Two of these men I knew, and they were professors in the University; the third may also have been, but I did not know him. These men are not irreligious in their way of thinking. They see no harm in taking a quiet walk just before sunset on Sunday evening, and shooting a hare or two. The sun shines, and the hares run, and there is no public sentiment which would be offended as in America, therefore no moral transgression. Some little time ago, I was invited to attend a missionary meeting. It was held in the sitting-room of a hotel. Just before the meeting was called to order, the servant entered and supplied every member with a quart bottle of beer. Those present sat around a number of tables, poured out their beer, lighted their cigars, and were then in a passive state for the reading of the Secretary's report. A long paper was read on the different attempts at civilizing and converting the North American Indians. The paper showed up the destructive effects of liquor among the Indians, and was discussed and enjoyed along with beer and tobacco. Learned and thinking men, authors of books, were present; but this combination of the missionary spirit with beer and tobacco held nothing of incongruity in their minds. Beer is as much a part of a German's life and diet as water is of an American's, therefore there is not the slightest feeling against its use. The same might be said of tobacco. Beer is fed to infants, served up in soups for dinners, and is considered a necessity for both old and young. A man who doesn't drink beer in Germany is either sick or insane. So would run the verdict of the majority.

Moral sentiment is entirely a matter of education. The Germans are differently educated from the Americans, and therefore act differently, but I believe fully as conscientiously. It is therefore perfectly absurd to make a comparison of German customs with our own in America a basis for judging of their depth of religious feeling.

That the Germans take excursion trains on Sunday by thousands in all the large cities, and go into the country to enjoy a little of Nature, or that they attend concerts on Sunday and listen to the elevating and ennobling Symphonies of Beethoven and Mozart, tells nothing against religion and religious feeling, but only for it. That the beer-drinking is a national calamity is granted by a few clear-headed Germans. They see that only a minimum amount of nourishing material is returned for a vast quantity of grain used and labor expended. This condition of things in a densely populated country, where in many parts the soil is too poor, even when economically cultivated, to support the inhabitation, is a very serious question. But this immense use of beer, amounting as it does in such a city as Munich to two hundred litres per head, man, woman, and child, has a much more serious side than the economical. The excessive use of beer conduces to laziness and stupidity. It produces a corpulent, phlegmatic people; and still worse, through its effect on the physical system, narrows the intellect and dulls the moral perceptions.

Sincerely yours,

W. P. WILSON.

The Programme of the Nihilists.

(Taken from a paper discovered by the police in St. Petersburg.)

We are socialists and partisans of the people in our innermost convictions. We are convinced that mankind can be thoroughly imbued with liberty, equality, and fraternity only on the socialistic basis, and that only on this basis can a universal, material well-being, and a complete, all-sided development of personality, and, in consequence thereof, progress, be secured. We are convinced that only the will of the people can sanction social forms, that the development of the people is lasting only when it proceeds independently and freely, when every idea, which is to be realized in life, becomes first clear to the conscience and will of the people. The welfare of the people and the will of the people,—these are our most sacred principles, and inseparably united. . . . It is our conviction that the will of the people can be expressed by a Constitutional Assembly, which should be chosen freely by universal suffrage. This would for a long time, naturally, be no ideal form of the expression of the popular will, but rather the only one possible at the present time. It is, therefore, our aim to take the power from the existing government and make it over to a constitutional assembly, which must break through all our civil and social institutions, and remodel them, in conformity with the instructions of their electors. Our programme consequently sets forth the following objects:—

1. A continued representation of the people, composed as above said, and armed with full power in all civil questions.

2. A comprehensive self-administration, guaranteed by free right of election to all offices.

3. Independence of the community as an economic and administrative unity.

4. Proprietorship of the soil to reside in the people.

5. A uniform standard of weights and measures to be applied to all manufactories and industrial institutions.

6. Entire freedom of conscience, of speech, of the press, of associations, of assemblies, and of election agitations.

7. Universal right of election, without limitation of rank or property.

8. The standing army to be replaced by a territorial one.

In reference to these aims, the activity of the party is divided into:—

1st. Activity in the direction of agitation and propaganda. The propaganda has for its object to popularize in all classes of the people the idea of a democratic, political revolution, as the means of a social reform, as well as to familiarize them with its own party programme. The agitation must strive to call out protests on the part of the people and society in the most comprehensive way possible against the existing order of things, and reform must be demanded in the spirit of the party; namely, the summoning of a constitutional assembly. The forms of these protests may be assemblies, demonstrations, petitions, addresses in furtherance of the end, refusal to pay taxes, etc.

2d. Destructive and terrorist activity. The terrorist activity, which consists in the putting aside the most pernicious representatives of the government, in the protection of the party from spies, in the punishment of arbitrary power on the part of the administration, etc., has for its object to undermine the prestige of the power of government, to give continually a proof of the possibility of a struggle against it, and in this way to create in the people a revolutionary spirit, and the faith in success, and finally to organize armed forces ready for the conflict.

3d. The organization of secret societies, and grouping them about a common centre. The organization of small secret societies, with all possible revolutionary aims, is indispensable as well for the carrying out of the numerous functions of the party as for the instruction of the members thereof. But these smaller organizations must collect about a common centre in reference to a united carrying out of the cause; namely, by means of revolution.

4th. The attainment of an influential position, and of relations with the administration and the army, with society and the people. The administration and the army are especially important in connection with revolution.

5th. Organization and carrying out of the revolution. In view of the fact that the people are suppressed, and that the government may be able to delay for a long time the universal revolutionary movement, the party itself must take the initiatory step, without waiting for the moment when the people can inaugurate a revolution without them. As for the method of carrying on the revolution, . . . this point is not a subject for publication.

6th. Election agitation for the calling of a constitutional assembly. In whatever way a revolution is to be accomplished, it is the duty of the party to promote the immediate summoning of the constitutional assembly and the surrender of power to the temporary government.

"THE IRISHRY."

MR. EDITOR:—

A remarkable communication appears in your issue of March 25,—remarkable, not for its fair statements and just deductions, but the want of them; wildness of assertion, supported not by facts, and backed only by that narrowness of reason which leaves upon an impartial reader the conviction that the writer must belong to that class who form their judgment by their prejudices, and allow no one credit for sincerity or honesty who may differ from them.

To one born and educated in New England, the term "Irishry" sounds not only non-intellectual, but carries such weight as to leave a firm impression that one who could be guilty of using it in a public communication cares not in the least what consideration those to whom it may be presented place upon it or its author, so long as he has the opportunity of working off that bile which has so sickened his body.

If the article had borne the name of its writer, no one probably would have given it any attention more than the mere perusal which the contents of a paper generally receives in its non-interesting parts. Few would be found to sympathize with it, while many undoubtedly would feel a pang of sorrow that there was still existing in our own great country some who are still living, so to speak, in that darkness and vapor which hung over the world in those years when intelligence was little diffused and men had not learned that Reason and Justice were governed by a higher law than that of the blindness of bigotry and the wild dictates of passion.

If the Irish as a race, or as individuals, "rave against the British Government as an oppression," they have just cause so to do. If that government which sought to encompass the efforts which our Revolutionary heroes were making to free themselves from the yoke of its despotism, by inciting and encouraging to continued labor the wild and soulless savages to the hellish task of torturing, ravishing, and burning of women and children, has not been an oppression to the Irish people, then their land has been an exception, and the only exception, to the remorselessness of a government whose rule has been marked in every quarter of the globe by a fiendishness and blood-thirstiness of policy which stands without a parallel, and forms the foulest blot of all foul blots upon the pages of history. But the wall that comes over the sea tells its own story, and the American people, its representatives whose hearts and souls are in keeping with the greatness and grandeur of the Republic, have heard it, and across the great ocean that intervenes, with the rapidity of the lightnings, have flashed those kindly messages which are succoring at the present time a famished people. We do not suppose that he who wrote the article under the caption of "The Irishry" was among their number any more than we do that he ever once contrasted the difference between the estate of an English landlord and the mud hovels of his Irish tenant-farmers; for men credited with the small prejudices of blind bigotry are seldom accorded any liberal reach of the imagination.

He says that "a certain number of Celts will do as a sprinkling in an Anglo-Saxon community." Were he more intelligent and better informed, he would not venture such a statement in the face of the fact that more than three-fourths of the white population of America are of Celtic origin. He further says that "the faces of the American-born Celts are characterized by a hideous animalism," and that "the voices of the children are harsh and bestial."

In the light of truth and the millions of examples for observation all over our broad country, no man who values his own honor and reputation would make such a statement; for it is purely knavish or idiotic, and must necessarily arise from that low cunning born of dishonesty or as the vision of a badly formed brain whose condition must be exceedingly unhealthy. Such statements need no comment, and are more resiliently injurious to their author than harmful to those against whom they are launched. If his intellectual capacity were not so small, he might be asked to read the history of our country. Taking it for granted that he has in no manner added to its glory or renown, before dismissing forever, with the contempt which they richly deserve, those foolish murmurs against a race which form such a large constituent part of our population, the attention of any who may through disease, disappointment, or other cause, be led into such a narrow channel of thought, is called to these facts ere their bark strike those rocks which ever wreck the bigot's craft.

There is no position within the gift of the Republic which has not been occupied by men of Celtic origin, or, to go further still and narrow down the circle to that class of Celts descended of Irishmen, there is no position so high that they have not been represented there. In the executive, judicial, and legislative departments of our government, National, State, and Municipal, they have been bright and shining lights. When this government which they helped to create was in trouble, and war with its red visage threatened its supremacy, they were found with rifles in their hands and with stout hearts, strong sinews, and never-tiring fidelity beneath our country's flag, sharing its fortunes and offering up their lives in its defence. In the Senate and at the bar, in the field of letters and in the workshops, in the great marts of trade and on the registers of commerce, on the farm-fields and at the outposts of our advancing civilization, as well as in all walks of life, whether humble or high, their representatives may be found worthy to be proud of and worthy to emulate.

COMMON SENSE.

IS CREDULITY ALL GONE?

DAVENPORT, IOWA.

DEAR INDEX:—

In L. K. Washburn's sermon of THE INDEX of February 26 is a statement which seems to be hasty, or our brother must be in a charmed circle where reason prevails:—

"To push any longer the claims of the Christian religion upon the assumption of its divine origin is to presume upon an ignorance which has passed away, and a credulity which is nearly extinct."

The emphasis is mine, but he meant it evidently. I would not claim a divine origin for Christianity, in the popular sense of the claim; but what about the passing away of the ignorance and credulity to which he refers? If that statement is true for Boston and its vicinity, is it not time for our reformers to come out West where the people live? It has been nearly twenty years since I was settled within two hours of the "Hub," and may not be informed of the progress of public sentiment in that vicinity since the civil war. I occasionally see the papers of New England,—nay, they lie around me all the time, not only those from Boston, but from the vicinity; and it seems to me that the aforesaid "ignorance" has not passed away, nor the "credulity" become extinct, even in your favored part of the world. If not thus, what may you think this broad land of less pretence to intelligence?

Let me ask now, What do you hear of the influence of the Pope and the priests of the Roman Church which keeps from the public schools so many thousands of American children, even at an extra expense to the parents? Is there any other cause for this than the belief of the divine origin of Christianity and the divine guidance of its priests? What power keeps alive the superstitions of the Dark Ages, if not that which is entrenched behind the divine authority of the claims of the Church?

The Protestant churches are departing from the old landmarks, that every Orthodox church rests on the theory of the divine origin of the Bible and its essential infallibility. Is the credulity extinct, which has accepted all the traditions of the Roman Catholic Church, and which among Protestants calls the magnetic spasms and nervous exhaustion of revivals the power of the Holy Ghost? When the gaping worshipper thinks that the tinkling of a little bell is to report the fact that a miracle is performed in the Catholic Church, and some Protestants yet believe that heaven is won by immersion at the hands of a Christian minister, is there no credulity in Christendom that leads to superstition and folly? If people still believe that the Virgin Mary visits springs in France and Italy, and imparts to the water a healing power; and, at the other extremity of thought, we find people believing that Aunt Mary's spirit materializes, so she can cure Sister Alice by the touch of her hand,—is there no credulity in religion?

Ten years a commission sits in council, in England, to correct erroneous readings in the King James version of the Bible. Why this expense and painstaking? Is it simply a literary work that is being done? Is it simply that the English reader may know what was the correct reading, so far as can now be determined, of certain old manuscripts in the Hebrew and Greek languages? On the contrary, is it not the conviction that the Bible is the word of God, that lies at the bottom of all this expense and labor? Is it only ignorance which supports that theory of the Bible? Is there not still a good share of credulity in that belief?

A recent number of THE INDEX reported certain language used by a speaker at a meeting of the Massachusetts Bible Society. It was significant. We are there told that the Bible is all the word of God, that every sentence, syllable, and utterance of it is given by the inspiration of God. God is enshrined in the words of the Bible! "It is an unimprovable word." "To alter the Scripture is to alter God." And this was in a community where the ignorance has passed away and the credulity has become extinct, which are based on a belief in the divine origin of Christianity. Is there not some mistake about this thing? Can we act on any such assumption? Are we not just beginning a battle with the old dragon of superstition? S. S. HUNTING.

JESTINGS.

FACTS ARE stubborn things. Mules are facts.

"DEER AT ANY PRICE!" yelled the hungry traveler who ordered venison for dinner.

SOMEBODY SAYS a wife should be like roasted lamb, —tender and nicely dressed. Somebody else wickedly adds,—and without sauce."

"ARE YOU THE MATE?" said a man to the Irish cook of a vessel lying in port. "No," said he, "but I'm the man that boils the mate."

A SHREWD CONFECTIONER has taught his parrot to say "pretty creature" to every lady who enters the shop, and his business is rapidly increasing.

A CAREFUL POLITICAL ECONOMIST closely calculated that the women in this country might annually save $14,500,000 in ribbons, which the men might spend in cigars.

LADY: "They tell me your cow never gives any milk, Betty?" Old Betty: "No, mum, she don't give hardly any. But, bless 'er 'eart, she'll eat as much as two o' them good milkers."—Fun.

MINISTER: "Sorry I never see you at church, sir. As a leading man in the parish, you ought to be one of the pillars." Man: "Well, at all events, if I'm not a pillar, I'm one of the buttresses,—always to be found outside, you know."

SO MANY TRACTS, articles, and books have been written in order to give advice about what great, good work a woman can do about home that a critic is compelled to say that thousands of women are toiling in life without homes.

AN IMAGINATIVE IRISHMAN gives utterance to this lamentation: "I returned to the halls of my fathers by night, and I found them in ruins! I cried aloud, 'My fathers, where are they?' and an echo responded, 'Is that you, Patrick McClathery?'"

AT AN EXAMINATION for admission to the bar, the question was asked: "What is the rule in Shelley's case?" One of the class answered: "The rule in Shelley's case is the same as in any other man's case. The law is no respecter of persons."—Irish Law Times.

A LOVER'S ALARM CLOCK has been introduced in New Orleans. At ten o'clock it strikes loudly, two little doors open, and a man with a dressing-gown and cap on glides out, holding in his hand a card inscribed "Good-night." As he bows, and smilingly retires back into the clock, the young man takes the hint, says "good-night" to the fair daughter, and departs.

GIRLS ARE SAID to be an expensive luxury, since the want of mental attractions must be made good by the attractions of velvet flounces and gay attire. We have great sympathy for the German father who was caught on his knees by his spouse, and praying, "O, Lord, who clothe the flowers of the field, please to clothe my two girls." The mother waited until the supplication was ended, and then added a very pathetic "Amen."

PATRICK'S EXPERIENCE with the elevator.—Sez I, "Iz Misher Shmith in, surr?" Sez the man wid the soger cap, "Will yez stip in?" So I tips into the closet, and all of a suddint he pulls at a rope, and, it's the trooth I'z tellin' yez, the walls of the building begin runnin' down cellar as though the divil was after them. "Houly murder!" sez I, "what'll become of Bridget and the childer which was lift below there?" Says the soger-cap man. "Be aizey, surr: they'll be all right when yez come down." "Come down, is it?" says I; "and is it no closet at all, but a haythenish balloon that yez got me in?" And with that, the walls stopped stock still, and he opened the door, and there I was wid the roof jist over me head! And that was pat saved me from goin' up till the hivins entailry.—Boston Transcript.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 "13" "25" "8" " "
 "26" "51" "6" " "
 "52" " " "5" " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Lucy Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with address on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wigson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Superstitionism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "The Theological and Rational Ethics"; address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, rights for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays, for the School of Ethical Culture.	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.	1.50
Little Men.	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrated.	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins."	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.	1.25
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps.	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.	1.00
My Girls, &c.	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.	1.50
Mixed Essays.	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma."	1.50
Literature and Dogma.	2.00
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies added to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.	1.50
French Eton.	1.00
New Poems.	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.	2.00
BAOON'S Essays.	1.00
SAGEHOT on the English Constitution.	2.25
Physics and Politics.	1.50
Lombard Street.	1.25
SAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.	1.50
Mind and Body.	1.50
Logic. Deductive and inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.	2.00
Emotions and the Will.	2.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C.A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.	.75
Eating and Drinking.	.50
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W.B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.	1.50
A Book of Poems.	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	1.50
CHEENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.	1.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of Childhood of Religions.	1.25
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. The Religious Demands of the Age.	3.00 3.00 .20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.	2.00
Idols and Ideals.	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies."	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	3.00
Journal of Researches.	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and Lower Animals.	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.	2.00
Effects of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.	1.25
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.	3.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.	1.50
Romola. Illustrated.	3.00
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.	1.50
EMERSON'S (E.W.) Essays. First Series. Portrait.	1.50
Essays. Second Series.	1.50
Miscellanies.	1.50
English Traits.	1.50
Conduct of Life.	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.	1.50
Society and Solitude.	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph.D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Achanse Coquerel the Younger.	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Critical Essays on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols. The Unseen World, and other Essays.	6.00 2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.	2.00
Creed and Conduct.	1.00
Oracles of the Past.	1.75
Training and Settling.	1.00
Visions of the Future.	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.	1.50
Stories of the Patriarchs.	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.	1.00
Safest Creed.	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. Edited by E. B. Elliot.	1.75 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.	2.00
Creed of Christendom.	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.	1.50
Thoughts about Art.	2.00
The Intellectual Life.	2.00
Chapters on Animals.	2.00
Round my House.	2.00
The Sylvan Year. In the Tockney River. The two in one volume.	2.00
Wanderholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine Illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.	2.50
Etching and Etchers.	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.	1.50
Gala Days.	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.	1.50
Summer Rest.	1.50
My Atom and My Story of Obedience.	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.	1.50
Wool-Gathering.	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.	1.50
Skirmishes and Sketches.	1.50
First Love is Best.	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.	3.50
1. Psychological Lectures.	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.	.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.	.35
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.	1.00
Rits of Travel and Home.	1.50
Life. Illustrated.	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Town Romance.	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.	1.50
Atlantic Essays.	2.00
Oldport Days.	2.50
HUMPHREY (ALEXANDER) VOY. Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.	1.25
On the Origin of Species.	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nightmares.	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.	1.50
American Addresses.	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
No. II. Physics and Psychology. Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
No. III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
No. IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
No. V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
No. VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
No. VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
No. VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
No. IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
No. X. Science of the Future. By Alex. Bain.	1.75
No. XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.	1.75
No. XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper.	1.75
No. XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.	1.50
No. XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.	2.00
No. XV. Fungi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.	2.00
No. XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.	1.50
No. XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.	1.75
No. XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.	2.00
No. XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesomeres. By Max Schultze.	1.50
No. XX. On Fermentation. By P. Scherer.	1.50
No. XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.	1.75
No. XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Hermann Blasenmaier.	1.50
No. XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
China.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek.	8.00
KNAPPET (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual of Jewish Theology. Translated by Richard A. Armstrong.	1.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II. Per vol.	3.00 3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.	3.00
The Study of Psychology: its Objects, Scope, and Method.	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.	1.50
Among my Books.	2.00
My Study Windows.	2.00
A Fable for Critics.	.75
Under the Turret. 2 vols. Per vol.	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.	1.25
Three Memorial Poems.	1.25
Fireside Travels.	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00 5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1 vol.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government.	2.50
Autobiography.	2.50
Mental Volitions and the Works.	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.	1.50
Songs of Italy.	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
Man and Ape. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Ancestry and Origin. 1 vol.	1.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.	2.50
The Same. Second Series.	3.50
Chips from a Woodcutter's Shop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.	2.50 2.50 2.50 2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
On Mistaken. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	1.50 4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.	1.5
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.	.61
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite. The Philosophy of Swedenborg.	1.01 1.2
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.	1.50
The Trolley Book.	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.	1.50
Hedged In.	1.50
The Silent Partner.	1.50
What to Wear?	1.50
Poetic Studies.	1.00
The Story of Avis.	1.5
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.	1.50
PROUTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	1.50
PROUTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	6.00
SCIENCE. TIMES:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. Hooker.	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical.	1.25
First Principles.	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the Great First of them developed.	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style.	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	8.00
Society.	1.50
Decorative Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	9.00
Universal Progress.	2.50
Data of Ethics.	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAIN'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods.	2.00
Ospe Cod.	2.00
Letters.	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.	2.50
Light and Electricity.	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	2.00
Radiant Heat.	5.00
Forms of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	.50
Lessons in Electricity.	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.	.50
VOYSE (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.00
Sauterlings.	1.50
Back-Log Studies.	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Wives and Folks.	1.50
The Other Girls.	1.50
Fancies. A Volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.	2.00
Child Life.	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that would secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES.

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The Brute God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workingman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preëxistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions. $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address CHARLES DEB. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS.

In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all Inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 538.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE ILLINOIS Supreme Court has decided in favor of permitting the reading of the Bible in the public schools.

IT IS GRATIFYING to learn that the Academy of Science at Turin has awarded a prize, amounting in value to about £480, to Dr. Charles Darwin for his discoveries in the physiology of plants.

A SECULAR PAPER in Manchester, England, makes the following estimate of the numbers of various denominations in the English-speaking world: Episcopalians, 18,000,000; Methodists, 16,000,000; Roman Catholics, 13,500,000; Presbyterians, 10,250,000; Baptists, 8,000,000; Congregationalists, 6,000,000; Unitarians, 1,000,000; minor religious sects, 1,500,000; of no particular religion, 8,500,000. Totals, 82,750,000.

THAT BRIGHT and clean little sheet, the Albany Liberal Bulletin, says: "Bishop Doane says that to subsidize church property by granting it exemption from the payment of taxes has been 'the universal belief and practice of all countries and all centuries,' but neglects to add that the unwise custom has led to the equally 'universal' consequence of ecclesiastical accumulation of property, revolution, anarchy, and confiscation."

COL. HIGGINSON, writing in the Woman's Journal about "Dealing with Legislatures," gives advice against reading speeches before legislative committees which must excite a smile on the faces of all his masculine readers: "Besides, the process of reading often involves the use of eye-glasses or spectacles; and these are, for some reason, so much more unbecoming to a woman than to a man that her face especially loses under their disfigurement much of its power."

THE MASSACHUSETTS Legislature revised its Bible-in-Schools law to some extent on March 30. It now reads (first section of Chapter 57 of the Acts of 1882): "The school committee shall require the daily reading of some portion of the Bible, without written note or oral comment, in the public schools; but they shall require no scholar to read from any particular version, or to take any personal part in the reading, whose parent or guardian shall inform the teacher in writing that he has conscientious scruples against it; nor shall they ever direct any school books calculated to favor the tenets of any particular sect of Christians to be purchased or used in any of the public schools."

SUBSEQUENT TO a lecture delivered a short time ago at Sydney, Australia, by Mr. Charles Bright, on "The Brothers Newman" arrangements were made for preparing a testimonial to be sent to Prof. F. W. Newman of England. This has been done, and is a very handsome silver inkstand, neatly designed and well executed, mounted on an ebony stand, and bears the following inscription: "Presented to Francis William Newman by a few of the Freethinkers of Sydney, Australia, as a token of their respect for his career, and appreciation of the rare ability, the reverence for the true, and incisive criticism of the false, manifested in his works. January 1, 1880."

THIS PLEASING announcement is from the Boston Advertiser of March 30: "The Massachusetts Humane Society has lately had struck from a new die some superb, massive gold medals, weighing over five ounces each, two of which are designed for Messrs. Samuel Wyllis Dabney and Herbert Dabney, 'for their noble and persevering efforts, made at great peril, by which they saved so many lives in the terrible storm in the harbor of Fayal, November 30, 1879.' Another is for Ensign Lovell K. Reynolds, U.S.N., for his brave and heroic conduct in rescuing the crew of the barque Olive at sea, on the 24th November, 1879. These medals are on exhibition at the store of Messrs. Bigelow, Kennard, & Co."

THE LONDON Secular Review of March 13 says: "Mr. Holyoake was told there was a rumor that he had made a prayer in America. He answered, 'Yes,' and said he would read it to the audience, which he did, and stated that, when his opinions were changed, his friends would not have to learn the fact from sinister rumor. He should tell them himself if he accepted any Christian tenet he did not now hold; it would be because he found it true, and then he should teach it. He had no fear of truth, whatever name it bore. Several persons asked for the date and address of the Boston INDEX (Dec. 4, 1879), which contained the prayer, as the Secular Review, which quoted it, was understood to be out of print."

THE Nation of April 1 has this statement: "In New York, the Independents will, we understand, hold a convention in May, either in this city or in Albany. They have arranged, too, in the way of popular propaganda, for a series of lectures at their rooms here, of which the first four, to be succeeded by others not yet announced, will be by Horace White, Albert Stickney, Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and Matthew Hale, on 'The Third Term,' 'The Aims of Independent Republicans,' 'Individuality in Politics,' and 'The Conditions and Limits of Party Fealty,' respectively." It is pleasant to notice that Colonel Stickney's True Republic is already winning for him the reputation and influence which its commanding ability deserves.

MR. MALLOCK's recipe for making an imitation of Robert Browning is as follows: "Take rather a coarse view of things in general. In the midst of this place a man and a woman, her and her ankles, tastefully arranged on a slice of Italy, or the country about Pornic. Cut an opening across the breast of each, until the soul becomes visible, but be very careful that none of the body be lost during the operation. Pour into each breast as much as it will hold of the new strong wine of love; and, for fear they should take cold by exposure, cover them quickly up with a quantity of obscure classical quotations, a few familiar allusions to an unknown period of history, and a half-destroyed fresco by an early master, varied every now and then with a reference to the fugues or toccatas of a quite-forgotten composer. If the poem be still intelligible, take a pen and remove carefully all the necessary particles."

THE SEYMOUR Times says: "Mind and Matter, the new spiritual paper at Philadelphia, is waging a vigorous war against the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago, for its exposures of the frauds and shallow humbugs that have attached themselves, like barnacles to the sides of a stanch ship, to the cause of Spiritualism. Innumerable impostors have arisen, whose aim has been to make money out of the widespread popular interest in those phenomena called 'Spiritual manifestations.' Many of those impostors have been time and again exposed before Col. Bundy undertook the job, but those exposures have been by the unbelievers in Spiritualism. Mr. Bundy has undertaken to purify his own premises, and he has brought upon himself the wrath of the crowd whose element is mire, if there is money at the bottom. It would seem that a paper opposed to deception, hypocrisy, false pretence, fraud, and immorality, ought to receive the plaudits of an honest people; but, if we take the say-so of Mind and Matter, the Spiritualists are, almost as one man, for crushing out the Religio-Philosophical Journal for its warfare upon fraudulent mediums and its efforts to free Spiritualism from the tricks of legerdemain and clap-trap." It is very common for liberals to grow indignantly eloquent over the unwillingness of the churches to purify their cause from internal corruptions. But human nature is pretty much the same everywhere. Liberals and Spiritualists do not like to take the medicine they so freely prescribe.

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN AHRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. E. URBINO, West Newton, Mass.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, SYRACUSE, N.Y. E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, MIL-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.J.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 EBEN TULL, Chelsea, Mass. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JOHN NICK, Watertown, N.Y. E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MORRY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Religion in Business.

A DISCOURSE.

BY REV. M. J. SAVAGE,
OF BOSTON.

"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."—PROV. iii., 6.

When I was quite a boy, I once heard a witty and remarkable campaign speech by the Hon. Joshua R. Giddings, then a representative from Ohio. He was referring to the popular prejudice against "mixing religion and politics," and he said, "Taking politics as they run, I have no doubt they would be badly damaged by mixing religion with them; but, if they were only what they ought to be, religion would not hurt them a bit."

So it seems to me that the question as to whether it is a good thing to mix religion and business may be said to depend upon two things: first, what kind of business one is engaged in; and, secondly, what kind of religion one has to bring into it. There is a large variety of businesses, and there is also a large variety of religions.

There are a good many kinds of business in which very respectable people are engaged, into which, if you should bring a good religion, it would work mischief at once. It would interfere with its methods; it would disarrange its whole machinery; it might upset it altogether.

But, on the other hand, it is also true that there is many a business that is better than much of the world's religion. And, if some of these religions were permitted to come into and control a good business, it would pervert or degrade it.

It is not a matter, then, so very easy to settle, after all. And whether it is a good thing to have religion in one's business will depend upon the kind of religion and the kind of business we have in mind.

To this theme, then, we will now address ourselves.

Our subject is a large one. And, in order that we may see some of its more important bearings, I shall ask you to go with me while we trace out three of its main branches. We will note—

I. Some things that religion has done for business.
 II. Some things that business has done for religion;

III. What the world's business will become under the guidance and inspiration of true religion.

What, then, are some of the things that religion has done for business? That we may understand what a power religion has been over human life, let us go back for a little while to primitive times. At first religion had everything its own way. Not only what is now technically called business, but the whole business of life, in the broadest sense, was under its supreme control. Beginning with the worship of ancestors, religion determined the organization of the family. It determined who might and who might not marry. It presided over the birth of children. It settled the position and limited the rights of each member of the household. It laid down the laws of adoption, of alienation, of kinship. It defined the rights of property. It established the rules of succession to the family authority and the family estates. The entire family life flowed in the channel that its finger marked out.

Then, when the city was formed, religion decided as to where it should be located. The oracle, or the movement of some sacred animal, or the flight of birds, determines the site, the spot where the first ground is to be broken. Religion established the sacred limits of the city, never to be violated, inside of which the soil was consecrated. Religion gave authority to priest and king and magistrate. It was religion that fixed the status of the citizens. Religion inspired patriotism, and taught hatred of the stranger. Religion took the first census, and settled the calendar, the measurement of time. Religion declared war, decided when the gods were favorable, so that it was safe to join in battle, and arranged the terms of peace. The orders of society, priests, nobles, warriors, craftsmen, merchants, laborers, slaves, all these were bounded and established by religion. Religion told the husbandman when to plant, and superintended his reaping. Religion determined who should buy and sell; and each trade had its god. And religion appointed the favorable hour for the sailing of the merchantman's ships, poured libations from the prow to the deities of the seas, and taught the sailor to watch the winds and the clouds for indications of the will of Heaven. In short, there was no smallest part of human life that religion did not touch, and over which it did not exercise supreme control.

Brought thus into the most intimate relations with all the world's business, what and how much did religion do for it? At first it was in harmony with the natural life of the time, and, like an organ under the touch of a master, was an instrument capable of giving expression to the highest aspiration of the people. But, as has always been its tendency, it soon hardened into an institution. No longer flexible and expansive, it ceased to grow, and to adapt itself to the real needs of men. It became "a chain which held man a slave. He stood in fear of it, and dared not reason upon it or discuss it or examine it." The gods claimed a certain kind of worship; and he paid the debt "to keep them friendly, and, still more, not to make enemies of them." Certain words, formulas, or prayers, had at some time been followed by success in the hunt, in war, in husbandry, or at sea. They therefore preserved these mysterious and sacred words or forms. "After the father, the son repeated" them. They dared not thereafter change the slightest particular, of word, or tone, or gesture. They had found a way to influence the gods; and it was impious to alter it. Whatever the local custom or the rites of the local god, they must be accurately preserved. In one case, the head must be veiled; in another, uncovered; in a third, "the skirt of the toga must be thrown over the shoulder." Certain prayers were ineffectual "unless the man, after pronouncing them, pirouetted on one foot from left to right. The nature of the victim, the color of the hair, the manner of slaying it, even the shape of the knife and the kind of wood employed to roast the flesh, all was fixed for every god by the religion of each family or of each city." So all-controlling did this slavish reverence for past customs become, that, "when a Roman wished to say that anything was dear to him, he said, 'That is ancient for me.' The Greeks had the same expression."

I have thus dwelt on this matter that you may see what organized and instituted religion always tends to become. We can see the absurdity of this in the case of far-off times and other religions. And yet the larger part of the ceremonies of the Romish, the Greek, and the Anglican churches, to-day, is quite as unreasoning and senseless. And liberal churches themselves are not entirely free from such superstitions. There are many who appear to care more for a robe, an attitude, or a phrase, than for mercy, justice, and truth. People will go on forever doing a certain thing, for no better reason than that somebody has done it before them.

These old religions once had comfort and life in them. But they lost them, and became only a dead weight to drag men down and hold them back, because men came to think more of the old means of getting comfort and help than they did of the comfort and help themselves. The history of instituted religion sometimes makes the heart-sick student ask himself whether it has not done more harm than good. For as Dr. Hedge truly says: "Religion has been one of the greatest of the workers of evil. Crimes the most portentous, the most desolating wars, persecutions, hatred and wrath and bloodshed, more than have flowed from all sources beside, have been its fruits. A corruption of the text of the Vedas has cast thousands of Hindu widows alive on the funeral-pile. A sentence in the Book of Exodus has been a death sentence to millions of hapless women."

What, then, has religion done for the practical life of the past? Vital and helpful at first, it hardened into convention and routine. Thus, like a strong iron band around a young and vigorous tree, it choked the life of the world and prevented its growth. It tied man down to the worship of the older and lower ideals of the childhood world.

But while this instituted, routine religion stood in the way of and hindered, it could not altogether prevent, human progress. If man kept the old forms of religion, and thought that these must never change, new and fresher impulses were forever being felt in his social, political, intellectual, and business life, until at last a day came when he waked up to a recognition of the fact that there had come about a divorce between his practical life and his religion. They no longer fitted, or worked together. He still clung to his religion as tenaciously as ever; but it no longer stood in any vital relation to his conduct. It was a matter for the temple or the church, for festival days and Sabbaths, a thing of ritual, of genuflections, and of words. Religion had its time and place, and then was done with until its turn came round again. And, when it was despatched, then the world took its turn, and absorbed nearly all the practical life. The feeling grew up, which, after a while, got itself expressed in the maxim, "Religion is religion, and business is business."

In science, this kind of divorce has been best illustrated in the life of Faraday. Eminent intellectually, he was at the same time a most narrow religionist, an adherent of a petty sect. But he deliberately kept his religion and his science far apart. He said that when he went into his closet he locked his laboratory behind him, and when he entered his laboratory, he locked his closet. His facts and his faith he kept as carefully apart as though they had been dangerous gases, a union between which would have resulted in an explosion.

It is easy to see how all this comes about. Men come to reverence the past to such an extent that the belief grows up that the first, crude, religious ideas of the world were given by special inspiration of God, and so are infallible, unchangeable, unimprovable. When the world grows and progresses, religion is necessarily left behind and one side of its practical life. They keep up the ceremony and say over the words, but do not suffer these things to interfere with their social or political life, with their science or their business.

The effect of all this is most disastrous. Through a large part of human history, the intensely religious ages have not been distinguished for social purity, for truth-telling, for honesty, for kindness, or for justice. And, lamentable though it be, in no great commercial city of Europe or America is a business man trusted any sooner to-day because he is a church member or is prominent in any religious movement. And this has come about because religion has so generally been other-worldly; or has been put off into dreamland, among the antiquities or the emotions; and has not been regarded as dealing with the real, vital laws of God in the world about us, and in practical human life.

Let me just hint at one or two specific illustrations, upon which there is no time to enlarge. Religion may create a business: as witness the large number of industries—cattle-dealing, trade in doves, money-changing—depending on the Temple worship in Jerusalem. Or it may originate wars, and a trade in prisoners to furnish victims for sacrifice to the national god, as in ancient Mexico. Or, again, it may corrupt and infuse the gambling spirit into a whole people, as is the case in modern Italy, through the influence of the papal lotteries by which money is raised for the Church of Rome. Or, as in the days of Tetzels, heaven may be put on to the market; and indulgences for every kind of sin that one has committed or may desire to commit may be sold to raise money for the construction of a St. Peter's.

And then, on the other hand, an enormous and horrible business, like the British slave-trade, may be entirely suppressed by the religious and moral enthusiasm of men like Wilberforce and his co-peers. Or, as is the case with modern missions, religion may open up channels of trade all over the world, and create a demand among barbarous people for the staple products of a higher civilization.

It comes to this, then. When religion has been real, and has dealt with the living, throbbing realities of human activities and human relationships, then it has helped on and up the world. But as convention and routine it has oftener been a hindrance and an injury.

We must now pass on, and consider:—

II. Some things that business has done for religion. We shall find this part of our theme by no means insignificant. We often hear of dissertations on what Christianity has done for civilization: perhaps it would be quite as profitable for us sometimes to consider what civilization has done for Christianity. So we shall find that the service which business has rendered to religion is far from small. And you must not think, for one moment, that this implies the slightest disrespect to real religion. The man who stretches the telegraph wire across the continent does not create the electricity that thrills along its lines. So the business which binds the nations together does not create the high and true humanity that thus finds room for its manifestation.

Business, in all ages, has had to be practical. That is, it has had to fit itself to the material, mental, and moral conditions of the time, in order to live. If a man is to raise a crop of wheat or corn, he must adapt himself to and fulfil the conditions as to seed, soil, time of planting, and method of cultivation. If not, he has no harvest. So of a commercial voyage. All the conditions as to ship, cargo, markets, money, must be understood and complied with. If one is to go into business in a particular city, he must comply with the conditions of doing business in that city. He cannot long succeed, if he is very much above or below the current level of that city's honesty. Men frequently have to give up a business, because they cannot or will not fall in with the prevailing ways about them. The penalty of disregarding natural laws and conditions in business is failure,—a penalty so real and tangible that men cannot disregard it.

Thus it happens that, in all ages, the business life of the time has been a better and surer index of the real moral and material condition of the age than has the religious. For religion, as we have seen, will live—in memory, in reverence, in tradition, in sentiment, in fear—when it is not at all practical. It is therefore many times no index at all as to how people really live and conduct themselves.

But business, being nothing, if not practical, has always been bringing man face to face with the real laws and conditions of life and progress. He has found, by actual experiment, that some things were good for him and that other things were bad. And, on pain of suffering and death, he has learned to let the bad alone. And, on the supposition that God is really the author of and is manifested in the laws of human life, well-being, and progress, business has been "a schoolmaster to lead us to" God. By repeated experiment, it has asked of God, through his universe, May I do this? May I do that? and has heard the answer—in health and prosperity, or in disease and death—more real than any Sinai thunder.—Yes! or No! The answer of the oracle might be doubtful: this answer of the living God is always sure. Business, then, may be ever so secular in the eyes of religious convention; but it is really dealing first-hand with the living God of the world.

Let us note one or two vital truths it has taught us. However many of the rules of conventional religion we may break, and for which we may be absolved by priest or prayer, business has made us know that God's real laws of practical life cannot be broken with impunity. It has taught us that absolute obedience is the one sole condition of success. In the building of a house, the sailing of a ship, the construction of a railroad, we must seek for God's laws, and most strictly obey them. If not, the eternal penalty is failure. We cannot cheat or shuffle in dealing with the universe. No sacred ceremony will take the place of honest work.

In another particular, its teaching is no less important. Business has done more to make the world truthful than all the instituted religions of the past put together. It is to be feared that religion has not been very potent in this direction. Japan is covered with temples, and yet it is said that the Japanese are a nation of liars. No nation on earth has been longer or more completely dominated by religion than the Italian. And yet I suppose no traveller in Italy would ever be so simple as to believe anything that was said to him, provided there was anything to be gained by deception. The history of mediæval Christianity is one long tale of fiction, imposition, and fraud. Dean Milman of England says of Eusebius, the most famous of the early church historians, that you must always expect he is lying, except in cases where he has nothing to gain by it. I am aware that there is a plenty of trickery still in the commercial world. And yet what I have said will hold good,—that business has done more for truth than any religion. And the reason is apparent. For the one virtue on which the stability of the whole business world rests is truth. Only in so far as men can trust each other can the world carry on its commercial affairs. Falsehood in business, in the long run, does not pay. It has become a proverb that "honesty is the best policy." So nowhere on earth will you find so high an average of integrity, so general an adherence to truth, as in the world's great commercial centres. Just as railroad trains make punctuality a necessity and a habit, so the maintenance of business relations over the world makes truth a necessity.

One of the central doctrines of Christianity is that of human brotherhood. Jesus taught his disciples to pray, not my Father, but "Our Father." But to what influence do we owe it that this doctrine has come to be recognized as one of the great moral forces of modern civilization? The Lord's Prayer was in the New Testament for hundreds of years; and yet this sense of brotherhood had little power. Nations fought and plundered each other just the same. The weaker states were remorselessly swallowed up. Whole peoples were bought and sold, and held in cruel bondage. No right was recognized that had not battle-axes or bayonets or cannon behind it. And even now, in modern Europe, the most remorselessly warlike nations are the ones who are ruled by "Most Christian Majesties" and "Defenders of the Faith." And the one man in America who has written a war-song to help kindle the flame of religious battle in Europe is a bishop.

But, in spite of all these things, it is true that the sense of human brotherhood has become a mighty factor in the modern world. It has abolished slavery wherever it could reach. If it cannot abolish war, it can and does dictate its methods and forbid its barbarities. And no nation is so strong that to-day it dares to disregard the dictates of humanity in its treatment of those that are small and weak. There is a world-wide bar of human public opinion before which it has to plead and excuse or extenuate its deeds.

What is the power that has wrought this practical realization of human brotherhood? More than any other one thing it is business, the commercial enterprise of the world. The first voyage of the world—that on which the great company of immortals sails on forever in myth and song—was that in search of the "Golden Fleece." On such a search have men been always sailing. It is commerce that built ships, that timidly explored the neighboring coasts, then dared the oceans and the storms of heaven, as, from cape to cape and island to island, it ventured on in search of other lands.

Mountain chains and wastes of sea kept the nations apart; and, so long as the separation lasted, they were ignorant of each other. And, so long as ignorance lasted, they imagined each other monsters; misunderstood, misrepresented, and therefore feared and hated each other. Each people then supposed itself to live in the earth's centre, and to be the special favorite of the gods, while all others were only "outside barbarians." In other lands were giants and dwarfs. In one direction lived men who carried their heads under their arms; in another, monsters with only one eye, and that in the middle of the forehead; in still another were centaurs, half-man and half-horse. Even in modern times, the English peasants imagined the French were much like frogs; the French pictured the gloomy and sour English as ever on the verge of despairing suicide. And here at home it is well-nigh certain that we should never have had a civil war, if North and South had known each other better.

The one thing, then, that was needed to give mankind a sense of brotherhood was that races should know each other; and the one thing that has helped on this mutual acquaintance more than all else is commerce. Jesus was born in Galilee, right in the track of the great caravans that traded East and West, linking Asia Minor with the far East. Here he spent his boyhood and youth, and learned to be familiar with foreign peoples, and to know that they, as well as Jews, were men. It is more than probable that, if he had been born in the midst of Judean exclusiveness, we should not have had from his lips his great words about the brotherhood of man. The one thing to which we owe this new world in which we live, and where we are trying for the first time in history to put in governmental practice the theory of human brotherhood, is commerce. The mainspring of the life of Columbus was his dream of finding for commerce a new route to India. Religion in Spain, in the days of Ferdinand and Isabella, was busy in monasteries and convents, repressing the people, keeping intelligence and the Bible out of their hands, trying to hold the world in ecclesiastical order, while Columbus stood on the shore and looked wistfully out over the sea. And while religion was torturing men in this world for saying that the earth moved, and was threatening them with hell in the future for saying it was not a flat plain, Magellan, a navigator, was whispering, under his breath, that he noticed during an eclipse that the earth's shadow on the moon was round; and that God's shadow was truer than the churches' infallibility he soon proved by circumnavigating the globe.

Commerce has explored every sea, sailed up every river, and mapped out every bay. The nations have stretched out their hands to each other, have exchanged products, and looked in each other's faces. They have seen a common humanity in each other's eyes. And even the barbarian is now no longer a being of foreign flesh and blood, but only our brother, who has, from weakness, fallen behind and lagged in the rear of the grand army of man, as he is marching on and up toward the heights of the one human civilization that is the common object of us all. The world's business, then, has done more for philanthropy, for justice, for deliverance from oppression, than all other agencies combined. It has not created religion, but it has made it practical. It has called it out of the deserts and the convents, and made it live in the markets and cities of men. It has compelled it to leave its dreams and its ceremonies, and minister to the help and comfort of man in his real struggles and his every-day life.

Such, then, are some of the things that business has done for religion. Only we must remember, all through here, that business, in so far as it deals with the real laws and life of God in the universe, is the real religion. And that, in so far as religion becomes divorced from these, it ceases to be religion except as it usurps the name.

There is left for us one more phase of our subject to treat as briefly as we can. And that is,—

III. What the world's business will become when shaped and controlled by true religion.

In discussing this point, I wish to revert for a moment to the opening words of my discourse. I said there that whether or not religion was a good thing to have in one's business depended on what kind of religion it was. In considering this subject, men are very apt to think that, when people use the word "religion" or "God," they all mean by it very much the same. Nothing could be further from the truth. A man's religion is his feeling and conduct, springing out of the relation in which he supposes himself to stand to the universe, or to the Powers or Power that he thinks of as controlling it. So religion may be of as many kinds as are the thoughts and fancies of men. The worship of a stick or stone, a tree or sun or star, conceived of as mysterious and powerful, but in no way connected with moral character, if it influenced a man's business at all, could only do so as the gambler's superstition about luck influences his game at cards. It might affect the time or method of his game, but not improve it. The religion of Astarte or Venus could hardly make a man's business better. The worship of Mercury, the patron of thieves, would not be likely to conduce to fair dealing.

And it is not at all certain that our religion will help our business just because we all "profess and call ourselves Christians." Your God and your religion are not necessarily those of your creed or your church: they are the ones you really hold in your heart, cherish and obey. If your religion be one of church and ritual and priesthood, instead of its making your business life what it ought to be, it may degenerate into a sort of commercial transaction wherein, with money or penance, you suppose yourself to buy exemption from the necessity of doing right. It is no uncommon thing for priest or minister to become, as God's agent, the conscious or unconscious taker of bribes, that the man who offers them imagines will reconcile heaven to his keeping his lion's share of the plunder.

Again, if your religion is a matter of poetry, of emotion, of sentiment only, it may not elevate your business. For it is no strange thing for a man to be roused by injustice—in a novel—or to shed tears over poverty and sorrow—at the play—while he still remains as hard and exacting and unfeeling in his business as one of his own iron machines. The emotion over, the luxury of tears indulged, then "business is business."

Or, once more, if your religion is a matter of times and occasions, of sacred festival days and Sabbaths, it may be kept utterly distinct from your business. A man may go up on his Sunday mountain-top to pray, and on Monday morning come down again to sand his sugar, to water his milk or his stocks, to dilute his justice, to sell his political influence, and generally to live through the week as though sacred obligations were luxuries to be kept apart from common use in a wholly ideal world. And the strangest part of it is that they may work themselves into such a state of mind as to feel that they are wholly sincere.

But, friends, these things are not the real religion of the living God of this vital, throbbing universe in which we live, and of which we are a part. Men may do whatever they please with the gods of their dreams and fancies. But they cannot palter or trifle with the ever-present God whose power works in and is the laws of life and death that compass us about on every hand. In the laws of your body and heart and brain; in the eternal and self-executing laws of social life and progress; in the conditions that underlie the right business relations of men; in the laws by which States and nations live and advance or decay and die; in these vital conditions of human welfare and happiness,—here, and here only, can you find the "living God." Finding him here, worshipping him here, obeying him here, this, and this only, is the true religion. Churches and Sundays and rituals and sacraments are of value only as they help toward this. They are useless, if they do not. If they become substitutes for this, or in any way hinder its attainment, then they are pernicious.

We are now ready to consider what shape the world's business will take on when brought into accord with this, the true religion. The business of the world, like all the rest of its methods of conduct, has been an age-long experiment. Practice puts all things to the test. That which fits the conditions will endure: that which does not will perish. What fits a lower grade of civilization, as man advances, dies out, as not being adapted to the higher. Slave-labor and serfdom were once the prevailing types in the industrial world. But, like monsters of older geologic ages, they have disappeared, as the world has advanced to a higher human life. They were replaced by the contract system, and the reign of competition set in. Competition has done and is doing its work, good and helpful in its time; but the world is slowly getting wise enough to see that it too must pass away and give place to a nobler form of human endeavor. The age of coöperation—of sympathy and help instead of contest—is coming in. It will come slowly, generations will pass before it will be universal. But, just so surely as men grow wiser and better, it will come.

That coöperation,—the treating of workmen not as parts of a machine or as car-horses to be worn out and thrown aside, but as intellectual and moral beings,—that this is practical has already been proved in conspicuous and crucial cases. Take the case of Maillard, the chocolate manufacturer, in France. He has built up an enormous industry in which the laborers are partners, helpers, and friends; while the most of our manufacturing centres are fields of perpetual warfare, where class hatreds and strife are engendered, time is wasted, production hindered, and money thrown away. Other grand successes have been achieved in England, as Mr. Holyoake has recently been telling us. And noble work in this same direction has been done by our own Cheney Brothers in Connecticut.

Let us look this matter squarely in the face, and see what it means. It is no appeal to airy ideals or unpractical sentiment. I am an evolutionist; and, in the most realistic fashion, I believe in "the battle of life" and "the survival of the fittest." I do not expect men to carry self-sacrifice to any Quixotic extreme, or to conduct their business in such a manner that it will not pay. Men desire what they believe will be for their interest. I find no fault with this. I do not know how they can help it, nor why they should help it. Can you expect men to work for the attainment of injury and suffering? They often do it, but never with purpose and intent.

But I believe that the laws that underlie the successful prosecution of business are God's laws, are good laws, and—rightly applied—will work for the welfare and happiness, not of a few only, but of all. Men are called infidels for doubting the infallibility of the Bible, or particular notions about Jesus or God. But the true, the dangerous infidelity is that which doubts that this universe is favorable toward, or consistent with, goodness. Men say, "We would like to be fair and open and kind; but business is a battle, and we cannot win success in that way." A teamster during the war once declared it to be his belief that it was "impossible to drive a mule-team and be a Christian." That depends upon drivers. If you cannot conduct business successfully, and still be true to the highest principles of human life, then it is because the present system is wrong, is antiquated, belongs to a lower grade of civilization.

Competition in business—except the friendly strife of each man to do his best for both himself and others—is on essentially the same grade of civilization as the military régime among nations. It is barbaric. Look at Europe to-day, claiming to be Christian. The emperors and kings are really worshippers of Mars, of the "God of hosts," of Devastation, not of "Our Father." Is it for the good of the people that millions, from being producers, are turned into destroyers, and that enough is wasted every year to supply the wants of all? It is for prestige, to resent some slight affront or to work some fanciful rectification of a frontier. The real welfare of nations is to be found in finding and obeying God's conditions of life and progress and happiness. And this means, not more cannon and standing armies, but an industrial civilization.

So, when men fancy that self-interest lies in the direction of warfare in business, they are guilty, not only of inhumanity, but of what has been said to be worse than a crime,—a blunder. Here in America, to-day,—where there are resources enough for uncounted millions more than we number yet,—who really believes that our business prosperity would not be increased, if, instead of fighting and crippling and hindering each other, we could all agree to work together and help each other? It is not unpractical, then, only as every machine is unpractical before it is invented and put in running order. When men grow wise enough to see,—what is simply true,—that it is the way toward a larger, practical success for all, then self-interest will make it succeed. It will win in "the battle of life," because it will be "the survival of the fittest." I believe that in God's universe—and, had I time, I could show you how man's past history proves it,—that which will show itself fittest to survive at last will be those principles, and those only, the practical application of which will help all men up and on.

God's religion, then, brought into man's business, will so organize it that it will play into the hands, not of one, or a few only, but of all men. It will give all men time and means to become whatever of good they are capable of. If pauperism and want and crime were banished from the world, would it not become so much fairer, sweeter, and better a place to live in, that every man's happiness would be increased a thousand-fold? They can be. It is practical. But every time a man transacts a piece of business in such a way that his fellow-man is injured by it, just so much is done to prolong the reign of poverty and sorrow. He is then a traitor to human welfare. And he is a traitor to his own real prosperity as truly as to that of others.

And the practical conduct of our daily life is so intimately connected with the real, vital religion of the real God, that we must not delude ourselves with the idea that we have any place among God's children, or that any true religious consolation can be ours, except in so far as we are in right relations with our fellow-men. Jesus said many years ago, "When thou comest to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way: first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Right relation with man and access to God forever coincide. You cannot, then, in a bad business, or in an unbrotherly way of conducting a good business, find, or have anything to do with, the true religion. You may find an idol—mental or material—wherever you will; but you cannot find the living God of the living world anywhere except along the pathway of obedience to his laws. And the primal law of all is that which binds you in all helpfulness to your fellow-men. He, then, who fancies that he can come to God while out of right relation—social, political, or business—to his brother, has blundered concerning the real nature of the universe he lives in.

[For THE INDEX.]

UNITARIANISM IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

BY REV. EDWARD C. TOWNE.

UNDERBANK PARSONAGE, STANNINGTON, {
Near SHEFFIELD, Eng. }

The "Brevities" of the Christian Register have been considerably improved under the present editor in the direction of fact and thought, rather than light smartness and pale wit; but a too generous confidence is behind the following:—

"Do the Unitarian churches of England differ greatly from those of America?" we asked of one who ought to know both pretty well; who answered, "They are in quite as good condition as those here: less upholstery, but more piety; smaller salaries, but those paid; less grandeur, but hardly ever a debt; less art and culture, but far more quiet mission work and philanthropy."

If the informant here was an Englishman, the painful fact should be stated that, with rare exceptions, neither intelligence nor character afford the slightest security that an Englishman, in any matter of comparison between America and England, can see the pleasant side of truth about America, and the unpleasant side of truth about England. Like Americans generally, I had no idea of this when I came to England, and only the hardest kind of facts have forced me to admit it, and to understand it. I have just completed a study of the history of British criticism of America, which shows on every page that, with rare exceptions, the rule is as I have stated. It is very commonly regarded as a kindness to Americans to point out to them, in unconsciously offensive terms, how bad as Americans their standing is, and how well they will do to contemplate with exclusive respect whatever is English. "English" is made the equivalent of "genuine," and "American" of "sham," and you are expected to accept as a compliment the frankest instruction on this point. I avoid more than the merest reference to the matter now, and quite suppress both what I have come to feel, and what a long array of patiently gathered facts will enable me to prove, my only wish here being to suggest the doubtful character of English testimony, either for England or against America.

As to the points made in the statement quoted above, I may, I think, venture to let in a little light. I have heard them before, and have been sorry to find them accepted. They revolve about the significant word "paid." "Smaller salaries, but those paid," reflects a grievance of the speaker in a case of the facts of which have come to my knowledge. A minister, getting $2,000 here in England, was offered three times as much to go to an American pulpit. The offer was based on a calculation—which proved delusive—of his power to draw as a popular preacher. That was not his power: his gifts were rather in the direction of "quiet mission work and philanthropy,"—personal and pastoral power rather than pulpit. But, although he might easily have seen that he was offered more than he was worth, he thought he could get more still, and stood out for $8,000. He got it but with a misunderstanding,—his congregation taking the extra $2,000 to be for one year only, to meet his plea of the expense of removal from England to America; while his expectation was that he would permanently get $8,000,—double what, upon a correct view of his power and attainments, he could earn. He was not fairly worth more than $4,000, and was found too dear at $6,000. Yet he has not ceased to think he should have $8,000, and he represents that the contract was for that sum permanently and that it has been not honestly kept. If his congregation were in debt, they have got out; and his own relation to the matter makes part of his grievance. With them, he has the credit of a subscription of $1,000 towards clearing off the debt; but he represents that his salary in the year of this subscription fell to $5,000. And thereon hangs his tale about American salaries not being paid. His own greed in seeking too much, and his own failure to earn even the smaller salary, have been the only and the ample explanations of the difficulties between himself and his people. The generalization which he has put in circulation, in both England and America, is no more than his reading of his own case; and the truth of that case is that he is paid, at the lowest, more, a good deal, than he can earn, and has no reason whatever for complaint, much less for abusing America. I am confident that, although in both countries Unitarians are noted for paying, the failure to pay occurs, as an exception, in England more than it does in America, and would occur a hundred-fold as much, if English congregations made the same effort as American to pay adequate salaries. Usually, an English treasurer is a man able to pay, whether he has to pay with or not; and he often does so pay until, I venture to say, that English treasurers are much oftener out of pocket than American. As to church debts, they would be a good deal worse than American, if endeavor here at all equalled American.

It is ridiculous to say that English Unitarian churches are "in quite as good a condition" as those of America. There is hardly an approach here in England, either in individual churches or in the body at large, to the progress and the prosperity of American Unitarianism. The London churches are none of them strong, and hardly more than half a dozen strong churches can be found in the whole kingdom. As to common churches up and down the country nearly all are far behind the common Unitarian churches of America. Many of them are almost wholly made up from the working-class, and such roughness and rudeness as can be seen in numerous instances here, both in the people and in their arrangements, could not be found in a single instance in America. Looking at some of the ministers, many of the congregations, and most of the schools, the backwardness of England is appalling. A single fact will show the humbug in the boast that England has "less art and culture, but far more quiet mission-work and philanthropy." The people who have the "art and culture" not only make more of it than in America, but they consider themselves raised thereby above any thing so low as teaching in a Sunday-school, or having their children attend. I have seen it stated by an English minister, now settled in America, that English Unitarian Sunday-schools are superior to American, because they reach the poor more. Nothing could be more misleading. They reach nobody but the poor; and they do not in any proper sense reach the poor, if "reach" means a connection between the better class and the poor. The better class consider the work as so far beneath them as to be quite out of the question; and the better families would be shocked at the very idea of sending their children to Sunday-school, or allowing their young people to be teachers. The teaching falls mostly into the hands of a minority of intelligent and self-sacrificing persons of no social pretension, and a majority of those who can barely hear a class read out of a simple book.

As to the "less upholstery, but more piety," one can hardly make an American realize what the "benches" are in an English school-room,—the merest hard benches, without backs, unpainted and rude, or, if with a back, still hard and rude. Settees are quite unknown. As to the "more piety," there is an English custom, not of schools, but in church and chapel, of dropping the head for half a moment on sitting down, and another of sitting down for the benediction. I think an Englishman regards these formalities, especially when he finds them wanting in America, as great and precious signs of vital piety. He is too ignorant ever to have heard how such formalities were disused by American Puritans as empty and wrong, and so he does not know that their absence in America came about through zealous and sincere regard for vital piety. There is more surface pietism in England than in America, but with an amount of superficiality and shallowness unknown in America. I heard one pious brother in Manchester offer to pray another for five shillings; i.e., to pray against him on a bet of five shillings, the bet to be decided in favor of him who made the best prayer. It was said in savage earnest, too, in scorn of the "piety" of the brother. The brethren had a tremendous row over the matter of choosing a Sunday-school superintendent, and, although several of them would be more ready than Americans to make a prayer, it was with the drawback of shocking rudeness and vulgarity. Taking English Unitarianism generally, a large part of it, a very large part, combines the forms of pietism with the fact of secularism; and the minister is expected to do anything and everything except make his own people really and practically religious. England at large presents almost the problem how to make a religion of a motley secularism by giving it a mask of traditional ritual. With less pietism and more reverence for the life of God in the soul of man as man, lowly and poor as well as exalted and rich, the future of real religion would be much more secure than it is. The vast curse which the established order both in church and society in puts the whole country at a tremendous disadvantage; and one who can compare America with England in any point of religion or morals, without shame and sorrow for England, must have been born to the English assumption that nothing English can be much wrong, and nothing American much right.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST SATAN.

THE ENGLISH SALVATION ARMY GETTING INTO LINE OF BATTLE.—PREPARATIONS FOR VIGOROUS FIGHTING.

The vanguard of the English Salvation Army made their formal entry into New York yesterday morning, headed by its gallant commander, Commissioner George S. Raiton. The party arrived on Wednesday on board the Anchor line steamer Australia, and were met by the Rev. Mr. Irvine, pastor of the Waverly Methodist Episcopal Church, on the Jersey Heights. They consisted of Commissioner Raiton and Sister Captain Westbrook and Lieutenants Coleman, Evans, Morris, Pearson, Shaw, and Price. The commander was dressed in a neat suit of blue with yellow trimmings, and on his head wore a blue cloth helmet cap, around which was a red silk ribbon, bearing the words, "Salvation Army," in gold letters. The women were mostly youthful, and were dressed in blue serge costumes and red facings, with Alpine hats, on which the name of their organization was blazoned in gold. Forming in line, the evangelical Amazons raised a blue banner, bearing the inscription, "Blood and Fire," and began a march to Castle Garden. At the corner of Liberty and West Streets, a halt was made and truce was declared, while the leader held a parley with a policeman. In answer to inquiries as to the location of the most thickly populated districts of workingmen and non-church-goers, Commander Raiton was directed to attack the Sixteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-first wards. The policeman further suggested a bombardment of politicians in the City Hall at noon-time. As the corps proceeded down West Street, a large crowd followed them, attracted, doubtless, by their gay uniforms. In Castle Garden, the army went into bivouac, but, after a short time, opened fire on the immigrants by singing stirring hymns, and exhorting all followers of the Eternal

King to take up arms in his cause. For a time, the excitement in the garden was intense; but the fortifications of the Evil One were too strong, and, after a parting volley, the army filed out of the building, and marched to the house of Mr. Irvine in Jersey City, where they remained as guests all night. Reveillé was sounded at eight o'clock yesterday morning, and after breakfast the warriors betook themselves from Jersey City, and again entered America at ten o'clock. The remainder of the day was spent by the division in sight-seeing, parole having been granted by General Raiton, who went in quest of a building to be used as a sort of ecclesiastical barracks, in which the American salvation army is to be recruited. At noon, Mr. Amos Studley, of Philadelphia, was created a captain, and departed for the Quaker City in company with Sisters Lieutenants Price and Evans. Captain Shirley was a member of the army in England, but emigrated to Philadelphia six months ago, and obtained employment as a clerk. With the assistance of his daughter, he started a branch of the army in an empty factory building. Hearing of this, Mr. Shirley's employer discharged him, and he was forced to become a Christian soldier for bread. He informed General Booth in England of his action, and asked for a commission as captain. The result of this request was the detaching of General Raiton and his staff to America to organize Christ's forces for a grand engagement with the myriads of Satan's devotees.

The General speaks.

"We are," said General Raiton to a Herald reporter yesterday, "the vanguard of the salvation army, and have not yet decided upon all our future movements. At present, our fort is the battlements of heaven; but we are in the enemy's country. I have been looking through New York all day to find a place in which we can raise the siege between Christ and sinners. A basement in the Bowery attracted my attention, but the rent, I am afraid, was too high for us. I am in hopes of securing a permanent camp before Sunday. If not, we shall hold an open air battle in some public square. I wish to consult the Chief of Police before deciding on any plan, and my selection will depend on his advice. We wish to secure recruits from among the respectable working-classes who do not attend church. No attempt will be made to flank the army of the Roman Catholic Church, as we desire to arouse as little opposition as possible. After we secure quarters, the method of holding services will be as follows: The officers of the army and all the privates will assemble in some public place, and begin to attract a crowd by the usual Methodist prayer-meeting style of worship. We will then begin to march through the streets with our banner flying, and the assemblage is sure to follow. At every street corner, a halt will be made, and an invitation to march along will be given. The end of the march will be our barracks, into which the army will go, followed still by the crowds, and then work begins in earnest. This is no neutral ground. Our recruits must come out and speak boldly for the Lord, and declare themselves the subjects of the King of heaven and earth, or they are looked upon as the enemy. Every genuine recruit we have will be duly entered in the ranks as a private, and will be supposed to wear the army uniform or some badge."

The head-quarters of the little band of evangelist soldiers is at No. 130 Liberty Street, where they will stop until their movement is fully organized.

It has been decided to make a strenuous inroad on the kingdom of Satan next Sunday evening. Harry Hill's Variety Theatre is the selected battle-ground, and the operations against the Evil One will be continued from half-past six until nine o'clock.—New York Herald.

IRELAND'S CURSE.

Some weeks since we copied into our columns, from the New York Times, a sharp and severe censure of Catholic Bishops in Ireland for sending, and of the Roman Pontiff for receiving, contributions to that fund for the private purse of the latter, known as Peter's Pence, at this particular time when the distressed and starving people of the afflicted island are appealing to the whole civilized world for sympathy and aid. Bitter and condemnatory as was the tone of this rebuke, it would seem to be completely justified by facts which are constantly being furnished by careful and reliable authorities. Reports from the Roman journals show that the contributions from Ireland to the fund in question have been at the rate of $100,000 a month for the past three months, or four times as much as she has ever before given in her most prosperous days. This would seem to show that the amount has been swelled by the addition of sums coming from the benevolent of other lands, intended for the relief of the wretched and starving poor. It is also reported to be common for many of the ignorant and superstitious who obtain assistance to carry one-half of what they receive to the parish priest, as a donation to the Church and a token of their thankfulness to God. The poor people of Ireland have ever been munificent in their support of the priests, the Church, and the Holy Father, contributing, even in the days of their deepest misery, to the comfort and luxury of those who have never hesitated to fatten upon the agony of a wretched race.

Dean Dickinson, in a recent number of the Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette, says that the causes of Ireland's distress are well known to all who live there, but that there is a lack of the proper courage and frankness to publicly state them. He declares the two main causes to be over-drinking and over-population. We will quote some of his testimony in regard to the latter of these, which forms a fearful arraignment of the Catholic clergy for keeping a generous but superstitious people subjected to poverty and distress, in order to advance the interests and aggrandizement of themselves and the Church:—

"There are nearly a million more people in Ireland than its land or its industries can maintain. . . . Why, then, do they not emigrate to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, where countless acres of virgin soil wait only for occupation, where men can live and thrive in honest, happy independence? Why not? Simply because the priests will not allow them. Roman Catholic priests are paid by the head. Their dues are at stake. For their own sakes, they wish to keep a large population adscriptos glebæ. Let us in charity admit they are also afraid on their people's account, that they may lose their faith by emigration. Hence they do all they can to foster in the Irish peasant, from his infancy, the feeling which clings to the cabin where he was born, and to the fields where he and his half-starved brothers and sisters played. They throw a romance around these mockeries of home, and teach their people that emigration is cruel exile, expatriation a wicked, English device, etc. They talk of 'Irishmen's bones bleaching the prairies,' and such likerodomontade. . . . And Governments, whether Conservative or Liberal, which think it right and expedient to govern Ireland through the Romish priesthood and to conciliate political agitators, are simply afraid to apply the only remedy—afraid to promote a scheme of emigration on a sufficient scale—because of the outcry which interested parties would raise. What will the priests say and do? is the whispered fear of British cabinets. . . . Meantime, distress goes on and annually increases, and, when an exceptionally bad season comes, is naturally intensified; only, however, a question of degree. . . . In every town from which the cry of distress comes, the public houses and their owners prosper. Those who discourage emigration and temperance and honest industry . . . have a great deal to answer for. The sin, the misery, the nation's degradation, lie at their doors. They are the cause of Irish distress."

"Roman Catholic priests are paid by the head. Their dues are at stake." These pregnant sentences state a chief cause of the want and desolation which have spread themselves over the fair and fertile island. Ireland staggers under the weight of theological superstition which, in its vilest form, like a veritable "Old Man of the Sea," has encircled her in its grasp. The Roman Catholic Church cannot hope to escape the fearful responsibility of having produced the present terrible condition of affairs. In the mean time, let those who contribute to the help of these starving victims of religious domination look to it that their alms are not perverted from the true course, and turned into the private coffers of a pampered potentate who represents a Church which has never failed to bring ignorance, poverty, wretchedness, and slavery wherever it has ruled.—Albany Liberal Bulletin.

A NEW PERSUASION.—M. F. H.: "Isn't that the horse I saw your father on, Miss Mary?" MISS M.: "Yes, I persuaded pa to buy him! I wanted a change, and I knew pa would be no match for him!"—Fun.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

DESIRE FOR NIRVANA.

BY ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

How many suns shall rise and set,
How many moons their crescents fill,
Ere thou and I shall all forget,
And grow like sobbing children still?

O sweet Nirvana, bliss divine!
Consummate close to all our pain!
Lost 'mid the splendors of the shrine,
To be in all—nor one, nor twain—

Enshrined forever, and all lost,
In that beatitude of bliss
That asks no why, that counts no cost,
Content to be, whatever is!

Free from desire of self or earth,
From fear of what may be or not,
Back to the fountain of our birth,
By all save Love himself forgot!

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 10.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Frank Cheney, $3.20; William Tindall, $3.20; F. Hardy, 10 cents; Prof. L. Ellsberg, $3.20; Lambert Bigelow, 80 cents; Cash, $12.55; Mrs. Lydia Maria Child, $5.45; Mrs. M. E. Martin, $6.40; Alex. Grant, $3; George Allen, $2.60; Doerflinger & Co., 75 cents; Mrs. Martha B. Earle, $3.20; Otto Rothschild, $3.20; Dr. E. H. Price, $3.20; Mrs. E. M. Mitchell, 50 cents; C. A. Simpson, $1; J. L. Whiting, $4.50; J. N. Lombard, $3.20; J. R. Hawley, 75 cents; Mrs. E. A. Driver, $6; J. W. Fowler, $4; C. Folsom, $3.20; Mrs. E. B. Chace, $6.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 15, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 251 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible; it recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged April 1.....	$2,022.00
DR. EMIL NOGGEROTH, New York	20.00
GEO. H. JONES, " ".....	10.00
F. M. HAWLEY, " ".....	1.00
MISS H. COURTES, " ".....	1.00
S. M. ROTHENHEIM, " ".....	1.00
MRS. C. WEBSTER, " ".....	1.00
P. F. LANE, " ".....	1.00
M. SCHNITZER, " ".....	1.00
MISS MATILDA GODDARD, Boston	5.00
FERNANDO DESSAUB, New York	1.00
H. HERZOG, " ".....	2.00
A. V. B., " ".....	5.00
PHILIP CASKY, " ".....	1.00
I. M. MESTRE, " ".....	5.00
B. BERNSTEIN, " ".....	1.00
B. BLANK, " ".....	1.00
CASH, " ".....	1.00
A. E. KARELSON, " ".....	1.00

Total..... $2,081.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

SCHLEIERMACHER'S CONCEPTION OF RELIGION.

In the Albany Liberal Bulletin (which, small as it is, is by far the best "liberal" journal published in the State of New York), we find the following comments on "Religion":—

Schleiermacher has defined the word with a precision and correctness that challenges our admiration and assent. He says:—

"Religion belongs neither to the domain of science nor morals, is essentially neither knowledge nor conduct, but emotion only, specific in its nature, and inherent in the immediate consciousness of each individual man. Hence comes the vast variety of religious conception and of religious system observed in the world: variety not only thus to be accounted for, but apprehended as a necessity of human nature. Hence, also, the irrefragable plea for universal toleration, and the sin against God's ordinance committed in every act of persecution for opinion."

Upon this, Dr. Willis, Spinoza's biographer, remarks:—

"This view of Schleiermacher was an immense advance on all previously entertained ideas of the nature and true worth of the religious idea, and has not yet been generally appreciated in all its significance. When we recognize it, however, we readily understand how religious emotion may be associated with crime and immorality, as well as with the highest moral excellence; how a Jacques Clement and Balthasar Gerard may confess themselves to the priest, and take the sacrament of the body and blood of the Savior by way of strengthening them in their purpose to commit the crimes that have made their memories infamous; how punctilious attention to Bible-reading and devout observance among criminals of a less terrible stamp do not necessarily imply hypocrisy and cunning, as so commonly assumed, when these unhappily constituted beings are found again engaged in their objectionable courses. The piety—the religion—displayed is a perfectly truthful manifestation of the emotional element in the nature of man, which seeks and finds satisfaction in acts implying intercourse with Deity, but neither seeks nor finds satisfaction in acts of honesty and virtuous life in the world."

We have here an explanation of how it happens that our penitentiaries are filled with the worst sort of criminals, whose lives, prior to the detection of their crimes, were characterized by eminent piety and a strict regard for religious observances. That religion, per se, has no restraining influence upon the conduct of men, is a truth confirmed and attested by our daily and hourly experience, and needs no elaborate argument to substantiate it.

The above-quoted passage from Schleiermacher (whom Zeller, in 1865, pronounced "the greatest theologian that the Protestant Church has had since the period of the Reformation") gives an imperfect view of his thought on this subject. Schleiermacher was one of the creators of Neo-Christianity, and now that the Centenary of William Ellery Channing has just been celebrated, might not inaptly be termed the Channing of Germany. It was his great object to reconcile Christianity with science and philosophy. "Equally animated by deep religious feeling and filled with an earnest scientific spirit," says Ueberweg in his History of Philosophy, "Schleiermacher seeks visibly in all his works to contribute toward the accomplishment of the work which he indicates as the goal of the Reformation and as the special want of the present time: 'to establish an eternal compact between vital Christian faith on the one hand, and scientific inquiry, left free to labor independently for itself, on the other, so that the former may not hinder the latter, nor the latter exclude the former.'" If by "vital Christian faith" should be understood (as we do not now understand it) devotion to the "universal diffusion of truth, righteousness, and love," this great aim of Schleiermacher was precisely our own aim at the Unitarian Syracuse Conference in 1866; and, in the light of it, we can readily comprehend his desire to free the essential conception of religion itself from all entangling alliances with dogma, ritual, or church. But he could not quite free his own mind from an evident bias in favor of Christianity as an historical religion; he could not quite raise himself to the level of the great truth that universal religion is swallowing up all the historical religions, just as the ocean receives all the rivers of the globe. Hence he could not escape, even in his conception of religion, the bias of Christianity in favor of emotion, feeling, faith, as superior to intellect and thought. There is here a fathomless gulf between Christianity and science, as is equally discerned by every thorough Christian and every thorough philosopher or scientific man. Christianity builds on love; science builds on truth. Christianity builds by faith; science builds by reason. Christianity makes thought give way to feeling; science makes feeling give way to thought. The issue is incurable. All compromises are impossible, delusive. The consistent Christian cannot be a thorough scientific man or philosopher; the consistent philosopher or scientific man cannot be a thorough Christian. The trouble with Schleiermacher was that he was too much of a Christian, and yet too much of a philosopher, to be either one or the other thoroughly and consistently; and that is the trouble with all other Neo-Christians. Love and truth, emotion and thought, are not really inconsistent; but love should adapt itself to truth, emotion to thought, and not vice versa. Both cannot be first. The one great fact forcing itself upon the notice of all penetrating observers is that the right of truth, of thought, of scientific philosophy, to assume the supreme directorship of all human life is becoming more and more clearly recognized as time rolls on; and all the theology that will survive in the future is evidently destined to be based upon the scientific or philosophic conception of the universe.

The statement that religion is "emotion only," however, does not give a complete view of Schleiermacher's position. Ueberweg says: "Schleiermacher denies the scientific truth of the teachings of theological dogmatism, but admits that religion is founded in man on a special and noble faculty, namely, on religious feeling, which is the direction of the spirit towards the infinite and eternal; and he finds the true import of the theological notions and doctrines in this, that through them the religious feeling comes to expression; but when that whose office is simply to indicate our feelings and represent them in words is taken for objective science, or for science and religion at once, there follows inevitably a decline into mysticism and mythology." And again: "With reference to the Infinite, as the unity of the universe, man has a feeling of absolute dependence. In this feeling religion has its root. Religious ideas and dogmas are forms of the manifestation of the religious feeling, and as such are specifically distinguished from scientific speculation, which strives to reproduce in subjective consciousness the world of objective reality." In other words, Schleiermacher holds that first of all exists the feeling of dependence upon the Infinite as the unity of the universe; that afterwards comes the manifestation of this aboriginal feeling in dogmas and ideas; and that this expression of religious feeling in specific religious dogma is absolutely necessary to its actual existence. Hence he holds, as Ueberweg states, that "the idea of religion includes the complex of all the relations of man to the Deity; but the various religions are the definite shapes in which the one universal religion must express itself, and in which alone a true individual development of the religious nature must express itself; the so-called natural or rational religion is a mere abstraction." Christianity, therefore, according to Schleiermacher, is the highest form of religion that is historically or individually possible.

Our criticism on this general conception is that it inverts the truth. Thought in religion must come first, and feeling second, and not the reverse, as Schleiermacher teaches. Before there can possibly be a feeling of "dependence upon the Infinite, as the unity of the universe," there must be a thought of the universe as a unit, and of the Infinite as identical with this unity. Even in his own statement, the priority of thought to feeling very plainly asserts itself. If the thought of God, as in all the polytheistic religions, be split up into anthropomorphic images of numerous finite beings, then the "feeling of dependence upon the Infinite" cannot exist; the feeling will be that of dependence upon the finite. It is in all cases the thought in religion that gives direction to the feeling, and not the contrary. We do not say that the thought creates the feeling; that is not strictly true, for thought and feeling are equally primitive and independent elements of consciousness. But thought does mould, direct, and give specific form to feeling; and all attempts to make the pyramid stand upon its apex rather than upon its base must fail.

Is it not time for liberal thinkers who mean to conform their philosophy to the reality of things, and to make it coextensive with all that they have learned of the universe they inhabit, to rise to a truer, grander, and more comprehensive idea of religion than Schleiermacher's? THOUGHT, FEELING, and WILL, are the three primary modes of human consciousness. TRUTH is the supreme end of Thought, LOVE of Feeling, and RIGHTEOUSNESS of Will. Truth, Love, and Righteousness are, therefore, the three natural objects of human life, worthily conceived; and RELIGION is their synthetic unity. Every man is truly religious in proportion as he lives earnestly and determinedly for the realization of this single yet threefold ideal in his own character and activity. It is a melancholy mutilation and belittlement of Religion to dwarf it to only one of the three aspects of this ideal.

Our own conception of Religion, from the very first issue of THE INDEX, has been that of "the effort of Man to perfect himself in all his relations"; that is, the effort of Man, both as a social and an individual being, to realize the ideal marked out for him in human nature itself, and taken in all its relations to Nature as a whole. The force of the word "effort" in this definition has been strangely overlooked in the numerous criticisms of our definition made during the past ten years—not one of which has grasped its full meaning or scope. Effort, or the exertion of will, presupposes both thought and feeling; it is impossible without them; and it is the embodiment of both in action, character, and life. Man may think and feel without exerting himself at all; but he can make no "effort" without both thinking and feeling. He who says "effort," therefore, says thought, feeling, and will at the same time; and he who says "effort of Man to perfect himself in all his relations" says RELIGION, in the only sense of that word large enough, true enough, and grand enough to commend it to the lasting reverence of mankind.

AMERICAN ENCOURAGEMENT OF ART.

According to the Detroit Evening News of March 26, Mr. Samuel R. Mumford, brother of the deeply regretted Rev. Thomas J. Mumford (former editor of the Christian Register), and a gentleman of the most modest, unselfish, and estimable character, proposes to build an Art Hall in that city. The News says editorially: "That long-waited-for citizen of Detroit who proposes to put a little of his money into a useful monument by which he will be remembered after he has gone has at last been found. Mr. S. R. Mumford, having acquired a comfortable fortune in this city, is going to spend a portion of it in building an 'Academy of Art and Science.' It will be located on a central site, and will not be in the hands of any impractical committee or board, but will be owned and managed exclusively by the gentleman who has the enterprise and generosity to found it. We do not think it will be an immediately profitable investment, but the founder does not expect or demand that it shall be. There is fair reason to hope, however, that in the course of three or four years, with the growth such time will bring to the city, it will pay its way. With a first-class music hall and an 'Academy of Art and Science,' Detroit will soon be able to hold her head up as a metropolis."

In another column, the News also gives further information on the subject, as follows:—

An Art Hall.

S. R. MUMFORD'S PLANS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE AND ART IN DETROIT.—THE INSTITUTION HE PROPOSES TO ESTABLISH OPPOSITE THE EAST GRAND CIRCUS PARK.

S. R. Mumford, secretary and treasurer of the Michigan Savings Bank, and formerly one of the administrators of the Ward estate, is a gentleman of refined and artistic tastes, who has accumulated a very fine collection of paintings and statuary. For several years, he has contemplated the erection and maintenance of an art gallery and studio building, which, as he phrases it, "shall be conducted on business principles." In a conversation with a News reporter yesterday, Mr. Mumford said: "I have been intending to engage in this work for several years, and, having no one dependent upon me, fixed in my own mind the sum which would be necessary for carrying out my plans, and at the same time leave me no anxiety as to pecuniary matters in my own private affairs. This sum I have accumulated, and I now propose to go on with the work as fast as possible. I am now negotiating for a lot at the corner of Madison Avenue and Williams Street, fronting the east Grand Circus Park, and if the terms are satisfactory I shall purchase it. On that lot, I propose to erect a five-story brick building, with stone trimmings, which shall be fire-proof and contain all the modern improvements, including steam heating, elevator, etc. The building will have a number of rooms suitable for artists' studios; an art gallery, which shall contain statuary and casts, and copies of the best pictures of the old masters; a lecture room, in which teachers of art, science, and kindred subjects, can deliver their views; and a school-room, in which students of design may work in the daytime or in the evening. The Scientific Association have been talking about renting a part of the building to accommodate their collection, and they meet this evening to decide what shall be done in the matter. There being some danger of losing their collection, I have offered to buy it; but I hope that matters will so shape themselves that they will be able to keep it, and rent a part of my building for its display."

"Do you intend that any part of the institution shall be free to the public?" asked the reporter.

"No: as I told you before, I intend to operate this matter on business principles. I do not propose to make any money out of it, however, as any returns will be immediately reinvested in pictures, statuary, and artistic articles and appliances. But all charges connected with the institution shall be as low as possible,—the primary object being the artistic education of students at the smallest possible expense to them. I propose, for instance, following the example of the Corcoran Gallery of Washington, in setting days on which the public shall be admitted free, and charging a small fee on other days, which will allow students a better opportunity to make sketches without interruption or jostling. The gallery I intend to be such a place that all local artists, and also artists from a distance, shall display their work therein; and that it will be used for art exhibitions of all kinds."

At a meeting of the Scientific Association last evening in the Abstract Block, Mr. Skinner announced that Mr. Mumford had purchased the lot mentioned above, and intended to commence building operations forthwith. The proposition that the Association should rent two floors of the proposed building was received with great favor, and it was agreed that the Association will, after discharging their debt, secure funds to pay the rent and procure suitable appointments in the new quarters.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

PROF. FELIX ADLER delivered last Sunday (April 10) a discourse on Channing.

JOHN L. STODDARD has begun, under favorable auspices, his course of lectures in New York.

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE has written an essay on "The Disadvantages of Being Pretty." Most girls are good-natured and willing to put up with the disadvantages.—Boston Post.

MR. JOHN SWINTON, the communistic leader, declines to be a candidate for the presidency. John maintains it would not be constitutional, inasmuch as he was born in Scotland. It is suggested that it is unbecoming so sweeping a reformer to concede to such vulgar prejudices.

JUDGE DAVIS says of Lincoln that, while nearly all the lawyers on the Wabash circuit were in ecstasies over Macaulay's History, then just published, Lincoln was absorbed in the study of Euclid. Night after night he spent over the problems, and finally demonstrated all of them without the least assistance.

COL. INGERSOLL has just put to a Washington audience the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" It was hardly safe, we fear, to trust so important an inquiry to such an audience. There are some people who would answer the Colonel by calling his attention to a certain passage of the New Testament.

A SPECIAL EXHIBITION of oil-paintings and charcoal drawings, by Miss H. M. Knowlton, Miss A. M. Curtis, Miss E. D. Hale, Miss C. A. Cranch, will open Tuesday, April 4, at No. 4 Park Street, to continue one week. The collection will then be sold at auction, by Lewis J. Bird & Co., April 20 and 21, at 2.30 P.M., each day.

THE NEW YORK Sunday Herald contains some curious advertisements. Here is a recent one: "Any nice young lady desirous of getting just the very handsomest, richest, and best family Bible (far ahead, both inside and outside, of the great Bible Societies' publications of both Europe and America) as a beautiful present for getting up a small club therefor among her friends, etc., will please call for Bible Man, Astor Place Hotel," etc.

ONE OF THE MOST interesting and impressive Channing memorial celebrations was held at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and Rev. Dr. Sims (Methodist) and a number of clergymen and laymen of other denominations were present, and participated. If half the good things, which are said of reformers after they are dead, were said of them while they are living and when it costs so much more to say them, it would make considerable difference in their experience.

MR. JAMES T. FIELDS' Boston house, which he has occupied for a quarter of a century, contains ten thousand volumes. He has many literary curiosities, including original manuscripts by Thackeray, Dickens, Hawthorne, and Whittier; books once belonging to great authors, and having their pencillings on the margins; a copy of Boccaccio (printed 1684), given by Leigh Hunt to his wife; Charles Lamb's copy of Pope's "Rape of the Lock"; Southey's copy of Ben Jonson, marked by Coleridge; and other books equally valuable. When Whittier visits Boston, he always occupies the room in Mr. Fields' house wherein Hawthorne used to work and sleep.

THE ELECTION at New Rochelle for three school trustees, about which considerable interest has been centred, resulted, a few days since, in the election of James A. Grenchbach, Gideon W. Davenport, and Ritter C. Hadley, by a majority of eleven over a ticket called the "Catholic ticket." Father Thomas Loughlin, some two years ago, raised a question about the reading of the Bible in the schools, and, rather than enter into a controversy, the trustees abolished that part of the services. Father Loughlin is now desirous of reinstating the Protestant Bible, but wants to introduce the Roman Catholic Bible also, and employ teachers of the Roman Catholic faith in the schools to instruct children of that Church. By getting a representation in the Board, he hoped to attain this end.

THE ENGLISH newspapers refer humorously to "an alliance of beer and Bibles, bricks and mortar." There is a great brewer at Warrington, Sir Gilbert Greenall, who, upon one side of one of his public houses, has built a school, and on the other side a church. Somebody quotes, as apropos of this queer contiguity, the old couplet: "Wherever God erects a house of prayer, The Devil builds a chapel there." This Tory brewer, they say, has taken a contract for both. But this is not so good as the ancient quatrain written upon a church, the vaults of which were let for the storage of strong drink. Upon the door of this miscellaneous edifice, some wag wrote: "There's a spirit above and a spirit below, A spirit of joy and a spirit of woe; The spirit above is the spirit divine, And the spirit below is the spirit of wine."

EUGENE EMORY BARNUM, a most estimable man, the secretary of the Coöperative Colonization Society of New York, has just passed away in that city, after a brief illness, at the age of thirty-seven. Mr. Barnum was a person of excellent intelligence, pure life, humane sympathies, and kindly and cordial manners. He was born at Detroit, Mich., June 5, 1843, but had spent the greater portion of his life in the West, especially in Kansas and Colorado, where he enjoyed much popularity. For the last three or four years, he has been the confidential adviser of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the distinguished philanthropist, in the management of her estate and the dispensing of her beneficence. He was an ardent admirer of George Jacob Holyoake, and sympathized very deeply in his views of coöperation, and contributed much, through his earnest efforts, to Mr. Holyoake's reception in New York on his late visit to this country. Mr. Barnum was a warm friend of Prof. Felix Adler, and an efficient and valuable co-worker with him in important benevolent enterprises.

FOREIGN.

"VANITY FAIR" is to be put into Italian, and our familiar friend will appear as "Becci Sharpe."

DR. DRAPER'S History of the Conflict between Religion and Science has reached a thirteenth edition in France.

THE DUCHESS OF GALLIERA, a lady distinguished by her repeated munificent donations to the cause of charity, has given her Genoese palace of La Salita di San Bartolomeo degli Armeni for a child's hospital.

THE SEVENTIETH birthday of Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, the well-known novelist, has just been celebrated by a dinner given in her honor by Mr. Edward Dickinson in London. Mrs. Stephens still seems as hale and hearty as an Englishwoman of fifty.

KING ALPHONSO has sent a photograph of himself, beautifully framed, in Spanish enamel of gold and silver on steel, to the Historical Society of Missouri. The picture bears the King's autograph, and is a token of approval of the Society's intended celebration of the anniversary of the first Mississippi River exploration.

THE REV. H. WALTER MILLER, an Anglican vicar in Richmond, England, laid down a pretty stiff proposition to his parishioners previous to Easter. He declared that "the man who does not receive the holy Communion at Easter-tide dishonors Jesus Christ, breaks the law of the Church, forfeits the name of Christian, starves his own soul, and brings himself into danger of damnation." He also warned his people against the danger of dissent.

THE SCANDINAVIAN residents in Paris gave a grand banquet April 4, in honor of Professor Nordenskjöld, the Swedish Arctic explorer, and his lieutenant, Captain Pallander. There were 220 persons present, including Prince Oscar of Sweden, the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, and Christine Nilsson. The hall was magnificently decorated with flags of all nations and an escutcheon bearing the names of all the explorers who have attempted the North-west passage.

THE Estafette and Ordre publish a letter from Prince Jerome Napoleon on decrees against unauthorized religious confraternities. The Prince declares he cannot, without being false to his origin, show himself an enemy of religion or of the revolution. He continues: "The decrees do not constitute persecution. They are only a return to an indispensable rule of public law. The fiction of a conservative union has lasted too long. There is nothing in common between the legitimists and ourselves. It is time for each one to resume his colors, traditions, and principles, and that all ambiguity should cease."

THE TOMB IN WHICH the body of the late Pope is to be interred has become almost an object of worship. Pilgrimages are made to it, and "priests, monks, nuns, widows [these, no doubt, animated by those sinister motives with which Mr. Weller, Senior, credited the genus], orphans, schools, and confraternities make pious visits to the spot." Not only are prayers made around the grave, but they are being literally "offered up," hundreds of written petitions being suspended around. In due time we shall probably hear of miracles, when the relics of Pius IX. are deposited in their resting-place, after which, of course, canonization can only be a matter of time and form.

A PROTESTANT in one of the Biscayan provinces of Spain recently undertook to bury his child in a Protestant cemetery, and serious trouble with Catholics grew out of it. The local priest objected to his doing so, on the ground that the child belonged by baptism to the Roman Church, and by his direction the coffin was seized. An appeal to the Governor was made by both priest and parent, and the Governor referred the case to the Minister of the Interior at Madrid, who replied by telegraph that "parents have the right to decide for themselves in what cemeteries the bodies of their children shall be buried." The chaplain to whom the message was sent took care, it is said, to keep out of the way; but the Governor ordered the Mayor to deliver up the body at once, whether the chaplain should open the receiving-vault or not. Accordingly, the body of the child was restored to the parent, amid the rejoicing of the Protestant community.

IN HIS CONCLUDING lecture on "Unbelief in England and France a Hundred Years Ago," the Rev.

Dr. Cazenove, Chancellor of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh, alluded to the theory that the ages of Scepticism and Belief were alternate. The unbelief of to-day did not take the form of that of the eighteenth century; then it was Deism, now it is Atheism. The prospect was solemn; but encouragements were not wanting,—such, for instance, as the existence of the Victoria Institute and the enlistment of “a great number of scientific men on the side of belief.” The Sceptics of our age “were not those of the bad life and bad tone that Diderot and Voltaire and Rousseau were”; but such men as Herbert Spencer and Mr. Huxley must, nevertheless, be said to be on the same side. Other allusions were made to Secularists, who “got up a few points carefully”; and the congregation of St. Mary's were exhorted “to act up to their light,” and prove “living witnesses” that none could ever thoroughly put aside. We hope it is not discourteous to express our opinion that Dr. Cazenove preaches much as an old and pious woman would do, were she permitted to occupy a pulpit in a cathedral church.

WE CAN BUT THINK that a most exaggerated estimate of the powers of the Jesuit obtains among Continental Liberals generally, whether in France, Germany, Italy, or Belgium. That he is devoted to his Church, and to the Order established by Ignatius de Loyola, is but natural; that what he knows he knows thoroughly and can impart to others that rare facility, we know; but we are also confident that, as the Times puts it, he is now behind the age, because “his theology is obsolete, his philosophy is scholastic, his scholarship is of the slenderest, his science would hardly satisfy a School Board in this country.” That these persons can ever oppose to any purpose the influence of modern knowledge is a most unnecessary apprehension. The fanatics of Exeter Hall may believe the Jesuit to be as subtle as the serpent which induced Eve to taste the pippin; but intelligent people in England and America know that he is powerless to arrest the current of modern thought. It is, however, most unwise to give him the opportunity of posing as a martyr and of standing before the world a living monument of democratic intolerance and weakness. Leave him to time, and he will soon become an anachronism.—Secular Review.

IN SCOTLAND, the heresy-hunters are sniffing the air like sleuth-hounds in their eagerness to proceed against those Free Kirk ministers who are at all tinged with what the pious Dr. Begg has condemned as “German rubbish.” We learn that the Orthodox are determined to institute charges against Dr. Davidson, of Edinburgh, and Dr. James Candlish, of Glasgow, the one being regarded as the very “head and front” of the heterodoxy which now afflicts the Free Church, while the other (Dr. Candlish) is one of his most prominent followers. In an interesting article on this subject, the Edinburgh correspondent of the Times, after calling attention to the grave crisis in the history of the Free Church which is impending, says: “Two points, however, are noteworthy. In the first place, the persecutors of Professor Robertson Smith, led by Sir Henry Moncreiff, are afraid of spoiling their case against him by the raising of new issues. In the second place, the inquisitorial character of the proposed inquiry has forced the Orthodox Professors, led by Principle Rainy and Professor Blaikie, to make common cause with their attainted brethren.” It is to be hoped that the persecutors in this case, as in that of Mr. Mackonochie in the Anglican Church, have allowed their zeal to outrun their discretion. Recent events in Scotland demonstrate the truth of the theory that Dissenting Churches only exist upon bigotry and narrowness.—Secular Review.

SCHOOLBOY BLUNDERS.—The Lyon County (Nev.) Times, writing of the ludicrous mistakes at a recent school examination there, says: “Although the replies indicated a reasonably high degree of proficiency among the scholars, some ludicrous mistakes were made. A boy was told to correct the following sentence: ‘Milo began to lift the ox when he was a calf.’ The reply was: ‘Milo, when he was an ox, began to lift the calf.’ A little boy was asked: ‘What are the principal minerals in Nevada?’ He replied, without the least hesitation: ‘Gold, silver, and trout.’ To the question, ‘How would you go from New York to San Francisco by water?’ a boy in the same department replied promptly, and with the utmost assurance: ‘By boat!’ Another scholar in the same class being asked, ‘Why do we celebrate the Fourth of July?’ answered unhesitatingly: ‘Because three Presidents died on that day.’ A boy in the high school, having been required to give the plural of two, answered: ‘Three!’ and resumed his seat with a self-satisfied air.”

MINISTERIAL WIT.—Here is an amusing bit of ecclesiastical tit-for-tat. Two young men were chums and intimate friends in college: one became a Baptist minister, the other an Episcopalian. They did not meet again for years. When they did, it was in the pulpit of the Baptist, for whom the Episcopalian preached to the great satisfaction of the congregation. Sermon over, the two divines ducked their heads behind the breastwork of the preaching-desk, and held the following colloquy. “Fine sermon, Tom. Much obliged. Sorry I can't repay your kindness for preaching by asking you to stay to our communion. Can't, though, you know, because you have never been baptized.” “Oh, don't concern yourself about that, Jim. I couldn't receive the communion at your hands, as you have never been ordained.”

IT IS ESTIMATED that more miles of new railroad will be built in the United States in 1880 than ever before in one year.

Communications.

DESCARTES' IDEA OF GOD.

Man as a self-conscious being is a problem to himself. Philosophy strives to solve this problem. Hegel identifies its principal systems with the logical process of thought itself. Kuno Fischer thinks that the development of philosophy is the development of self-knowledge on the part of spirit. “We ourselves are the world,” he says. “Every false view of it is self-delusion, every true view of it self-knowledge.”

Would we know how the problems of humanity have been determined and solved, and the new and deeper problems that spring from every solution, we must study the history of philosophy. Greek philosophy asked: Whence arises the world of nature? How explain the dualism between matter and form? Aristotle's “entelechy” was the answer.

Then came the theological problems of Christianity, the problems of scholasticism. Scholasticism sought the basis of faith in reason. “Credo ut intelligam,” was its watchword. The ideas for which it struggled live to-day in our institutions.

Modern philosophy begins with Descartes. Its stand-point is one of universal doubt. Nothing is certain except doubt. But, subtract delusion from self-delusion, the self remains. From doubt itself springs the point that triumphantly resists doubt. “After I have again and again weighed everything,” says Descartes, “I come to this declaration which stands firm: the proposition, I am, I exist, which is necessarily true the very moment I express or think it.”

But what am I? If I separate everything doubtful from my being, the doubting alone remains. To doubt is to think: thinking is my true being. “I think, therefore I am.” This is the proposition of self-knowledge, of self-certainty. To doubt it would be to annul the possibility of doubting itself. It excludes every doubt, it is perfectly true. “It is the first and most certain truth that every one finds who philosophizes rightly.”

From this proposition follows the rule of certainty. “What I conceive clearly and distinctly,” says Descartes, “is true. And only that is true which I conceive clearly and distinctly.” Through thought, we separate everything foreign from the object and represent its nature truly.

Nothing in the world is clearer, people think, than the bodies they perceive. And the proposition of the philosopher, that the spiritual nature is more capable of being known than the corporeal, appears to the ordinary consciousness absurd. But let one consider in a given case what it is which is so distinctly perceived in bodies,—the properties, for instance, of a piece of wax. The wax melts, the properties change. They did not belong to the nature of this body necessarily, hence not to its distinct conception. What remains is something extended, flexible, changeable, capable of assuming an endless series of sizes and forms. This endless multiplicity can only be thought: it cannot be sensuously perceived. Therefore, the body as it is in truth is only distinct in so far as it is thought.

We have, then, besides the idea of our own being, that of body and that of God. What we sensuously perceive in bodies is not clear, and therefore less real than our thinking nature; what we clearly represent in bodies is thought, and therefore contained in our thinking nature. There is no reason why we may not be the producing cause of the conception of body.

Thus only one idea is left,—that of God, which contains more reality than my own being. For I am finite, God is infinite; I am imperfect and dependent, God is perfect and independent. How can I, out of my limited, imperfect being, produce this conception? Either it is impossible that I have such an idea, or it is necessary that its original exists. God alone is its cause. It is an innate idea, imprinted upon me as “the mark of the workman upon his work.” “It is not necessary that this mark should be different from the work itself,” says Descartes; “but, from the single fact that God created me, it is very credible that he produced me, in some fashion, in his own image and likeness; and that I conceive this resemblance, in which the idea of God is found contained, by the faculty by which I conceive myself,—that is to say that, when I reflect on myself, I not only know that I am a thing imperfect, incomplete, and dependent on others, that tends and aspires incessantly to something greater and better than I am, but I know also, at the same time, that he on whom I depend possesses in himself all the great things to which I aspire, and of which I find in me the ideas,—not indefinitely and potentially, but that he enjoys them in reality, actually and infinitely, and therefore that he is God.” This idea does not say, like others, to the thinking spirit, “Thou art: I am only the mirror of thy being”; but it says, clearly and distinctly, “I am: I mirror in thee a higher and better being than thou.”

Self-knowledge without the idea of God, self-certainty without the certainty of divine being, self-consciousness without divine consciousness, is impossible. Both, in fact, form two sides of the same idea. “To have discovered this connection through his insight into the depths of human nature is the import of the Cartesian theology,” says Kuno Fischer.

Truth requires self-examination; self-examination discloses self-delusion; hence arises universal doubt. We make clear to ourselves our own uncertainty. But is not uncertainty a defect, an imperfection? When, through doubt of all else, we become certain of our thinking being, we recognize also our imperfection, our dependence. One is as sure as the other. That we doubt is an expression of our thinking and of our imperfect nature. He who recognizes clearly his imperfection strives to free himself from it,—strives after perfection; but how can one strive after perfection without conceiving it? The idea of the perfect is necessarily united with the knowledge of the imperfect, the idea of God with the certainty of our own being: both are opposite poles of the same conception.

“If we have a work of art before us,” says Kuno Fischer, “who recognizes best its defects? Plainly the connoisseur, to whom the nature of the work in its complete perfection is most clearly evident. He sees quickest where perfection is lacking in the given case.”

If the idea of a perfect being were not inherent in us, we should not have the idea of the imperfect, the insight into our imperfection, our self-delusion: doubt itself, with which all knowledge begins, would be impossible. It lies at the basis of doubt, it is more primordial than self-knowledge. Our self-consciousness is rooted in the divine consciousness. This idea of God in us, without which we could not recognize our imperfection, our self, which cannot therefore be conditioned by our self,—what is it except the being of God? It would not be perfect, were it dependent upon anything. It would be dependent, if everything did not depend upon it.

Thus doubt is solved. Knowledge is possible. “Because God is, saith the soul, therefore I am and shall be—in God!” ELLEN M. MITCHELL.

St. Louis, April, 1880.

SHADOWS.

Alleged supernatural personalities have been worshipped in the past with elaborate ceremonial and an unquestioning faith by great historic nations and races now extinct; which personalities any school-boy will now tell you were mere shadows, dreams of superstitious credulity, or mythic representations of natural phenomena. Apollo was once a great dominating fact, and not a mere poetic name. Priest-hoods and their official sibyls, twenty-five hundred years ago, directed in his name the policy of the leading historic nations of that day, and were consulted in all great public and private emergencies. Of course the Delphic god was never himself palpable to the senses, but his existence and reality were unquestioned; and whatever words fell from the foamy lips of the Pythia, when she was seated on the tripod, were believed to be dictated by Apollo, and were acted upon to the letter by illustrious statesmen and generals. To have called in question either the existence or regulative control of human affairs of the god Apollo, twenty-five hundred years ago, or even later, in any Greek city, would have been inviting on the part of the sceptic swift destruction at the hands of a fierce mob.

And yet Apollo was the merest shadow or airy idealization of the Greek spirit. The Apolline religion, which moulded ancient Greek civilization so long and so ably and wisely, had for its focus and Holy See the temple-city of Delphi, on the Phocian cliffs overlooking the Gulf of Lepanto. It was the most poetical, elaborate, and influential supernaturalism which ever ruled the nations of the West. The valley of the river Pleistus, which led up to Delphi, literally swarmed with pilgrims to the Delphic shrine. The Delphic populace grew fat on the bounties of these pilgrims. They were a vicious, corrupt rabble, the unscrupulous tools of priestcraft.

No priesthood ever surpassed the Delphic priesthood in wisdom, clairvoyance, and thorough knowledge of the world, which they governed through the mouth of their Sibyl and in the name of their God. They were thoroughly acquainted with all the languages of the ancient nations of the West. They knew all the leading families, royal and aristocratic, of those nations. They had sacerdotal legates resident in all the leading Hellenic cities. No great enterprise was inaugurated without the sanction of their god. Thirlwall thinks that upon the whole they exercised their tremendous power wisely. But they were always on the side of the kings and tyrants as against republics. They hated Athens with its irrepressible Ionian spirit of democracy, as the papal priesthood to-day hate democratic France and democracy everywhere on both sides of the Atlantic.

But it was not my purpose to dissertate at any length upon the Apolline religion. I simply wished to call attention to the fact that the most civilized race of antiquity was ruled for ages in the name of a Shadow, in the heavens or in the earth beneath the prophetic fissure. Emerson says the “gods are shadows floating up and down in the still abodes,” or imaginary celestial region. The long-since extinct Apollo, who, so many centuries ago, was fabled to have left the steep of Delphos “with hollow shriek,” was simply the Greek spirit idealized and personified, and all the gods of all the religions are simply cases of the same kind. Easter is just past, and long-qui-scent vegetation is beginning to emerge from the soil. In ancient Greek phrase, Proserpine has returned to the light and to the arms of her be-reaved mother, the Earth. In Christian phraseology, this reappearance of vernal vegetation is Christ arisen from the grave. But the mythification and personification of Nature ought to be at an end.

B. W. BALL.

OLD MADAME ROTHSCHILD, mother of the mighty capitalists, attained the age of ninety-eight years. Her wit, which was remarkable, and her intellectual faculties, which were of no common order, were preserved to the end. In her last illness, when surrounded by her family, her physician being present, she said in a suppliant tone to the latter: “Dear doctor, try to do something for me.” “Madame, what can I do? I can't make you young again.” “No, doctor, I don't want to be young again, but I want to continue to grow old.”

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN PRUSSIA.

The Cologne Gazette learns, "on good authority," that the Pope will permit the Roman Catholic bishops of Prussia to submit to the May laws "with as good grace as they can." The Gazette is a well-informed journal, but in this case its information will have to be received with critical caution. The Roman Popes are in the habit of yielding quite so easily, and it is well known that the Prussian government has practically placed itself in a position which is not tenable for any length of time. As far as law goes, Prussia is not wrong; as far as policy goes, she is, decidedly. The kingdom has about twenty-five million inhabitants, over eight millions of whom, or precisely one-third, are Catholics. These Catholics have rights: their rights have to be respected; and no government can afford permanently to dissatisfy one-third of all the people under its care with safety or with impunity. Now, what are the facts to-day? The twelve Catholic sees of Prussia are vacant, with only two or three exceptions; the bishops have been driven out of office by the government, and their official property is in the hands of secular administrators, appointed by the state. This state of affairs is in itself intolerable, and so is the fact that over ten million people, professing the Christian religion, think themselves tyrannized by the Spartan militarism, evangelicalism, or liberalism of Prussia. For it ought to be remarked that the Lutherans receive about the same legal treatment of which the Catholics complain. It would be erroneous to assume that the Prussian government is acting illegally, or that it proceeds without definite authority conferred by the legislature. Such is not the case. But that law is not tenable, which almost one-half of the people, who have to obey it, think harsh or unjust. Within the recollection of the present clergy, the Catholic Church in Prussia was treated with exceptional favor. The reaction, therefore, is felt all the more. It is worth while to inquire what it is that has provoked this deplorable state of affairs.

It is impossible to deny that the conflict was caused by the bishops, that it was sharpened by the late Pope, and that it has been the stock in trade of the temporal as well as the spiritual Catholic politicians. A conflict always breeds partisans, and the pot-house politician thrives on public restlessness and disquietude. When the Empire was established, the bishops organized a party of their own, in order to make sure of not being overlooked in the redistribution of power, funds, and offices. As their partisans occupied the seats between the conservative right and the liberal left in the legislative halls, they were called the centre party. One of their first acts was a petition addressed to the Emperor, asking him to restore the temporal power of the Pope. The Pope had meanwhile promulgated his own infallibility, which is doubly distasteful to a semi-absolute government like the Prussian. Hence the latter concluded to meet the aggressive attitude of the Pope, the Vatican, the council, the bishops, and the Catholic politicians. The conflict began when the Bishop of Ermland excommunicated a theological teacher who refused to accept the dogma of infallibility as defined by the Vatican Council in 1870. The government protected the excommunicated teacher, formally according to common law, in reality because it paid the salaries of the parties, and consequently could act effectually. The bishops then declared war, and the government accepted the situation.

One of the incidental results was the establishment of compulsory civil marriage throughout the Empire, and the separation of the Prussian schools from the churches. The direct results were the expulsion of the Jesuits and kindred associations from the Empire, and the May laws, so called because they were promulgated in May, 1873. They relate to the education and appointment of clergymen, to the mode of leaving the Church, to church discipline and the establishment of an ecclesiastical court. The Prussian bishops simply declared that they would not obey, and the Pope pronounced the laws null and void (see the encyclical letter of February 5, 1875). The government then required all new bishops to declare under oath that they would obey the law of the land. Equally stringent laws were made for the Protestant churches. The bishops resisted, whereupon the government ceased to pay their salaries, prosecuted all disobedient clergymen and excluded them from the administration of parish property. This latter law was accepted by the bishops. But six or seven out of twelve had been deposed, and two or three had died. As the chapters could not come to terms with the government, all these sees remained vacant; for no Prussian bishop is appointed by the Pope.

The conflict reached all classes, but it was fought first by the bishops and the government, when the former were defeated; it was then fought by the Catholics and the liberals, when the latter prevailed. The liberals are now in the minority, and the conservatives are anxious to restore peace among the agitated Catholics. It is rumored from time to time that the government will yield, then again that the Vatican is yielding. It is probably correct to assume that neither will give way, and that time alone will heal the breach and calm the deeply troubled waters. Nor is this impossible. The Prussian government has not passed one act which is not directly or constructively law in this country. Every resident here is obliged to obey the law of the land, and every person receiving government pay is compelled to obey the acts of Congress. These acts occasionally involve a real or apparent hardship; but clearly every member of the civil or military service would be cashiered immediately upon openly defying a public act or ordinance. The true solution of the Prussian conflict is not yielding, but disestablishment. The Prussian government has treated the Protestant churches more aggressively than it has the Catholic establishment; but the Catholic bishops fought, while the Protestant clergy yielded. The mixed system, as now established in Prussia, is unsatisfactory to all classes; yet neither the Catholics, nor the Protestants, nor the government are willing to advocate a free church. There has been an occasional rumor that Prince Bismarck would come to that; but even the rumor is problematic. The church history of Prussia throughout the century demonstrates the incompatibility of a church wedded to a military state. United, one of the two has always suffered; divided, as America shows, both can flourish. But in this respect, as in one or two others, America is a century in advance of Europe.

By a curious accident, the conflict, which has been fought on both sides with carnal weapons, is dubbed the Kulturkampf, which means a struggle for civilization. The name is not well chosen. Civilization and public culture have not been at stake. Neither has it been a conflict between spiritual and temporal powers. The bishops fought for political rights, and the state refused to honor the claim. The Prussian government took special pains not to interfere with the spiritual affairs of the Catholics, and it respected the Catholic dogmas; but it defended its own political powers with unrelenting vigor. The conflict was political, largely ecclesiastical, and spiritual only by accident. Such a conflict could occur only in a country like Prussia, where the government assumes to be the Kulturträger,—the organ of sovereignty, of learning, of art, of philosophy, of theology, of all power. The Catholic church of Prussia has assumed, in a few instances, similar functions. Hence the conflict, with its odious accompaniments. Such a conflict cannot be avoided, unless both parties agree to confine their action to specific and specified fields. —Advertiser.

PLIOCENE MAN IN CALIFORNIA.

The evidences of the human occupation of the Pacific coast in preglacial times, as found in the gold-bearing gravels of Sierra Nevada and California, embrace both stone implements and human bones. The superintendent of the California Geological Survey says, in a report on these gravels, that stone implements, including tools, pestles, mortars, platters, spear and arrow heads, etc., have been found in so many places that the fact of their occurrence in the gold gravels cannot be doubted. They have been found in the following localities: in Mariposa County, at Horse Shoe Bend, on the Merced River, at Hornitos, and five miles north-east, and near Princeton; in Merced County, near Snelling; in Stanislaus County, at Dry Creek; in Tuolumne County, at Table Mountain, Kincaid Flat, Wood's Creek, Mormon Creek, in Amador County, near Jackson; in El Dorado County, at Shingle Springs, Diamond Springs, near Placerville, Spanish Flat, Kelsey's Diggings, Dry Creek, Coloma, Georgetown, Brownsville; in Placer County, near Gold Hill, Forest Hill, Byrd's Valley, Missouri Tunnel; in Nevada County, at Grass Valley, Myer's Ravine, Brush Creek; in Butte County, at Cherokee; also in Siskiyou and Trinity Counties, localities not mentioned.

Human bones are reported from Tuolumne and Calaveras Counties.

(1) Under Table Mountain, Tuolumne County, a human jaw, obtained by Dr. Snell; same locality, in the Sonora Tunnel, at a depth of 180 feet, a portion of a skull, given to C. F. Winslow in 1857, by P. K. Hubbs, of Vallejo, Cal., the finder, and by the former noticed in the Proceedings of the Boston Society of Natural History, for October 7, 1857; the same locality affording also a mastodon's tooth, and a "large stone bead" of white marble. Mr. Winslow also says that Captain D. B. Akey related to him a discovery of a complete human skeleton from a tunnel under Table Mountain, but stated that he did not remember the tunnel, and the fact has not been verified.

(2) In Calaveras County, in February, 1866, in the claim of Messrs. Mattison & Co., on Bald Mountain, near Altaville and Angel's, beneath the lava, from a depth of 130 feet. This is the skull which came into Professor Whitney's hands through Dr. Jones, who received it from Mr. Mattison, and which has been described by Dr. Jeffries Wyman. The material in which it had been embedded was mixed tufa and gravel, and attached to it was a specimen of Helix mormonum, a species now living in Nevada. According to Mr. Mattison, the succession of beds passed through from above to that containing the skull was: black lava, 40 feet; next below, gravel, 3; light lava, 30; gravel, 5; light lava, 15; gravel, 25; dark brown lava, 9; gravel (that containing the skull), 5. This bed rested on red lava, 4 feet, and red gravel, 17 feet. Professor Whitney brings forward the testimony of Mr. Scribner, and also of Dr. Jones, and says: "We have the independent testimony of three witnesses, two of whom were previously known to the writer as men of intelligence and veracity, while, in regard to the third, there is no reason for doubting his truthfulness. Each one of these gentlemen testifies to some points in the chain of circumstantial evidence going to prove the genuineness of the find. No motive for deception on the part of Mr. Mattison can be discovered, while the appearance of the skull itself bears strong though silent testimony to the correctness of the story."

Dr. Wyman's report, as is now well known, stated that the "skull presents no signs of having belonged to an inferior race. In its breadth, it agrees with the other crania from California, except those of the Diggers, but surpasses them in the other particulars in which comparisons have been made. This is especially apparent in the greater prominence of the forehead and the capacity of its chamber. In so far as it differs in dimensions from the other crania from California, it approaches the Esquimaux." The following are the comparisons above referred to by Dr. Wyman, the measurements being in millimetres:—

	Breadth of Cranium.	Breadth of Frontal.	Frontal Arch.	Length of Frontal.	Height of Cranium.	Zygomatic Diameter.
22 Esquimaux.....	134.5	94	296.5	126.6	135	137.6
5 from Alaska.....	133.5	92.8	285.5	121.8	129.5	132
11 from different parts of Cal.	150.5	93.5	260	117	120.8	134
3 Digger Indians.....	136.6	88.3	280	119	120.3	141.5
The fossil skull.....	150	101	300	128	134	145

Professor Whitney regards the gravels as preglacial and pliocene, on the basis of the evidence from the fossils found in them.—Scientific American.

JESTINGS.

A KANSAS BOY earned a nice Bible by committing three hundred verses to memory, and then he traded his Bible for a shot-gun, and accidentally shot his aunt in the leg.

AN OHIO woman dreamed that she saw her husband kissing a certain neighbor's wife, and she awoke and struck him across the face and broke his nose. Man is nowhere safe.

A THIEF WHO broke out of the jail in Ohio, the other day, being captured, told the sheriff that he might have escaped, but that he had conscientious scruples about travelling on Sunday.

EQUAL TO THE OCCASION.—Mamma: "Why, Poppet, all these apples are bitten. Have you touched them?" Poppet: "No, ma. But it froze last night, and p'raps—p'raps—they're frost-bitten."

A SMALL CHILD being asked by a Sunday-school teacher, "What did the Israelites do after they crossed the Red Sea?" answered, "I don't know, ma'am, but I guess they dried themselves."

A PAPER, commenting on the fact that a farmer nearly lost his life by sinking in a quagmire, adds: "Men who do not subscribe for a newspaper must expect to be sucked-in every now and then."

"DO YOU SAY your prayers regularly every night and morning?" asked a sympathetic lady of a little shoeblack, to whom she had just given a trifle. "I allus sez'um at night, mum; but any smart boy can take care of hisself in the daytime," was the little rogue's reply.

AN INDIANA girl who sued for breach of promise found all her love-letters confronting her in court, and rather than have the jury know that she spelled it "mairy" for marry, "harte" for heart, and "hapie" for happy, she withdrew the suit. Young men, save your love-letters.

WE'VE SUSPECTED for some time past that measures would have to be taken to check the alarmingly rapid growth of the Smith family. And here, now, sure enough a Pennsylvania man proposes to exhibit at the next World's Fair a "Smith roller and crusher."—San José Mercury.

BELLE: "This holly in my hair wants a little relief. It's too red." Aunty: "Well, why not put in a sprig or two of mistletoe, dear?" Belle: "Nonsense, aunty. Why, I should have all the young men kissing me!" Aunty: "Indeed, no, my dear: they'd do nothing of the kind. I've tried 'em."

MINISTER to candidate for church membership: "Of course, Dugald, you have read the Confession of Faith?" Dugald: "No, intee, serr, I neffer do read ta last dying speeches of condemt creeminals, neffer intee; and I do hope you do not think me so depased as to read ta one you hev shust mentioned."

WOMAN, read this: A girl down in Massachusetts, who painted pottery, has become insane. And, in the horrible dreams and hideous fancies that glare upon her darkened mind, she imagines that she sees all the things she has painted. The medical men say there is no hope for her.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A WEST SIDE man got out of bed early the other morning to look for burglars, but, finding none, came back, muttering, "I thought I heard something breaking." "I guess, dear," said his wife, glancing toward the window and the rosy-tinted beams in the east,—"I guess it was the break of day."—Chicago Journal.

"OH! INDEED, it is a very busy time with us," said charming Miss Fitzjoy. "There are a great many services to attend, and then we have so much shopping to do just now." "Pardon me, but is not this the season of humiliation?" "Why, certainly, John, you darling; but, you see, if we should fail to come out on Easter in the new styles, the season of humiliation you speak of would continue longer, and be much more dreadful."—New Haven Register.

JUDGE MARTIN decided at Bridgeport the other day that certain evidence was inadmissible. The attorney took strong exception to the ruling, and insisted that it was admissible. "I know, your honor," said he, warmly, "that it is proper evidence. Here I have been practising at the bar for forty years, and now I want to know if I am a fool?" "That," quietly replied the court, "is a question of fact, and not of law, and so I won't pass upon it, but will let the jury decide."—New Haven Palladium.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.—An old darkey, who was asked if in his experience prayer had ever been answered, replied: "Well, sah, some pra's is ansud an' some isn't,—pends on w'at you axes fo'. Just arter de wah, w'en it was mighty hard scratchin' fo' de cullud breddern, I 'bsarved dat w'enabber I pway de Lord to sen' one o' Marse Peyton's fat turkeys fo' de ole man, dere was no notice took of de partition; but w'en I pway dat he would sen' de ole man fo' de turkey, de matter was 'tended to befo' sun up nex' mornin', dead sartin'!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " " "
 " 52 " " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-fly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oakthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newn, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET, Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR: FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-fly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols. Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	3.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S. (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	2.00
East Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism: an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	2.00
French Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	1.50
Mind and Body.....	5.00
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	2.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Beasts and Birds.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Society.....	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPE (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Life of George Eliot and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (B. W.) Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Outlines of Lectures.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outline of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child of the Future.....	2.50
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.00
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.60
Life of the Father.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers each.....	.10
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.50
Stories of the New Testament.....	1.50
Safest Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister.....	1.00
Carle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wendell: or, A Tale of Yorkshire and Wensleydale.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching an Etcher.....	5.00
Henry Blount. Past and Present.....	1.50
Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Struggling Blocks.....	1.50
Wood-gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Sketches and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verases. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers Bits of Travel.....	.35
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HAGINSON'S (D.) Essays and Papers.....	1.50
Maypole: An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUTCHES (DAVID) Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiology, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance," to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Magnetism, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Amos.....	1.75
XI. Animal Magnetism. By J. J. Barry.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Mechanism of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fund. By M. G. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesmates. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPERT (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II. Per vol.....	1.50
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
The Memorial Poems.....	.25
Firebrand Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subject of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Song of the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Language, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion. On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.5
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.6
FARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.0
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.2
PHILIPS (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.5
The Story of Ayle.....	1.5
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.5
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.A.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Second Principles. Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	6.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology, Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Association.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III., IV., and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fanny's A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Calh. Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

RADICAL DISCOURSES.

1. America's Debt to Thomas Paine.
2. False and True Prayer.
3. The Brute God of the Old Testament.
4. The Religion of To-day.
5. False Teachings of the Christian Church.
6. The Workingman's Religion.
7. The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset.
8. The Religious Demand of To-day.
9. The Teachings of Free Religion.
10. Do You Love Jesus?
11. Atonement.
12. How to Read the Bible.
13. Revivals.
14. Who are Christians?
15. The Moral Life.

The above discourses may be had at 5 cts. each, or the entire set for 50 cts., by addressing L. K. WASHBURN, REVERE, MASS.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Hebraism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Cort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kruenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unbridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUME OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences, including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American. Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 539

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

AN OLD medical book, published in 1661, quaintly adopts the principle of similia similibus curantur in this case: "It is no small remedy to cure melancholy, to rub your body all over with nettles."

ACCORDING to Sadlier's Catholic Directory for 1880, there are in the United States 12 archbishops, 55 bishops, 5,989 priests, 1,136 students in theological seminaries, 6,407 churches, 2,246 parochial schools with 405,234 reported pupils, and a Roman Catholic population of 6,143,222.

M. CHAVARD, an Old Catholic priest, of Switzerland, has resigned, on the ground that after six years' efforts he despaired of a Catholic reformation in its present hands, the movement being without unity of doctrine or liturgy, and perverted to political ends. He intends to hold aloof from all theological controversies.

HON. ELISHA R. POTTER, a learned lawyer, in a recent work quotes from the record of the court at Hartford in 1637, as follows: "Whereas, Mr. Pinchon was questioned about imprisoning an Indian and freezing of him, the court is willing to pass over Mr. P.'s failings against an Indian." But the world will not pass over the United States' "failings against an Indian." National righteousness is just as obligatory as personal righteousness.

EX-STATE ASSESSOR BRIGGS, of New York, made a pointed and terse statement on the church taxation question in the Evening Times of March 31; and we reprint it in another column. He says: "The principle is here: 'Exemption from taxation is a violation of public faith in all cases where a direct appropriation would not be equally proper and just.'" This quotation is from a paper of our own, contained in the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Expediency of Revising and Amending the Laws relating to Taxation and Exemption therefrom, a volume of five hundred and seventy-seven pages published by the State of Massachusetts in January, 1875. It is pleasant to know that "bread cast upon the waters" does indeed sometimes return, as in this case.

IT IS NO WONDER that American college-degrees are looked upon with suspicion, since they are cheapened by almost indiscriminate bestowal. While England, with a population of 23,000,000, has only four universities which can confer degrees,—France, with a population of 36,000,000, only fifteen, and these all branches of one institution,—Germany, with a population of 42,000,000, only twenty-two; the single State of Ohio, with only a population of 3,000,000, has thirty-seven degree-bestowing institutions. Of course the standard is correspondingly low. Under such circumstances, an American degree commands little respect, unless known to be conferred by universities like Harvard and Yale, which are steadily raising the standard by making their degrees more and more difficult to obtain.

THE SHEFFIELD (England) Independent of March 6 had the following: "Under the auspices of the Sheffield Coöperative Society, Mr. G. J. Holyoake delivered a lecture on 'Coöperative Travels in America,' last night, in the Coöperative Hall. Mr. John Hatfield presided. The lecturer spoke in highly flattering terms of America as contrasted with England. It was a fact, he said, that there was in America more intelligence than in this country, and the average of intelligence there was higher than at home; moreover, it was more widely diffused. Why, the policeman in America was a gentleman: he wore a handsome suit, his coat was easy and well fitting; his garments were made in the most perfect manner; he had a long, broad, easy hat, which shaded his eyes from the sun, and he walked about the streets just at his leisure, or stood at the corners: he certainly was more like a gentleman than any other man in the street, and, except for his staff suspended by his side, nobody would know that he was a public servant. Let them speak to him, and he entered into conversation: there was nothing 'stuck up' about him; he had all the ease and independence of the well-bred gentleman. It was the same with guards and officers: there was no inequality, there was no sense of servitude, no sense of inferiority of position. How different was it at home, where the line of demarcation between one class and another was so sharp and stupid and awkward and unpleasant! The great difference of all in America he regarded as the vivacity of the Press. The lecturer next proceeded to speak of coöperation in America, which he considered was viewed with greater interest than in England, but had not developed itself so satisfactorily. His sketches of America and its people were admirably drawn, and the lecture was full of graphic pictures of American life as it is. At the close, a vote of thanks was awarded to the lecturer."

THE RECORD of a sensational preacher's career (supposed to be indirectly satirized in His Majesty Myself) is given by "Templeton," in the Hartford Courant, substantially as follows: "As successor of Rev. A. L. Stone in Park Street Church, Rev. W. H. H. Murray made a quiet and unsensational beginning. By hard intellectual labor, he soon won recognition and then pulpit popularity. 'All Boston began to admire him, and part of it believed in him.' His sermons were printed; his church became too small; Music Hall was opened for Sunday evening audiences of three thousand; his addresses on temperance and social reform gave him standing as a philanthropist, and his own people found in him nothing eccentric or doctrinally unsound. Confidence was first disturbed by his Adirondack book, which was 'loud' in tone and unbecoming a man of dignity and truth. Next he was run away with by his 'horse' passion; he began to dress and act like a jockey and took pride in unclerical costumes and manners. To the mild remonstrances of his deacons, he retorted with a lecture on 'Deacons,' holding them up to ridicule and odium. Some older people fell away from the church, but their place was more than filled by young men. With money made from lectures, books, and a generous salary, he started a horse-farm and neglected his work as a minister; refused attendance at funerals when it interfered with his devotion to horses; and finally demanded, in annoying terms, a long vacation and entire release from parish work. This being refused by a small majority, he resigned the Park Street pastorate, and set up for himself in Music Hall with a large following. He started a weekly paper with no limit to its professed resources; and all went well until one Sunday he brought the Music Hall enterprise to an abrupt termination, by announcing that he would withdraw for a year in order to mature the scheme and procure the means for a vast New England cathedral, which 'Templeton' believes was merely Murray's 'excuse to get away from his society, whose devotion to himself had become irksome.' Meanwhile his farm, newspaper, and 'buck-board wagon' business were involving him in heavy expenses; he borrowed from many friends and sought to borrow from others; till at last he went West, leaving matters to take care of themselves. The crash came: his creditors protected themselves as best they could. Mr. Murray said his good-by to the public in a pettish, childish letter, and sunk 'as absolutely out of sight as if the earth had swallowed him.' In adding that Mr. Murray has left friends here who still believe in him, and say that he could have paid all his debts had he been a better manager, 'Templeton' gives his own opinion that the whole indebtedness has never been acknowledged, and that not only lack of money, but the entanglement of various schemes, brought on the departure."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenafly, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN AHRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRIOR, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

As created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 STRAUSSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. USSINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUEDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N.Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y.
 Wauke, Ill. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. HOPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. JOHN W. TRUEDELL, Syra-
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 EBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWELLE, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DEGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN BRIT, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Steps on the Downward Road.

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

In many of the cases of dishonest dealing, including systematic violations of truth through a series of years, which have been discovered of late, it is mentioned that the offenders were members, or even officials, in Orthodox churches, fluent in prayer-meetings, zealous in revivals and Sabbath-school services. Possibly the number of facts like these may be explained in the same way as in the old puzzle so often addressed to children, Why do white sheep have more wool than black ones? And yet, perhaps, some features of the creed of these malefactors, and some circumstances in their education under it, and in the discussions necessarily growing out of it in these days of inquiry and research, may help materially towards the explanation of a phenomenon so strange. What can be stranger than that people should continue to lie, who believe that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone"? Even the intention of securing remission of sins by death-bed repentance and faith will hardly explain the incurrence of a risk so fearful as sudden death, hazarded year after year by such a person, holding such a creed. If the theology were tolerant of falsehood, the explanation would be easier. If, as the author of Villette tells us, one constant feature of the confession of sins there to the priests was, "I have told several lies," it may be supposed that the rebuke and the penance following were too slight to induce either self-reproach for the fault or serious effort to overcome it. But the Orthodox faith of New England would not verbally or formally class falsehood among the venial sins, even if it acknowledged the existence of such a class. If it familiarizes its ministers and members with violations of truth, and even makes variations from truth indispensable to the successful maintenance of its dogmas, this comes to pass indirectly, and, by logical necessity, never be explicit admission, that falsehood for a good purposy is allowable.

By logical necessity, I have said. The cases I have in mind seem to result from acceptance, as certainly true, of premises which impartial examination often shows to be unsound, sometimes absolutely disproves; persistent acceptance and vindication of such premises, in spite of full evidence invalidating or disproving them.

There was much discretion, even if little valor, in the counsel given by an official of the Young Men's Christian Association, in a Convention of members of that body, in reply to the inquiry how to meet objectors and objections. "Talk kindly," said this prudent counsellor, "but avoid argument." Under the circumstances, the advice in question was certainly judicious. The speaker knew that most of his associates were too ignorant to give any adequate reason for their faith; and he probably knew, moreover, that even the small minority of better instructed ones must persist in statements contrary to fact or reason or both, to avoid manifest defeat in discussion with any intelligent critic, either of their creed or of the Scriptural foundation of that creed.

In the body of dogma held in common by the various Orthodox sects, there are many particulars which, as I have intimated, are unauthorized either by fact or reason, and not a few which are flatly contradicted by fact or reason or both. I will specify some of them.

From the pulpit and the Tract Society and those weekly papers which call themselves "religious," and the functionaries of the Young Men's Christian Association, a demand is vehemently and persistently made for reverence to

"GOD'S WORD," meaning the Bible;
 "GOD'S DAY," meaning Sunday;
 "GOD'S HOUSE," meaning their church edifices;
 "GOD'S AMBASSADORS," meaning their clergy;
 "GOD'S ONLY BEGOTTEN SON," meaning Jesus of Nazareth.

These demands are made with an air of authority, the speakers and writers quietly assuming themselves to be God's ambassadors, and sometimes bestowing theological vituperation, and even accusations of immorality, upon those who disregard their assumption of a right to dictate.

Unless Protestants choose to submit to these assumptions of the clergy and their coadjutors as the more ignorant of the Catholics in Cambridge submit to "Father Scully," they must look into the grounds of the claim habitually made upon them, and take law and evidence as the appropriate guides of their conduct, instead of the self-assumed authority of a priestly "caste." If such scrutiny shall show that no one of the expressions above quoted is justifiable, in the sense in which it is habitually used by "pious" people, a door will be opened for great improvement, both in theology and religion.

1. Why is the Bible called "The Word of God"?

The defenders of this doctrine, in the very act of defending it, assert that each separate work in the two compilations of literature, Hebrew and Christian, which constitute the Bible, was written by some man; and they confidently specify, sometimes without evidence, sometimes against evidence, the particular human writers of the several portions of the two books. At the same time, they declare, with equal confidence, that these two books and all the separate works which have been brought together to compose them are "God's Word." When confronted with the contradiction involved in these two statements, they try to reconcile them by saying that God supernaturally influenced the human writers in such manner as to keep their compositions absolutely free from error, whether of fact or doctrine. Yet they offer no evidence of such immunity from error, either in the writers or the compilers of the books in question; but, on the contrary, when the infallibility thus assumed is disproved by the demonstration of numerous errors, involving both fact and doctrine, and even of numerous statements in those books directly contradicting each other, the pious people in question repeat the dogmatism with the same emphasis, refuse to look at the conflicting evidence, and even assail the motives and the characters of the critics whose researches have led to such heterodox conclusions.

If these books were all written by men, as history assures us, and if they all contain marks of human fallibility and imperfection, as critical inquiry assures us, they are not the "Word of God"; and the habit of claiming that they are so, in the face of such evidence, must either confuse the mind of the claimant or deprave it by the voluntary practice of false assertion.

Again, the assumption that the Bible, as a whole, is God's Word, necessarily implies that its two great divisions, and the several parts composing each, are perfectly accordant with each other. This is also explicitly and confidently asserted by defenders of the popular theology; and they affirm also that these two books, the Old and New Testaments, form one divine rule of faith and practice, self-consistent and infallible in character, and thus binding on the whole human race.

Critical scrutiny of these books, however, shows abundance of internal evidence invalidating this pretension. Sundry statements and doctrines in different parts of the Old Testament contradict each other, and sundry statements and doctrines in the New Testament are in direct opposition to some in the Old. Nothing is more certain than that Judaism and Christianity are two different religions. The Old Testament is a compilation of the laws and early literature of the former; the New Testament, of the laws and early literature of the latter. If the diversity between these two needed any further evidence, it would be found in the fact that Christians expend great efforts and large sums of money to convert Jews to their own faith. The assertion, then, that the Hebrew Scripture and the Christian Scripture form one homogeneous rule is an assertion contrary to truth and to fact; and the habit of affirming this as if it were true must exercise an injurious influence on the mental or the moral character of the speaker, or on both.

Again, as one of the convincing evidences of supernatural and infallible inspiration in the Bible, we are pointed to the "fulfilment of prophecy." It is confidently asserted that the correctness of the predictions of future events in the Old and New Testaments is demonstrated by the course of history; in other words, that events have invariably justified the accuracy of those predictions, except in the cases where the prophets had in view a period longer than the eighteen or twenty or twenty-five centuries which have elapsed since the utterance of their prophetic announcements. Thus, Orthodox clergymen and commentators refer to cases of this sort as "unfulfilled prophecies," still confidently asserting that none have failed of fulfilment through error on the part of the prophet.

The course of events, no doubt, has, in many cases, justified the expectations of Hebrew prophets in regard to the future, and proved their sagacity in announcing the results which would flow from obedience or disobedience on the part of the nation or its rulers. But correctness in half or three-quarters of the cases in question by no means suffices to establish infallibility in the predictors. The assertion is that these are God's announcements, spoken through the prophets; and that no error is to be found in any of them; and that the current of history shows no failure in any one of them.

Unfortunately for those who are interested in upholding the Orthodox theory, these assertions are not true; still more unfortunately for the clerical mouthpieces of these pretensions, they are found obviously and grossly false, as soon as investigation is brought to bear upon them.

To mention a single instance: among the cases of prophecy accurately fulfilled against all antecedent probability, none has been trumpeted more assiduously or more triumphantly than that of the dispersion of the Hebrews among all nations. Very well, we grant the fulfilment. Nobody denies it. But how about those other equally numerous and equally positive predictions which announce a gathering of the Jews again in Palestine, there to continue permanently in peace and righteousness under the rule of a prince of the lineage of David? This gathering of the outcasts was to take place at the coming of the Messiah, "the Lord's Anointed," was to be executed under his direction, and maintained by divine power intrusted to him. Since this predicted restoration has not taken place, we must either allow the prediction to be erroneous, or assign it to the class of "unfulfilled prophecies." The Orthodox expositors must take one horn or the other of this dilemma. They will not take the former. But adoption of the latter necessarily implies the admission that the Messiah has not come, and that the Scribes and Pharisees, however faulty in their other treatment of Jesus, were right in not accepting him as the Messiah, since he neither fulfilled, nor attempted to fulfil, the chief function prophetically assigned to the Messiah.

Once more: nothing in Hebrew prophecy was more confidently affirmed than that the Messiah was to be in the line of David. In two of the Gospels there are genealogical tables affirming the descent of Joseph, the husband of Mary, from David. If, then, Jesus was the son of Joseph, he had one, at least, of the prophetic marks of Messiahship. But the people who most emphatically claim Jesus as the true Messiah insist that Joseph was not his father, and assume his descent from one who was not in the line of David. Here, as in the case previously mentioned, the Orthodox clergy hold and insist upon grounds diametrically opposite to each other, and thus not only mislead their hearers, but must suffer mental and moral deterioration from the habit of "saying that which is not."

Among the statements at variance with truth and fact habitually made by the Orthodox pulpit and press respecting the Bible is the claim that that book asserts itself to be divinely inspired. The careful reader will find no assertion or implication of the sort in either part of the work. Neither the Old Testament for itself, nor the New Testament for itself, nor either for the other, nor any one of the sixty-six books for the whole, claims either divine inspiration or infallibility. The whole assumption rests upon a conclusion unjustifiably drawn from unsound premises. That it should be repeated by the more ignorant among revivalists and exhorters is not strange, since they find the assumption printed and stated, as if it were not only true, but unquestionable, in books of serious argument by reputable authors. How intelligent clergymen can continue to make assertions so obviously contrary to fact is a matter for them to explain, and for the thoughtful among their hearers to inquire into. My point is that the allowance of untrue statements in this matter naturally leads to the use and the toleration of inaccuracy in other matters.

Another self-contradictory position in which the propagandists of Orthodoxy are involved is the following: certain writers in the Bible, and certain passages in different parts of that book, give assertions diametrically opposite to each other respecting the character and attributes of God; some attributing to him perfection in every excellence, and particularly specifying truth, holiness, wisdom, justice, goodness, and stability in all these, while other writers and other passages furnish gross and unworthy representations of God's feelings, motives, conduct, and character. It is rational and reverent to consider the Deity to be at least as wise and good as the best that our imagination can conceive. But passages in various parts of the Bible attribute to Him unsuccessful experiments of various kinds, blunders, capricious favoritism and prejudice, jealousy and vindictiveness, passion so hasty and unreasonable as to be corrected by one of his own creatures, falsehood uttered on one occasion by his own mouth, and on another enjoined upon one of his ministering spirits, gross injustice in often punishing the innocent for the fault of the guilty, enormous cruelty in the punishments allotted to various offences in ordinary times, and in the injunctions to invade Palestine and exterminate its inhabitants, and finally the establishment of a system of cruelty beyond the power of the worst human tyrant to emulate,—the keeping of a proportion of men and women permanently alive for the purpose of permanently tormenting them. One who truly and intelligently reverences God would find it harder to believe such things of him than even to accept that other childish notion in the Old Testament, that God demanded daily to be served with roasted meat and freshly baked bread, and that he specially enjoyed the odor of them. But when we notice that these unworthy representations are claimed as divinely inspired truth because they are found in the Bible, and when our clerical leaders demand that we receive these equally and at the same time with those other passages which represent God as wise, good, great, truthful, just, and loving, it seems time for the pews to make protest against the pulpit, and to demand religious teaching which, at least, shall not confute itself by self contradiction.

The Orthodox creed assumes the apostles to have been divinely authorized and infallibly guided to declare the will of God, and thus to lay down rules obligatory upon Christians. But while insisting on this statement in a general way, and also in detail where duties which the church deems important are concerned, the whole body of Orthodox clergy take the liberty to ignore and disregard some of the most imperative of the apostolic injunctions. I will mention two cases of this sort.

In the Epistle of James, it is written: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick."

Here is an apostolic prescription for medical treatment, and an apostolic promise that that treatment shall effect a cure, unless indeed the "elders of the church" prove to be destitute of faith. Yet the clergy are so unmindful of this divine injunction and promise, and so regardless of the censure, in another part of their inspired book, of a royal personage who, when he was sick, "sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians," that they neither follow this Scriptural rule themselves, nor recommend to their parishioners to follow it. They even let members of their congregations die, without commending to their notice the means of certain cure enjoined upon Christians by an inspired apostle. Their practice contradicts their profession, yet they still make the pretence of believing what their lives show that they do not believe. My point is that this double-facedness must work harm both to preachers and people, in both mind and conscience.

In the Book of Acts, it is written that "the apostles and elders came together" expressly to consider whether any of the Mosaic laws were binding upon Gentile converts, and, if any, what ones? The point was considered, and decided; and the inspired apostles claimed that the Holy Ghost also sanctioned their decision; which was that, among the things "necessary" to be observed, both by Jewish and Gentile Christians, was abstinence "from things strangled and from blood." The Jews carry out this rule by having the animals which they use for food killed in such a manner as to fulfil the injunction. The Christian ministers, strange to say, utterly disregard a rule which, if their theory of inspiration is true, was declared binding upon them both by the apostles and the Holy Ghost. My point is that this utter contradiction between their creed and their life must work such evil effects as other insincerity works.

2. How comes Sunday, the first day of the week, to be called "God's day"?

Those who use and uphold this phraseology refer as authority to an injunction of Moses, that the Jews should observe Saturday as a Sabbath by abstaining from bodily labor, and claim that this same injunction binds Christians to observe Sunday as a Sabbath by attending public worship. When pressed with the absurdity of assuming that a command to a people of one religion to observe a certain day in a certain manner can possibly, by the same words, require a people of different religion to observe a different day in a different manner, they say that "the day has been changed." Yet the Bible, their pretended "perfect rule of faith and conduct," not only gives no injunction or recommendation of such a change, but gives abundant evidence that neither Jesus nor the apostles ever authorized it, or ever contemplated the establishment of a Christian Sabbath. The Sunday Sabbath is an institution made out of whole cloth by Presbyterian sectarians, not only without warrant from Scripture, but in direct opposition to the doctrines of Jesus and Paul, and also to the decision of the entire apostolic body, recorded in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. My ground is that those who continue, from year to year, to repeat the complicated series of untruths involved in the claim that the Sunday Sabbath of their church is a Scriptural institution, must suffer mental and moral deterioration, and will tend to be less scrupulous of observing a truthful habit in other matters.

3. Why do people who claim to be Christians call their house of worship "God's house," and as such represent periodical attendance there as a Christian duty?

The Jews regarded their temple on Mt. Zion as the house of God, because their traditions and their Scriptures taught that God "dwelt" there. But this point was one of many in which Jesus set himself in direct opposition both to tradition and Scripture. As clearly as he taught anything, he taught that God inhabited no special place; and that neither any edifice nor any particular location was needed for acceptable worship to him. To represent a particular building as the house of God, and to require attendance there as a duty enjoined by the Christian Scriptures, is to assert untruths, and to involve the necessary ill consequences of voluntary false statement.

4. Among the avocations selected by young men as means of support for themselves and their families are those which are called "learned professions," apparently because they require book-learning in larger proportion than other bread-earning occupations. By what right do the members of one of these three professions call themselves "God's ambassadors"?

In the early days of New England Puritanism, when the advocate of any views deemed heterodox came to a town or village, with the intention of holding forth in such school-house or barn as he might be able to obtain, it is said that the parson of the parish would take his cocked hat and his gold-headed cane, and pass down the village street, going into every house, and return on the other side, going into every house; and the result was that none of the respectabilities attended the meeting. If the village lawyer or doctor had given similar counsel, men would have formed their own judgments and taken their own course in the matter. But, when the clergyman spoke, they obeyed him, because he claimed to be, and was believed to be, God's ambassador for the authoritative settlement of such affairs. On what authority did he make such a claim? And on what authority do Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, and Episcopal ministers now make it? Many of these are in direct and intense hostility to each other, each claiming that sundry of the doctrines taught by the other are false and pernicious. If God really commissions them all, he is a house divided against itself.

The fact is, there is not a particle of authority for such a claim on the part of any of them; the rather, as not one of them preaches in accordance with the teachings of Jesus, whom he calls his master. And the habit of making this unfounded claim, as if it were not only true, but unquestionable, must be prejudicial to the consciences, the reasoning faculties, and the morals of those who make it.

5. Jesus and Paul taught, as various Hebrew and various ethnic writers had previously done, that God is the father of the whole human race; and the beautiful and beneficent doctrine of the brotherhood of the whole human race is a direct and inevitable corollary from the assumption that God is the universal Father. But our clergy assume, and repeat as confidently as if it were true, that, besides these children by creation, God has one "begotten" son, one son begotten by his own connection with a Jewish woman.

Some coarse minded critics have attempted to place this piece of Christian mythology on the same footing with the amours of Jupiter and Mars in the Greek and Roman mythology. But there is a material difference. Sensuality was the incitement in the numerous cases of the latter class which classic writers have reported. The begetting in the single case attributed to the Christian deity was done for the accomplishment of a "plan," commonly called "a plan of salvation."

It may be mentioned in passing that, as this "plan of salvation" is assumed in the Orthodox creed to be supplementary to a previous and more extensive plan of damnation, arranged by the same deity, whose horrors the second "plan" was expected only partially to remedy, the presentation of this whole scheme, as divinely instituted, does not tend to the honor and glory of God; for which reason, and for its intrinsic improbability, it might well be dropped from the programme of the teacher of religion, apart from the conflict of testimony in regard to it.

It is of a conflict of evidence in regard to the paternity of Jesus that I now wish to speak. In the same Gospels which declare Jesus to have been God-begotten (both of them expressly affirming that neither Joseph nor any other man was his father), Jesus is represented as habitually calling himself "the Son of Man"; and Luke (divinely and infallibly inspired, according to the Orthodox creed) not only calls Joseph and Mary the "parents" of Jesus, but makes Mary herself call Joseph his "father." I say that the habit of accepting statements thus mutually and irreconcilably contradictory as both true, and accepting as divinely and infallibly inspired the narrative containing them, must tend to confuse the mental faculties, pervert the moral sense, and form the habit of tolerating misrepresentation and disregard of truth in other cases.

Possibly, the habit, so general among Christian missionaries, of contrasting heathen and Christian scriptures by setting the best passages in the latter against the poorest ones in the former, and contrasting heathen and Christian social customs by setting high-water mark of the latter against low-water mark of the former, was made to seem appropriate and satisfactory to those missionaries by the training they received in their theological schools, by the commentaries they read, and the lectures on Biblical criticism they heard. Possibly, the custom of Joseph Cook to misrepresent an opponent of his theology before he answers him, as the indispensable foundation for a plausible answer, may be only natural evolution, the mental habit formed by his system of pretending perfect congruity of hell with divine love, and of vicarious atonement with divine justice. Possibly, the grocer who insisted on knowing whether his boy had watered the rum, and sanded the brown sugar, and wetted the tobacco, before he called him to come up to prayers, may have learned toleration of untruthfulness by what he had been accustomed to hear from his minister in the pulpit and from his "brethren" in the church-meeting; and he may have persuaded himself that, if false pretences were allowable in matters theological, they might also be permitted in the practical affairs of life.

The custom, in the pulpit, of treating statements diverse to the extent of mutual opposition as if both might be believed, and, where both are found in the Bible, as if both must be believed, is likely to have a long continuance, since it has its roots in the Orthodox creed, which resembles, in one particular, the law of the Medes and Persians, mentioned in the Book of Daniel. A few of the clergy are spontaneously getting out of that habit, through a favorable combination of mental and moral culture; but the great majority in that profession seem likely to move in the old established grooves, as long as a majority of their hearers consent to hear religion and theology treated in that fashion. When the pews unite to demand truthfulness as an ingredient of piety, the pulpit will apply itself to the supply of that demand; but the latter event will hardly take place before the former.

GEORGE ELIOT AS A GODLESS WRITER.

She is the first great godless writer of fiction that has appeared in England; perhaps, in the sense in which we use the expression, the first that has appeared in Europe. To say this may sound a paradox or an insult; but it is neither. And this will appear presently, when we have explained the meaning which we attach to the obnoxious word godless.

We must remember that generally, up to the present time, human conduct was, among serious people, supposed to bear reference, before all things, to some power above ourselves, and of a different nature, to whom our souls belonged, and for whose sake we were bound to keep them pure. And this conception has so penetrated our modern civilization that it has been imprinted in the entire lives and thoughts of numbers who not only never thought of affirming it, but who even posed as deniers of the belief upon which it rested. Shakespeare, for instance, may or may not have been a religious man; he may or may not have been a Catholic or a Protestant. But, whatever his personal views or feelings may have been, the light by which he viewed life was the light of Christianity. But now, among the vast changes that human thought has been undergoing, the sun that we once all walked by has, for many eyes, become extinguished; and every energy has been bent upon supplying man with a substitute, which shall have, if possible, an equal illuminating power, and, at any rate, the same power of moral actinism. This substitute at present is, it is true, somewhat nebulous; but the substance it is composed of is already sufficiently plain. The new object of our duty is not our Father which is in heaven, but our brothers and our children who are on earth. It is to these alone, according to the new gospel, that our piety is due; it is, indeed, to these that all true piety has, in all ages, been ignorantly paid. It is needless to dwell upon this conception longer. Whether we think it sound or hollow, its general character is familiar enough to all of us; and we know that a growing number of men and women around us are adopting it. But it is one thing to adopt a belief in theory, another thing to put it in practice; and, again, another thing to receive it, as it were in solution, into our daily thoughts and feelings, so that we not only act and think by it, but also instinctively judge and feel by it. This third stage is the one that is reached latest, and we doubt whether as yet any considerable body of men and women have attained to it. The nearest approach to it, so far as we know, is to be found in the novels of George Eliot, only there even it is not reached perfectly; for the moral standard of the novelist and the rational justification of her own judgments and sympathies are not present to her mind instinctively and as matters of course; but they are forever being consciously emphasized by herself, and forever being pointed out, more or less directly, to the reader. At any rate, in the world of earnest art, she is the first legitimate fruit of our modern atheistic pietism; and, as such, she is an object of extreme interest, if not to artistic epicures, at any rate to all anxious inquirers into human destiny. For, in her writings, we have some sort of presentation of a world of high endeavor, pure morality, and strong enthusiasm, existing and in full work, without any reference to or help from the thought of God. Godless, in its literal sense and divested of all vindictive meaning, exactly describes her writings. They are without God, not against him. They do not deny, but they silently and skilfully ignore him. We have the same old liturgies of human faith and action, only they are intercepted and appropriated by a new object, when they seemed to be on their way to the old. The glory and the devotion that were once given to God are transferred silently to men.

The way in which this feat is performed is very remarkable; for the characters she presents us with are suffered rarely, if ever, to hold opinions that are, consciously to themselves, at all akin to the author's. On the contrary, they are most of them Christian people, with the love of God and fear of hell presumably before their eyes. But, in all their more vital struggles after God, the supernatural element in their beliefs is represented as having no effect on them. It is treated as a husk or shell, concealing, or perhaps sheltering, something more precious than itself; or, at best, conveying a truth in metaphor through the channel of a sacramental lie. Mr. Tryan, in Jane's Repentance, and Savonarola in Romola, are both of them marked instances of this; and the author's dealing with these characters is exceedingly skilful. Mr. Tryan is a clergyman, passionately devoted to his sacred calling, an ardent disciple of a special school of divinity, and eaten up with the sincerest zeal for souls. And yet the writer contrives to exhibit all that she wishes us to admire in him as resting on a basis with which his religious beliefs have nothing at all to do. In her portrait of Savonarola, this treatment is yet more distinguishable and yet more significant. His chief connection with the story in which she introduces him is his conversion of the heroine from the neo-paganism of the Renaissance to the precepts of Christ, and to a humble acceptance of sorrow. But in all his exhortations to her, and they are some of them singularly beautiful, there is hardly one appeal to Christianity on its supernatural side. Savonarola is the spokesman of humanity made divine, not of Deity made human. In so far as he is not this, but the reverse of this, there, according to George Eliot, lies his weakness and not his strength. The "higher life," the withdrawal from man for the sake of communion with God, is for her a diseased weakness, if not a wickedness. The Christ of the Christian Church says, "If a man love father and mother more than me, he is not worthy of me." The Christ of George Eliot says the exact opposite, "A man is not worthy of me unless he love me less than father or mother." With her, as she says often and explicitly, the "transcendent morality" is to share willingly in the "common lot," and not seek escape from ties "after those ties have ceased to be pleasant." She urges with a solemn eloquence, she seems to see in a solemn ecstasy, that a man's highest life is to be found in sorrow, borne for the sake of others; and that all seeming miseries may be turned to blessings, by making an offering of them to something beyond ourselves. But an offering to what? To some impersonal cause, some force of human progress. "Make your marriage-sorrows," says Savonarola to Romola, "an offering, too, my daughter,—an offering to the great work by which sin and sorrow are to be made to cease." This is the one teaching of all her novels: that it asserts those human hopes and loves and enthusiasms which Christianity has developed for us, and bequeathed to us, to be in reality complete in themselves, and clogged and weighted only, not supported by, what were once supposed to be their divine foundations.

This fact, as we have said before, is probably little suspected by the majority of George Eliot's readers. These carry with them the lamp of their own religion into that tender but gloomy world into which the author leads them, and do not perceive what the only light is with which it would be else provided. They have themselves supplied what is wanting before they have felt the want. And they have imagined that the beliefs which they do not find dwelt upon have been presupposed as true, instead of being studiously ignored as false. But, if we would really see George Eliot in all her full significance, we must not close our eyes thus. If we do, we shall not only miss the one thing which she has renounced much to teach us, but we shall miss something that is of an importance far more general. We shall miss the first concrete examples of the workings of the new religion of humanity, and the only means as yet offered us by which to test the result of it, as seen or anticipated by one of its own apostles. Further, if we look at her in this way and with this intention, her work, which seems so chaotic when judged by any mere artistic tests, becomes congruous and intelligible. It is not so much a series of novels, interspersed with philosophical reflections: it is a gradual setting forth of a philosophy and religion of life, illustrated by a continuous succession of diagrams. That this is the true view of the matter has been getting more and more evident as the career of the author has proceeded. How far this line of development has been conscious and intentional with herself, it is not ours to inquire. But, consciously or unconsciously, the main stream of her powers has drifted into the philosophic channel, and has left her artistic powers as mere auxiliary to those, although, from the very nature of the case, closely connected with them. It is, therefore, by her philosophy that she has the strongest claim to be judged.—Edinburgh Review.

INTERVIEWING THACKERAY.

English authors, Thackeray not excepted, long continued to treat publishers as enemies to be harried or servants to be made use of. In Boston, when a gentleman called on Thackeray at the Tremont House, in behalf of a publishing house, the great author did not rise from his reclining position on the sofa, but called his secretary or servant (the man apparently performing the functions of both), and, silently pointing the intruder to a chair, awaited the delivery of his message. It was a severe ordeal for the publisher's agent; for he worshipped Thackeray, and would almost have stooped to kiss the hem of his dressing-gown. But there the great man lay, rolling his cold and insolent eyes upon the unknown admirer, who, meanwhile, was so paralyzed by the exceeding hauteur of the author's manner as not to be able to stammer out a sentence. This is not an on dit.

The truth is, we Americans cannot realize the distinctions of rank, nor understand why one educated and refined man is not upon a social equality with another. But a great author in England aspires to be a gentleman, with all the rigorous distinctions which that word implies; while here he is amenable to the more democratic rules of etiquette. Scott, Moore, Byron, Dickens, and Thackeray, and all authors of similar rank, like Tennyson and others to-day, were thoroughly aristocratic in feeling and admitted no sort of equality, to say nothing of familiarity, on the part of men who were engaged in trade. Booksellers were their servants, born to look up to them; and they were to be content with the merest nod of recognition.

My previous experience had made me wary and not a little anxious; and I never rang a dentist's bell with greater tremor of nerves than I felt when I knocked at Thackeray's door in the precinct of Brompton. The house was plain and unpretending, not large nor finely furnished. It was more like the habitation of a respectable tradesman. After our homely Yankee fashion, I called early—between half-past ten and eleven—and was shown into a room adorned with a few pictures and a fine bust of Washington in marble, a copy from Houdon, I think. I had ample opportunity to study all the details, for the great man was long in coming. By and by a door opened, and a huge figure appeared, whose full shock of gray hair appeared to be brushing the upper casing of the door. The figure was coming in with a stride, —a rude and angry stride, I thought,—thrusting long arms, one after the other, into the loose sleeves of a dressing-gown, as it advanced. There was a dab of lather in front of each ear, showing that, after shaving, he had been too much hurried or too forgetful to make use of a napkin. On he came, the arms waving as I have mentioned, and the fierce blue eyes glowing as much as they could behind the bulbous glasses he wore. Such a vision of wrath I have seldom seen. The attitude, the gestures, the looks, were enough to discompose a much more experienced man of the world than I was twenty-two years ago. I am afraid I stammered. I know I was horribly embarrassed, and heartily wished my errand and Thackeray himself at the devil; but, like the passenger on a stormy sea, I must, perforce, go to the appointed port. There was no retreat. When at last I conveyed to him the information that I was the bearer of a letter of introduction from Prescott, the historian, his manner softened somewhat. "Ah, yes," said he, "Prescott, my good friend, excellent man, to whom I am indebted for so much kindness and hospitality. Yes, Prescott is one of your 'top-sawyers.' I was frequently at his house, or houses I should say, and in his life and surroundings he was the ideal man of letters."

I gave him a sketch of the new enterprise, and told him that in essays, criticism, and poetry, the coterie would be strong, but that there were some fears that we could not make the department of fiction as brilliant and attractive as was desirable. I asked him to give me the benefit of his advice. By this time he had become as genial as Col. Newcome, or rather as Warrington, I should say (for Col. Newcome had no distinguishing marks, while Warrington, though a gentleman, never lets one forget that he is an author). His talk gradually became jolly and confidential. Much of it must remain unwritten, for many of the subjects of the discourse are still living. He gave a curious account of Augustus Sala: "He is a man of extraordinary ability, especially imitative ability; and he is able to imitate perfectly the style and the thought of either Dickens or myself. Why, the fellow can step into my shoes, think my thoughts, and give every sentence its characteristic quirk. If Sala should bring me an article written in my manner, I should unhesitatingly put my name to it." He spoke guardedly of Sala's escapades, and suggested that, if he were engaged and his name made prominent, it might prevent getting other authors of better reputation. He praised E. M. Whitty, author of a novel entitled Friends in Bohemia, but added that he had been indiscreet and was on the wrong side of the hedge. He thought Whitty would write some able political articles for us. "Will he be impartial?" I asked. "Yes," said

Thackeray, "as impartial as an Irishman at Donnybrook fair: he'll hit 'em a lick apiece all around." He praised his vigor and directness of style, and frequently mentioned him as a "top-sawyer." I mentioned two or three female novelists, then and now prominent, and asked him if he had read their works. "No," said he: "I fancy they're not strong beer enough. Besides, I read very few novels. I am a pastry cook. I bake tarts and sell them. I don't eat them myself. I eat bread and butter." He praised the clearness and elegance of Prescott's style as well as the thoroughness in collection of materials, but considered Mr. Quirk, his secretary (author of the History of Charles the Bold), superior in natural parts. He spoke warmly of the poetry of Holmes, and praised Lowell's Biglow Papers. "Wit of the very first order," he said, "nothing like it in our time; and I wonder that a man who can write comic poetry of the best should not occupy himself with it wholly." I may here observe that the great satirist, though frequently clever in verse, never rose to any height in poetry, and was probably incapable of appreciating what is noblest in Lowell or in other purely imaginative poets. From "Ho, pretty page with dimpled chin," to Lowell's "Cathedral," is something of a step.

By this time, the stony look had melted out of his eyes. They were as soft as sapphires in water. He went on talking about his visit to America, and the cordial reception he had everywhere met. He mentioned the names of Longfellow, Irving, Bryant, and Emerson, not only with respect, but with affection. "Your country has a great destiny," he said, "not only in material power and prosperity, but in letters. It is to be the Greater Britain, the home of the uncounted millions who will perpetuate the language and keep alive the traditions of our island." Then he turned to the copy of Houdon's bust of Washington, and spoke with such warmth of admiration as to draw tears from his own eyes.

Then I thought I saw the true man revealed, tender, sympathetic, and full of generous sentiments. This was not the cynic I had read of, and whose presence I so much dreaded to face. He went on to speak of the new Atlantic cable, and of his fervent desire that it might be a lasting bond between the two countries. He said he had subscribed £600 to the stock without much hope of return, but purely for the sake of uniting the interests of the Old World with the New. I was completely overcome by his kindness and by his enthusiastic regard for our dear old Boston, and left him as elated as a favored courtier just from an audience with Louis Quatorze in the Salle de Glace.—F. H. Underwood.

COLLEGE PRECEPTORS NEGLECTING A DUTY.

The Orthodox members of the Faculty at Yale College are much opposed to the use of Herbert Spencer's works as text-books in that institution. They regard his theories as false, and their influence as tending to infidelity; but, at the same time, they acknowledge that he reasons with so great force and plausibility that it is not safe to let young men incur the danger of being corrupted by him.

Similar views, according to a report lately published in the Herald, are entertained by the heads of the two principal colleges in this city. The Rev. Dr. Crosby, Chancellor of the New York University, has declared that, rather than introduce Spencer's books into the University, he would resign his Chancellorship; and he compares their author to the devil, in respect of his power of mind and ability as a writer. President Barnard of Columbia College takes a like position, and supports it by citing a fact from his own experience:—

"A friend of mine who has for many years held consistently, firmly, and with the simplicity of conscientious conviction, the great doctrine of the immortality of the soul, has had his faith in that doctrine so completely shaken by the perusal of Spencer's books, and works of a similar character, that he is the most miserable of men, and is at present quite unable to get back again to that simple faith which gave him such spiritual repose."

And, with Dr. Crosby and the Orthodox Yale Professors, he is unwilling to expose the minds under his care to this injury.

We give entire credit to these respectable gentlemen for honesty of conviction and of purpose. They mean, doubtless, what they say, and really believe Spencer's writings to be hostile to the preservation of religious faith. But we cannot concede to them the possession of the courage which befits their office of guardians and instructors. They seem rather to prefer their ease and comfort to the fulfilment of a troublesome duty. Can it be that, so long as the students in their colleges do not become infidels while they remain there, these divines and teachers are indifferent to their subsequent fate?

Excluding Spencer's works from the college precincts does not blot them out of existence, nor prevent the opinions they teach from circulating in the world. The most it can effect is to keep the student in ignorance of their contents until he has left the shelter of the college walls. Then he will encounter, without warning and without preparation, sophisms which, Dr. Barnard says, could not be withstood by a faith held for many years consistently, firmly, and with the simplicity of conscientious conviction. The wolf is prowling about the door and preying upon the full-grown sheep; but the tender lambs are none the less to be sent forth unarmed and unprotected!

A further mischief is likely to result from this shirking of duty. The refusal of these college instructors to meet Spencer's infidelity, and grapple with it, will be regarded by the world rather as a confession of incapacity than as a proof of wisdom.

Weak and immature as the minds of college students may be, there are thousands of men and women just as weak or just as immature as they are, but who, besides, are destitute of the intellectual skill imparted by college training. Arguments which are not refuted to the satisfaction of scholarly minds, however youthful, may well be regarded, by persons still less competent to deal with them, as unanswerable. Not merely the honor of a few college officials, therefore, but the safety of the whole fabric of religious doctrine, is involved in the matter; while the position taken in the three colleges we have mentioned is well calculated to alarm both laity and clergy. When men of the learning and ability of President Porter, Dr. Crosby, and Dr. Barnard, publicly declare that they know not how to deal with Spencer so as to satisfy their pupils, they thereby proclaim themselves to be either timid, indolent, or incompetent defenders of the truths they profess to maintain.—Sun.

NAPOLEON ON SUNDAY LAWS.

In the year 1807, an attempt was made to get the Imperial Government to insist upon an observance of Sunday, and this called forth the following reply from Napoleon I. He said:—

"It is contrary to divine law to hinder a man who has wants on Sunday as well as on other days to work on Sunday in order to gain his bread. The government cannot impose such a law without giving bread gratis to those who have none. Beside, it is not the failing of people in France to work too much. . . . We have seen the public force employed in constraining persons to celebrate the tenth day and to work on Sunday (during the Revolution when weeks were abolished), and we should guard against the necessity of employing gens d'armes to hinder men who stand in need of what they earn from working on Sunday. In both cases there is either political or religious superstition. God has made work a necessity; and he wishes men to work every day, because he has given them wants which are renewed every day. We must distinguish in what is prescribed by the clergy between the really religious laws and those obligations which have been invented with the view of extending the authority of the ministers of religion. . . . The observances of fasting upon Friday and of repose on Sunday are secondary and very insignificant rules. What touches essentially the commands of the Church is not to interfere with social order, not to do ill to one's neighbor, not to make an abuse of liberty. You must not reason with, but laugh at, priests who demand such regulations. I do not oblige them to give absolution against their will; and I shall not permit them to force me to throw the peasant who works, on no matter what day, into prison. Since my authority is invoked in this matter, I give to my people, and forever, the right of not interrupting their work. The more they work, the less vice will there be. If I must take part in this affair, I should prefer to order that on Sunday, directly after mass, all the shops be opened and the people return to their work. . . . Since people eat every day, let them work every day. . . . The compulsory powers of the Church lie in exhortations from the pulpit, and the police and prisons should never be used as a means to enforce the practices of religion."

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

EX-STATE ASSESSOR BRIGGS MAKES REPLY TO BISHOP DOANE.

I have no time to discuss now the question of the taxation of churches for State purposes, because I believe it right in principle, and because the churches can well afford to pay the taxes; as the State tax on each church member in this State, according to the value of church property in 1875, is only twenty-eight cents. For each member of a Baptist church, the State tax is twenty-five cents. This State tax need not frighten my good friend, the Rev. Dr. Edward Bright, editor of the Examiner and Chronicle. Neither should a State tax of ninety cents, for each member of the Episcopal Church in this State, cause any uneasiness in the mind of the distinguished bishop of this diocese, who has sent out a circular calling upon the clergy and laymen to petition against the taxation of churches. I presume there is not a Baptist or Episcopal church in this state whose male members do not pay from $5 to $100 a year for cigars, for the indulgence of what they regard as a luxury, and what many regard as a nuisance.

But the principle is here: "Exemption from taxation is a violation of public faith in all cases where a direct appropriation would not be equally proper and just."

I would ask Bishop Doane if he is willing to petition the legislature of the State of New York to appropriate to the Episcopal churches, directly, from the treasury of the people, the sum of $67,104.32 a year, the amount of State tax for 1879 upon the church property of his own denomination?

Will Rev. Dr. Bright petition the legislature to pay the Baptist churches in this State the amount of State tax upon the value of the church property of his denomination, the sum of $25,824.76, or to pay all the religious societies of the State, some $340,000 a year?

I doubt if either one of these reverend teachers would sign a petition for such a purpose, or if either one of their members would sign such a petition.

I do not think a State tax upon all the churches in this State is a step backward in civilization or in the progress of this most remarkable century.

I remember when "agitators and fanatics" (and I was one of them) advocated the abolition of imprisonment for debt, that the people said, "The poor man would not be able to pay for food and clothing for his family," etc. What has been the result of the repeal of that law of a dark and bigoted age?

Within my recollection, the Baptist has protested even to imprisonment against direct taxation for the support of religion, but has winked at indirect taxation for the same purpose.

The church property is protected by the State, and if it is destroyed by a mob the people must walk up to the tax collectors and pay for the property destroyed. Let protection and taxation go hand in hand together. JAMES A. BRIGGS.

—Evening Times, March 31.

Exemption of Church Property.

A good motto: "No dead-heads on the tax-lists." Exemption of church property is but a lingering relic of middle age barbarism.

The exemption of church property from taxation is the indirect support of a State church.

All property taken from the tax book by the church creates an additional burden for every taxpayer.

The Catholic Church owned one-half of the landed property of England in the fourteenth century, two-fifths of that of France in the last one.

The continued increase of untaxed church property is certain to produce the legitimate results,—pauperism, bankruptcy, revolution, and confiscation.

In exempting ecclesiastical property from taxation, all other property must be over-taxed, thus committing a legal robbery in the name of religion.

There has been much said lately about lessening the burdens of the working classes. A good way to commence is by the equitable taxation of all property.

A commission appointed to revise the taxes in the Papal or Roman States found that the Church held six-tenths of all the landed property; princely families, three-tenths; and the people, one-tenth. The property of the Church and princes was exempt; therefore one-tenth paid all the taxes. Let Americans beware of this inevitable result of privileged exemption.—Liberal Bulletin.

A YOUNG RADICAL ON LITERATURE.

"Until Caldecott's charming illustrations of it made me laugh so much," said a young lady to me the other day, "I confess—though I know it's very stupid of me—I never saw much fun in 'John Gilpin.'" She evidently expected a reproof, and when I whispered in her ear, "Nor I," her lovely features assumed a look of positive enfranchisement. "But am I right?" she inquired. "You are certainly right, my dear young lady," said I, "not to pretend admiration where you don't feel it. As to liking 'John Gilpin,' that is a matter of taste. It has, of course, simplicity to recommend it; but in my own case, though I'm fond of fun, it has never evoked a smile. It has always seemed to me like one of Mr. Joe Miller's stories put into tedious verse." I really almost thought (and hoped) that that young lady would have kissed me. "Papa always says it is a free country," she exclaimed, "but I never felt it to be the case before this moment." For years, this beautiful and accomplished creature had locked this awful secret in her innocent breast,—that she didn't see much fun in "John Gilpin." "You have given me courage," she said, "to confess something else. Mr. Caldecott has just been illustrating in the same charming manner Goldsmith's 'Elegy on a Mad Dog,' and—I'm very sorry—but I never laughed at that before, either. I have pretended to laugh, you know," she added hastily and apologetically, "hundreds of times." "I don't doubt it," I replied: "this is not such a free country as your father supposes." "But am I right?" "I say nothing about 'right,'" I answered, "except that everybody has a right to his own opinion. For my part, however, I think the 'Mad Dog' better than 'John Gilpin' only because it is shorter." Whether I was wrong or right in the matter is of no consequence, even to myself. The affection and gratitude of that young creature would more than repay me for a much greater mistake, if mistake it is. She protests that I have emancipated her from slavery. She has since talked to me about all sorts of authors, from Sir Philip Sidney to Washington Irving, in a way that would make some people's blood run cold; but it has no such effect upon me,—quite the reverse. Of Irving, she naively remarks that his strokes of humor seem to her to owe much of their success to the rarity of their occurrence; the flashes of fun are spread over pages of dullness, which enhance them, just as a dark night is propitious to fireworks, or the atmosphere of the House of Commons or a court of law to a joke. She is often in error, no doubt; but how bright and wholesome such talk is, as compared with the platitudes and commonplaces which one hears on all sides in connection with literature!—Nineteenth Century (James Payn).

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 17.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

W. H. Spencer, $20; Jno. S. McCool, $2; Wm. A. Abbot, $3.20; P. F. Slane, $3; George Iles, $5.50; F. Goodfellow, $5; Miss M. Goddard, $3.20; Enoch Plummer, $3.20; W. T. Newton, $3.20; A. M. Lathrop, $3; Chas. F. Tenney, $3.20; Theo. F. Williams, $10; S. C. Mason, $6.40; George Lewis, $1.80; J. T. Brady, $3.20; Dr. O. K. Griffith, $13; E. W. Hithings, $3.20; E. B. Welch, $5; John G. Webb, $3.20; Dr. J. M. Macomber, $1.50; Albert A. Levi, $5; Elsie Burdick, $3; W. H. Saxton, $6.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 22, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street. J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

Francis Ellingwood Abbot, Editor.
William J. Potter, William H. Spencer, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, George Jacob Holyoake (England), David H. Clark, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, J. L. Stoddard, C. D. B. Mills, W. D. Le Sueur, Benj. F. Underwood, Albert Warren Kelsey, James E. Oliver, Mrs. Sara A. Underwood, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FRES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged April 15.....	$2,081.00
A. E. KARELSON, " " " " " "	1.00
I. TAUSIG, " " " " " "	1.00
Dr. FRIEDENBURG, " " " " " "	2.00
CHAS. PARTIDGE, " " " " " "	1.00
WM. KILIAN, " " " " " "	1.00
THEODORE KILIAN, " " " " " "	1.00
P. W. MOELER, " " " " " "	1.00
HENRY OBERMEYER, " " " " " "	1.00
S. F. BARSTER, " " " " " "	1.00
Col. C. B. HACKLEY, " " " " " "	4.00
Dr. J. W. LYON, " " " " " "	1.00
Prof. A. WERNER, " " " " " "	5.00
ADOLPH PESTER, " " " " " "	1.00
EMANUEL EISING, " " " " " "	1.00
MAX REIF, " " " " " "	1.00
JOHN FLOYD, " " " " " "	1.00
M. MAHN, " " " " " "	1.00
EMIL L. BOAS, " " " " " "	5.00
E. H. MACHIN, " " " " " "	1.00
Mrs. E. H. MACHIN, " " " " " "	1.00
Dr. E. HOBER, " " " " " "	1.00
V. H. SEAMAN, " " " " " "	1.00
SIGMOND GOGGE, " " " " " "	1.00
Total.....	$2,115.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

"THE LIGHT OF ASIA."

This bewitching epic poem of Edwin Arnold narrates the story of the "Great Renunciation" of Prince Siddārtha or the "Lord Buddha," according to which the heir of an Indian king fled from all the pomp and pleasure of his regal station, abandoned his lovely wife Yasōdhara and their Golden Home, made himself a beggar, and devoted himself to a life-long apostleship of truth, pity, and love, in order to redeem a wretched world from its misery and make known to mankind the way to peace and joy. Told in the language of an ardent and reverent believer in the religion of Buddha, the tale is adorned with all the gorgeous imagery of an Oriental fancy, and breathes throughout such a spirit of tender commiseration for the woes of the "sad earth" as at once to captivate the imagination and move the soul of the reader. It is a plaintively beautiful presentment of the most widely diffused and (save Brahmanism and Judaism) the most ancient of all the great world-faiths, which still remains the ideal inspiration, consolation, and guide of a third part of the vast human family. Not a dry analysis of abstract doctrines, but a synthetic embodiment of them in an exquisitely sweet character, moving and acting in a world of toiling and suffering human beings,—yet taking advantage of the privilege of poetry to interweave with concrete facts the wonder-working element of free imagination,—the Light of Asia clothes the religious philosophy of Buddhism in all the power and glory of art, and appeals to the heart no less than to the head. Take, for instance, this passage in the First Book, which illustrates a feature of Buddhism peculiar to itself, its gentle and sympathetic tenderness for the animal creation:—

— And ever with the years

Waxed this compassionateness of our Lord,
Even as a great tree grows from two soft leaves
To spread its shade afar; but hardly yet
Knew the young child of sorrow, pain, or tears,
Save as strange names for things not felt by kings,
Nor ever to be felt. But it befell
In the Royal garden on a day of spring,
A flock of wild swans passed, voyaging north
To their nest-places on Himāla's breast.
Calling in love-notes down their snowy line,
The bright birds flew, by fond love piloted;
And Devadatta, cousin of the Prince,
Pointed his bow, and loosed a wilful shaft,
Which found the wide wing of the foremost swan
Broad-spread to glide upon the free blue road,
So that it fell, the bitter arrow fixed,
Bright scarlet blood-gouts staining the pure plumes.
Which seeing, Prince Siddārtha took the bird
Tenderly up, rested it in his lap—
Sitting with knees crossed, as Lord Buddha sits—
And, soothing with a touch the wild thing's fright,
Caressed it into peace with light kind palms,
As soft as plaitain leaves an hour unrolled;
And while the left hand held, the right hand drew
The cruel steel forth from the wound and laid
Cool leaves and healing honey on the smart.
Yet all so little knew the boy of pain
That curiously into his wrist he pressed
The arrow's barb, and winced to feel it sting,
And turned with tears to soothe the bird again.
Then some one came who said, "My Prince hath shot
A swan, which fell among the roses here;
He bids me pray you send it. Will you send?"
"Nay," quoth Siddārtha, "if the bird were dead,
To send it to the slayer might be well,
But the swan lives; my cousin hath but killed
The godlike speed which throbbed in this white wing."
And Devadatta answered, "The wild thing,
Living or dead, is his who fetched it down;
'Twas no man's in the clouds, but fallen 'tis mine.
Give me my prize, fair cousin." Then our Lord
Laid the swan's neck beside his own smooth cheek,
And gravely spake, "Say no! The bird is mine,
The first of myriad things which shall be mine
By right of mercy and love's lordliness.
For now I know, by what within me stirs,
That I shall teach compassion unto men,
And be a speechless world's interpreter,
Abating this accursed flood of woe,
Not man's alone."

Such is the guise in which a true poet has now presented Buddhism to the curious gaze of multitudes, who would never take the pains to read the dry treatises in which its theological (or rather atheological) system is laid before the learned world. Heralded as the Light of Asia has been by the universal praises of Christian critics, who seem scarcely aware of the revolutionizing thoughts it must ultimately suggest even to common minds, this book is the deadliest blow ever struck at the sole supremacy of the Christian religion. Jesus the Christ can no longer appear the only one who, yearning unspeakably over a lost world, stooped from a lofty station, and made himself of no reputation, and sacrificed his own glory, in order to redeem a perishing race from sin and misery. In point of essential motive and essential mission, no less than in point of spiritual purity and power, the "Lord Buddha" of the Light of Asia and the "Lord Jesus Christ" of the New Testament stand upon a level of entire equality. There are no less miracles in one narrative than in the other; but in both cases they only make concessions to the wonder-loving element of human nature without affecting the delineation of the substantial characters of the two heroes. The claims made for the Buddha are every whit as lofty and as unconditional as those made for the Christ; and the claims are submissively acquiesced in by a much larger body of believers in the former case than in the latter. Under these circumstances, even dull brains will put the question—what really constitutes the superiority of Christianity over Buddhism?

Of course Christians will answer at first that the claims of the Christ are true, while the claims of the Buddha are all delusion. But this answer will not satisfy even Christians long. It begs the question. The Buddhists make precisely the same answer, simply reversing it by saying that Buddhism is the truth and Christianity the delusion. Who is to decide between them? Even the average Christian is intelligent enough to see that mere assertion, mere faith, will settle nothing in the great issue inevitably raised in his consciousness by a perusal of the Light of Asia. It will not even satisfy himself. The necessity of some common appeal, higher than both Buddhism and Christianity, and competent to act as a tribunal of adjudication between their conflicting claims, must and will dawn at last upon the common mind.

The perception of that inexorable necessity will be the dawning of a new perception of the SUPERIORITY OF REASON TO BOTH RELIGIONS. Buddhism and Christianity must plead their respective cases before the bar of the human intellect; but their appearance before a tribunal of adjudication is itself confession of the superior authority of the judge that is to decide between them, and a practical surrender of both their exclusive claims. Christianity, thus tried, may or may not succeed in proving itself a little better than Buddhism on the whole; but such a victory will turn out to be the most damaging and crushing defeat it has ever yet encountered. When the smoke of the battle clears away, Christianity will see its own uniqueness, its own supremacy as the sole revelation of Divine truth to the world, dissipated and destroyed forever. Truth and error will be shown to exist in varying proportions in each system of faith, when Reason sits as judge; and Christianity will cease to be the perfect and final revelation of religious truth, even in the estimation of its own nominal followers, when once the possibility of error in it is forced upon their minds.

It is this tendency to introduce into the popular mind (unconscious as yet that Christianity has a real competitor or Jesus a formidable rival) conceptions and questions which must shake the people's Christian faith to its very foundations, that renders the sweet and pathetic poem of Edwin Arnold perhaps the most dangerous enemy to Christianity which has ever entered the field against it. Its utterly non-polemical spirit, its positive and graphic delineation of a character which may be put side by side with that of Jesus without exciting any indignant consciousness of incongruity, its rapt seriousness of tone, its moral elevation and benignity, its pictorial power and peculiarly Oriental imagery, its thorough saturation with the spirit of a religion just as merciful and compassionate and far more tolerant and intellectual than that of Jesus, all combine to throw faith off its guard, and open the door of the believer's soul for the entrance of a guest that never comes but to stay—Doubt. The devotion of four or five hundred millions of human beings, just as earnest as ourselves for truth and goodness and spiritual peace, to such a religion as Buddhism and such a teacher as Buddha, ceases to appear strange or unaccountable; it seems quite as natural as the believer's own devotion to Jesus; and he cannot refuse to heed the inwardly prompted question—"Why may not the Buddhist be just as near the truth as I am myself?"

In fact the Christian Church has more reason to fear Edwin Arnold and burn him at the stake as an enemy to Christianity, than she ever had to fear or burn any man before. But to those who believe that truth, righteousness, and love are vaster than Christianity, and not to be shaken in their eternal foundations by the coming or going of any historical religion, the Light of Asia is a beautiful study of one of the greatest of the world's faiths, and, like every other "thing of beauty," to be cherished as a "joy forever."

JACOB BOEHME.

Hegel has expressly recognized the essential principle—negativity—in Böhme's scheme of philosophy, as being the precursor of his own system; and, on account of this foreshadowing of his later intuitions, places this illiterate shoemaker at the very head of modern philosophy. That the fundamental idea of Böhme's speculations is akin to that manifested in the differing systems of Spinoza, Schelling, and Hegel, has been generally admitted by the more recent students of the German transcendentalism; and so it has chanced, after nearly three centuries of obscurity and neglect, that the works of this German theosophist and mystic are coming to be regarded as possessing, in no minor or inconsiderable degree, an amount of genuine inspiration and mental illumination which entitles him to rank among the highest minds of modern minds.

Born at Altseldenberg, in the province of Upper Lusatia, near Görlitz, in 1575, he received no instruction whatever till he was ten years of age; his whole childhood up to that time having been passed in tending cattle, where his ample opportunities for contemplating the starry heavens had already produced within his naturally meditative temperament the profound conviction that his was an exceptional and inspired nature.

Devoting himself to study, in his thirty-seventh year or thereabouts, he published the results of his reflections in his first book, entitled Aurora, or the Redness of the Morning. It indicates intimate acquaintance with Scriptural writings, more especially of the apocalyptic books; but also equal familiarity with the works of the mystico-philosophic alchemists, making it evident he had disdained no source in his search for knowledge.

This first-born of Böhme's brain was incontinently condemned by the ecclesiastical authorities of Görlitz, and its author subjected to persecution on account of the heretical opinions it contained; but, far from renouncing his belief, he suffered silently the numberless attacks of the theologians, which were continued up to the day of his death, only consenting, after long-continued solicitations on the part of certain admirers among the courtiers at Dresden, to visit the court for the purpose of expounding his doctrines in person. Here he met with a warm welcome, and was assured of powerful protection, but unfortunately, shortly after his return to Görlitz, contracted an illness from which he died in his fiftieth year, twelve years after the first publication of his Aurora. It was fifty years after his death that the first collection of his writings was published, in Amsterdam. In 1730, a very complete edition of his works appeared at the same place; the next best being that of Schiebler, at Leipzig, which was commenced in 1831, and not finished until 1846. Sir Isaac Newton used to make extracts from his works, and admits the obligations he was under to him. Next to Germany, Holland and England have manifested the highest appreciation of his genius.

In 1697, a woman named Jane Leads founded the sect called "Philadelphists" for the better exposition of his writings; and the celebrated physician John Perdage ranks among his best English interpreters. The biography of Böhme was first published by Abraham von Frankenburg, who died in 1852. His revelations and meditations were directed to a reconciliation of the rationalizing instinct of humanity with the existence of a God, and a nature distinct from both Man and Deity. The subject of his contemplations was thus dual: first, God himself, apart from the visible creation; and, secondly, the creation proceeding from God.

His intellectual contemplation of the absolute as the source of all the contradictions in the world of phenomena—from which they proceed only to return again—is the groundwork of his system, as it is of those of Spinoza and Hegel; but, owing to the fantastic terminology he thought fit to adopt, his writings are condemned by many as utterly unintelligible. Thus he speaks of God as "the groundless," "the temperamentum," "the silent nothing," etc.

"All things," says Böhme, "consist of the Yes and the No. The Yes is pure power and life, the truth of God, and God himself. The No is the reply to the Yes, or to the truth, and is indispensable to the revelation of the truth. So, then, the silent nothing becomes something by entering into duality," etc.

Dividing his time between his humble avocation of the making of shoes and the indulgence of a naturally pious imagination in abstract speculation upon the essence of being and the nature of divine things,

Böhme affords another illustration of that exceptional and enthusiastic class of mankind, among whom are to be enumerated Buddha, Jesus, Mohammed, Swedenborg, and Zoroaster. Of thoroughly plebeian origin, his mental power was so great as to enroll his name among the most eminent of modern thinkers. He sought to adapt his opinions to the accepted doctrines of the theologians after a fashion of his own, even going so far as to assert, as Plato did before him, the reality of the trinity, in a divine unity, from which proceeded the creation; and this "forthcoming of the creation" is in fact the fundamental speculation of his works, which he held it to be possible to express in words, and contemplate intellectually by means of his eccentric phraseology and his personal mystic illumination. The forthcoming of the creation is thus also "an ingoing of the silent nothing,"—in other words, his peculiar doctrine of "contrariety" or "negativity," this principle of negation. Regarded as mere mysticism up to the nineteenth century by the great majority of metaphysicians, Böhme's writings have recently acquired fresh interest and importance,—in connection with the speculative philosophy of Germany, especially. That his imagination conceived most admirable ideas is now universally admitted, and the next generation is likely to repay some portion of the long-delayed debt humanity owes to "the inspired cobbler."

A. W. K.

"HE THAT SEEKETH FINDETH."

In THE INDEX of October 16, I had a short article entitled "Search the Scriptures," calling attention to Acts x., 43, which reads as follows:—

"To him [Jesus of Nazareth] give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."

The point to which I directed special attention was the habit of Orthodox preachers and writers to repeat, as confidently as if they were true, these two assertions, namely: 1. That "all the prophets" of the Hebrew Scriptures speak of Jesus of Nazareth (who was not born until centuries after their time); and 2. That these prophets declare remission of sins obtainable by belief in Jesus. The article went on to intimate that these two matters could not be found in any one of the Hebrew prophets.

A friend has sent me his copy of that number of THE INDEX in which some one, unknown to him, had noted, in the margin of my article, references to certain passages of the Old Testament. The writer, who did not give his name, seemed to think that his references proved the truth of the passage in Acts, above quoted. I was glad to receive and examine these references, because, if they showed any error in what I had written, I should wish not only to learn, but to acknowledge it.

The references made by my unknown critic are the following: Isaiah l., 6; Isaiah liii., 4, 5, 10, 11; Jeremiah xxiii., 5, 6; Jeremiah xxxi., 31-34; Jeremiah xxxiii., 14-18; Daniel ix., 24-26; Zechariah, xlii., 1; Zechariah xi., 10-13; Hosea i., 7; Joel ii., 32; Hag-gai ii., 7, 9; Ezekiel xxxiv., 20-24; Malachi iii., 1-4; Malachi iv., 2, 5, 6; Numbers xxi., 6-9.

A careful perusal of these passages will show:—

1. That not one of them speaks of remission of sins through faith in Jesus.
2. That not one of them mentions Jesus at all.
3. That the principal things there predicted of a coming Messiah were not fulfilled in Jesus, and have never been fulfilled at all.

The question then arises, How came this critic to refer to these passages as helping his position and controverting mine?

The answer is, that in Orthodox sermons, tracts, and Commentaries, and in those extremely delusive works called "Reference Bibles," these texts are treated as if the several writers of them really had the future Jesus in mind, and intended to refer to and describe him. The managers of the American Bible Society also have taken great pains to produce the impression that psalmists and prophets in the Old Testament really made mention of Jesus. In one of their Bibles which lies (in both senses) before me, nine of the fifteen places above cited are made to refer to "Christ" in the dishonest headings of chapters and pages; and the popular Psalms and Hymns of Dr. Watts have in like manner misrepresented some of those fifteen, with a great many more. My critic seems to have taken his opinion from these sources, trusting in their supposed piety and learning rather than in the testimony of his own eyes and mind.

C. K. W.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Cleveland, Ohio, April 25; at Parkersburg, W. Va., April 27, 28.

IT HAS JUST been shown that it needs heart (Hart) to win in a walking match as well as in other contests.

YUNG KWAI, a Chinese youth, has graduated second in the senior class of the High School of Springfield, Mass.

REV. AMOS THOMPSON, an aged and worthy colored preacher of Rahway, N.J., died a few days since, it is believed of starvation.

MR. P. S. GILMORE has gone to Europe. The members of his band accompanied him to the pier in New York whence he sailed, and gave him a hearty leave-taking.

REV. DR. SAMUEL OSGOOD, for many years a distinguished Unitarian divine, but for the last ten years a minister of the Episcopal Church, has just died in New York in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

DR. GOTTHEIL, of New York, showed his regard for Channing by delivering in the Temple Emanu-El in which he ministers, on a recent Saturday, a generous and appreciative tribute to the great historic New England preacher.

MME. LOUISA KOSSUTH RUSTKAY, a sister of the Hungarian patriot, now residing in Plainfield, N.J., has made a visit to Castle Garden, New York, for the purpose of learning about the many destitute Hungarian emigrants who have recently been landed there, with a view of devising means to ameliorate their condition.

REV. WILLIAM B. ORVIS has been expelled from the Philadelphia Association of Congregational Ministers, because of his connection with the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery, a "bogus" college where a newspaper reporter recently purchased a certificate to practise medicine. The dean, president, and secretary of the concern were ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

IT WAS VERY saddening to those who flocked to Chickering Hall, Sunday before last, to hear that its gifted speaker, Prof. Adler, was too ill to appear before them that day. There has been no little anxiety in regard to him this season, among those who are familiar with the excessive strain to which his energies have been subjected on account of the engrossing demands of his varied labors. It was also perceptible to his hearers for the last two Sundays that he was suffering from the effects of a heavy cold upon his lungs. The result was therefore not wholly a surprise. It is hoped that, as his course of lectures is near its close, the brief suspension of them which his physician has imposed, with the summer in Europe which he contemplates, may bring him the full recuperation and recovery of his overtasked powers.

COL. ALBERT STICKNEY, author of the True Republic, gave a very able and thoughtful lecture before the Independent Republicans of New York, a few evenings since, upon the "Aims and Principles of Independent Republicanism." Mr. Stickney maintained that the Government should be conducted on business principles; in other words, with proper economy, and by efficient persons, whose term of service should be subject to the same rules as to permanency and compensation that are deemed expedient in any well-regulated business. The existing evils in the administration of the Government were charged to the system rather than to the men who operate it. The system consists of a succession of elections. So soon as one is concluded, another is in preparation. Such a system inevitably entails corruption and the professional politician.

MR. GEORGE RIPLEY, for a long term of years the leading literary editor of the New York Tribune, though well advanced in age, is in the enjoyment of excellent health and the unimpaired vigor of his powers. He occupies very attractive apartments at the Osborne, on Fifth Avenue, New York, where his warm-hearted courtesy and genial spirit generously welcome the friendly and sympathetic visitor (particularly if a Boston one) to such hospitality as his pressing engagements permit. In a recent interview with him, with which the writer of these notes was favored, he gave expression in very strong terms to his estimate of the character and intellectual ability of the editor of THE INDEX; paying to some of his writings upon metaphysical subjects the high tribute of the remark that he thought they had never been equalled by any one in this country.

FOREIGN.

THE MADRID journal El Liberal, in an article upon the state of affairs in Morocco, declares that European intervention in that country daily becomes more necessary. In support of its view, the journal states that the Governor of Morocco has ordered the destruction of all the Jewish houses facing the mosques, and that some Jews who protested against this measure were bastinadoed. The same journal states that the French, Italian, and Portuguese plenipotentiaries at Tangiers have protested against the refusal of the Sultan of Morocco to recognize the foreign naturalization of Moorish subjects.

AS AN EXAMPLE of how, in Russia, the whip is still kept up in practice, although abolished in principle, a paragraph in the Golos, dated from Marinsk, states that the village authorities of that district beat the peasants most brutally for the slightest offence, and when a peasant who is at all personally objectionable to the Elder of the Commune falls into the latter's power he is flogged nearly to death; and, in fact, life has been taken in this way in the district referred to. For some trifling misbehavior, a peasant not long ago was actually thrashed to death in the village of Demitriofsky, in the above district.

IT APPEARS THAT in the recent English elections all means were resorted to for the defeat of the Liberal candidates, even to attacking their religious opinions. The Weekly Times says, in some pre-election comments: "Conscious of their inherent weakness, the Tories, although they have not the courage to assemble the electors in public meetings, do not scruple to resort to personal vilification; and, as any lie is good enough for an election weapon, the old story of Mr. Firth's religious views is raked up in the hope of damaging his candidature. The charge was not a novel one, as it had already done duty at the School Board election, where it ignominiously failed in its cowardly purpose. If the Chelsea Conservatives are so concerned about the Orthodoxy of the forthcoming House of Commons, they will have plenty of work on hand; but, as the law of the land imposes no religious tests nowadays, I fail to see what business it is of the Chelsea Tories to challenge Mr. Firth on that score, even if he were as great a sceptic as Lord Beaconsfield himself is commonly reported to be. Swallowing the Thirty-nine Articles is no longer a necessary preliminary to Parliamentary honors, or to any other public office."

THE BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS lately gave a supper to about one hundred and thirty costermongers and their wives at 16 Hanbury Street, Spitalfields, in connection with a Costermongers' Benefit and Loan Club of which she is the patroness. The Baroness presided over the supper, and had with her on the platform the Rev. R. C. Billing, Miss Billing, Mr. J. K. Aston, Mr. Sapsworth (Superintendent of the Club), Miss Moore, etc. The room was tastefully decorated with flowers and festoons, and the costermongers themselves presented a very respectable appearance. The dinner was admirably served, after which addresses were delivered. The Baroness, who was cordially received, alluded to the progress made by the club, and expressed the hope that it would be the germ of many similar institutions. The costermonger, she said, was a necessity of modern times, and, taken as a whole, he was a respectable and respected member of the community. Referring to the silver donkey presented to her by the costermongers some time ago, she said she had recently travelled abroad, but did not find the donkeys anywhere looking so comfortable and well kept as on the London streets. She said Mr. Irving had expressed himself much pleased with his recent visit to the club, and that he would always prize their address to him on that occasion very highly. She wished them every prosperity in the future. The Baroness afterwards shook hands with each member of the company, and retired amid loud applause. An entertainment, consisting of music and readings, was then given, after which the company separated.—Weekly Times.

THE Weekly Despatch, in a late article upon "Church and State," says: "We intend no disrespect to the cloth when we affirm that of all hard animals to drive, whether in herds or singly, the parson is the hardest. You may frame articles, canons, Acts of Parliament; you may create Courts of Arches, synods, convocations, or a Court of Final Appeal; you may place an ex-divorce judge on the seat of judgment to try ecclesiastical causes; but the more you pull the string in one direction, the more resolutely will the pig—we beg pardon, the parson—run in another. Father Mackonochie has been prosecuted and persecuted for a large portion of his natural existence; Father Tooth tried the dietary of Horsemonger-lane Gaol; Mr. Dale, of St. Vedast's, has been inhibited, but he laughs his diocesan to scorn, and told the emissary of that prelate only last Sunday to go further; while, to crown the noble edifice of indiscipline, the decision of the House of Lords, in the case of 'Julius v. Carter,' permits a bishop to shelter a refractory priest, though he may have violated the letter and spirit of the concordat between Church and State, and defied the Church Discipline Act. This chaotic condition of affairs provokes a smile, for it has its comic as well as its serious aspect; but for it to continue would be quite too preposterous. The State has other and higher functions to fulfil than that of dragging the consciences of men, and when it undertakes to drive parsons it does but stultify itself. During the past ten years, every effort has been made to stamp out Ritualism; yet that special form of æsthetic religion continues to flourish, and with all its faults has the honesty to crave the liberation of the Church, whereof it is a morbid excrescence, from the trammels of State patronage and control. It will come to that as soon as the nation has recovered from its temporary feverish attack, and has sickened fairly of the 'gunpowder and glory business,' which seems to be the mainstay at present of established religion. In the interim, perhaps it is just as well that the utter futility of the State intruding into the province of dogma should be clearly and unmistakably demonstrated; and for that reason we can hardly regret that, in a struggle between the authority of a bishop and that of the Legislature, the prelate should have gained the day. There is no stronger argument than that styled by logicians reductio ad absurdum."

SPEAKING of advertisements, their whimsicality seems to be on the increase. In a recent Cardiff paper there was the following gem: "Lost, between the Royal Hotel and 2 o'clock yesterday, a bunch of keys." But the drollest thing I can call to mind appeared recently in the Pioneer, a well-known Indian paper: "Wanted—A situation as snake-charmer in a serious family. N.B.—No objection to look after a camel."—London World.

CARDINAL NEWMAN ON LIBERALISM IN RELIGION.

Cardinal Newman's remarkable speech in Rome, in acknowledgment of the Pope's act in conferring upon him the Cardinal's hat, is curiously misunderstood into an attack on the principle of toleration, by some of our contemporaries. For some time back a discussion has been going on in the English press as to the proper word to describe Cardinal Newman's type of Roman Catholicism. Should he be called a Liberal or a Conservative? Should he rank as one who wishes to modify the system of the Roman Church in the Liberal sense, or who wishes to fortify it in the Conservative sense? Cardinal Newman answers the question by an address, in which he rehearses and repeats what he has been saying for forty years as to the principle which he, at least, has always termed "Liberalism in Religion." To that principle he is as steadfastly opposed as ever. But what is it precisely that he means by it? He means by it the teaching that religion is a matter of feeling rather than of truth; that it is a sentiment, not a revelation; that it need not rest on any positive basis of clear conviction; that it is a vague sensibility, which may be trusted to grope its way into a kind of sympathy with very many different forms of creed, without really accepting any; and that, consequently, all religious opinions should be treated as purely subjective, and so far as possible eliminated from public life and political organization. It is easy to see why this view of matters should have been named Liberalism in Religion. If accepted, it makes people of course what is called very liberal in their appreciation of all sorts of different creeds. It lavishes a great deal of sympathy everywhere, on condition of giving adhesion nowhere; and indefinitely increases the sphere of spiritual intercourse, while dissipating the unpleasantness of having to avow in any case grave disapprobation and moral recoil. It is now a great many years since Cardinal Newman, then, we believe, Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, preached a sermon on the "Religion of the Day," in which he avowed his firm conviction that "it would be a gain to this country, were it vastly more superstitious, more bigoted, more gloomy, more fierce in its religion than at present it shows itself to be. Not, of course, that I think the tempers of mind herein implied desirable, which would be an evident absurdity; but I think them eminently more desirable and more promising than a heathen obduracy and a cold, self-sufficient, self-wise tranquillity." Referring to the then uppermost phase of religion of the educated world, "full as it is of security and cheerfulness, and decorum and benevolence," "I observe," said Dr. Newman in the same sermon, "that these appearances may arise either from a great deal of religion or from the absence of it; they may be the fruits of shallowness of mind and a blinded conscience, or of that faith which has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. And if this alternative be proposed, I leave it to the common-sense of men to decide (if they could get themselves to think seriously) to which of the two the temper of the age is to be referred." That was an attack on the spirit of "Liberalism in Religion," by the Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, certainly sharper in tone than the new one delivered by Cardinal Newman to his Roman Catholic audience in Rome; and, on the whole, we should say that the spirit of the new Cardinal's latest and maturest utterance, though identical in substance with convictions held by him long before he became a Roman Catholic, is milder and more hopeful than the spirit of his words on the same subject in his earlier days. He holds now, as then, that in this sense Liberalism in Religion, as he calls it, is fatal to all religion, and that it imports (as who can doubt that it really does?) the speedy and rapid decay of all deep religious conviction. But he holds this belief now—if we may judge from the tone of his speech on Monday—with more sense of the misfortune of the case, and less of the sin, with more hope for the revival of serious belief under the very reign of secularism itself, and less indignation against the empty self-complacency of Liberalism in religion, than he did. He admits—if we understand him rightly—that the State cannot properly teach any one religion to a people among every dozen of whose citizens there are probably seven different forms of religious belief. And he admits, too, there is much that is, in the truest sense, good, in the vague morality of the day, even as the world of secular thought understands it, much that is better in it perhaps, and more really desirous of knowing the truth, than Dr. Newman in his old Oxford days would have been disposed to admit.

For the defect of Dr. Newman's view of Liberalism in religion—taken, at least, as in any sense a complete view of wide religious sympathies, as compared with very strict principles rigidly limited by defined opinions—is this: that it does not account for the fact that on all sides of religious belief the opinions which were once most rigid and definite seem to be those which have most rapidly become formal, hollow, and unreal. The old Evangelical system was rigid and definite, if ever a system was rigid and definite. Where is it now? To what school of thought does the sentimental decay of modern religion which Dr. Newman regrets owe more of its adherents than to the school once called Evangelical? Again, where shall we look for less reality of intellectual life, at least, than to the modern Ritualists, who found themselves, if ever any religious section of thinkers found themselves, on most definite and rigid standards of Orthodoxy, both theological and devotional? Again, probably Dr. Newman would himself be inclined to admit that it is the most rigid party in his own Church which has recently most endangered the hold of that Church on the world at large. It is the narrow kind of rigidity in relation to religious opinion which all over the world, among the Roman Catholics, among the Anglicans, among the Wesleyans, among the Independents, among the Scotch Presbyterians, and among the Unitarians, has most seriously endangered the belief of the world, and does most to prejudice Christianity in the eyes of those belonging to the same fold as the theological martinet themselves. Take which church you will, and you will find that in proportion to the definiteness and rigor of the systematic theology enforced by it has been the reaction against faith,—that only those teachers who have given a large and genial and modest interpretation to the outlines of their creed have kept their hold on the adhesion of their disciples. Cardinal Newman can himself testify to this from a long personal experience, in relation at least to his own Church; and the chiefs of the more liberal movements in probably every other church have had a good deal of the same experience. How, then, shall we account for this apparent paradox, that while "Liberalism in Religion," when pushed to the point indicated by Cardinal Newman, is destructive of all faith, the stricter Conservatism seems even more destructive of it? Our own explanation would be this,—that the denial of all absoluteness in religious truth, and the attempt to make absolute truths of mere refinements of the human intellect, really play into each other's hands; that Revelation consisted in the presentation of certain great facts and divine objects to the conscience of mankind, real enough and imposing enough to kindle new life and new affections in men, but also far too great and too much beyond us to admit of those strict, definite, and sharply marked intellectual outlines which the active intellect of almost all churches is always endeavoring to draw. Assuredly, no church has suffered more from the attempt to over-define what is beyond us than the church which claims for herself infallibility,—an infallibility which the new Cardinal, while cordially accepting it, is, in conjunction with many others of his Church, most solicitous carefully to limit. Assuredly, if "Liberalism in Religion" has been the immediate antecedent of the decay in faith, the immediate antecedent of that Liberalism has been a kind of dogmatism, for which, in its relation to theology at least, the human mind is quite unfitted, and against which, in our belief at least, Revelation itself is full of warning.—London Spectator.

THE POPULATION OF FRANCE.

THE LAST CENSUS.—MARRIAGES DECREASING.—NOT A STEP FORWARD.

The record of the changes in the population of France for the last year—that is to say, for the year 1878—appears a little later than usual. Our thanks and congratulations are due to the administration, for these tables have the double merit of making known just what is important for all to know, and of making it known in a serviceable time. We have not in 1878 made a step in advance. Far from that, since the population of France has realized a gain of only 98,175 inhabitants, as shown by the subtraction of the number of deaths from the number of births occurring during the year.

There were born in 1878 444,316 male infants and 424,983 female infants, the issue of marriages, and in addition 35,032 boys and 32,880 girls, the issue of illegitimate unions, or in all 937,211 children of the two sexes, without counting 43,250 infants still-born. The deaths number 839,036, 432,867 males and 406,169 females. In sixty-one departments there was an excess of 119,315 births, and in twenty-six others an excess of 21,140 deaths, from which is derived the overplus of 98,175 new inhabitants. These figures, it is proper to remark, do not give at this time more than any other the true or exact increase in the population. In a great country like France there are other causes of the increase and decrease of population besides births and deaths. Immigration and emigration strongly vary the true total of the number of inhabitants, which is not exactly known at the time of the quinquennial census, and generally we gain more than we lose by this kind of exchange. But, taken by itself, the increase shown for 1878 is not favorable.

Since 1871, we have had successively a definitive excess of 172,936 births in 1872, of 151,776 in 1873, of 172,943 in 1874, of 105,913 in 1875, of 132,608 in 1876, and of 142,662 in 1877. The figures of 1878 are the smallest of the whole series. Now it is not to be desired that the population should remain stationary; and as it is possible that the better conditions of existence augment by degrees the longevity,—that is to say, in amount the number of effective lives,—we have need for a long time yet to recruit with regularity. There is room, and the alimentary resources of France are sufficient, for a very much larger population; and yet the nations all about us see their populations increasing very much more rapidly than our own, be they as rich as England, or as poor as in the south and east of Europe.

With the present slow rate of increase in our population, we estimate that it will take four hundred years to double the number of inhabitants of France; and certainly, four hundred years ago, the greater part of the countries of Europe were far from having a moiety of the inhabitants that they contain to-day. But we cannot enter, in passing, into the examination of a question so interesting, but so difficult to determine, of knowing what is to be the population of a country in the fulness of her activity, of her real strength and power sustained by great wealth. There is no doubt that several millions more will neither impoverish nor enfeeble our nation. The marriages are decreasing; and it is one of the causes, and evidently the principal one, of the decrease of population among us.

We had by exception 352,753 marriages in 1872 and 321,238 in 1873; but for a long time the average has reached the sum of 300,000, and, notwithstanding our loss of territory, we incline to rest at least at this figure. In 1874 we had 303,113 marriages. Since then the number has constantly decreased: 300,427 in 1875; 271,366 in 1876; 279,094 in 1877,—the fall is great. We hardly increase the number in 1878, the number for this year being very nearly the same as in 1877, 279,892. We have not stated that in 1877 the deaths were more numerous than the births in seventeen departments; in 1878, the deaths exceeded the births in twenty-six departments. These are: The Basses-alpes, l'Oude, the Bouches-du-Rhone, Calvados, Côte-d'or, Drome, Eure, Eure-et-Loire, Haute Garonne, Gers, Hérault, Indre-et-Loire, Lot-et-Garonne, Maine-et-Loire, Manche, Oise, Orne, Rhone, Sarthe, Seine-et-Marne, Seine-et-Oise, Somme, Tarn-et-Garonne, Var, Vaucluse, and the Yonne.

The influence of the changes in husbandry continues to be indicated in these results. In Normandy, the increase in cattle-raising diminishes the need of labor. But the depopulation extends nearly to Paris, has crossed the Maine and the Anjou, without any sensible modification in husbandry. In the south, we can attribute certain depopulations partially to the disturbances caused by the vine disease. The department of the Seine continues to increase. We have had in 1878 an excess of 6,332 births, and the number of marriages was 21,715.—Journal des Débats in Advertiser.

BEACONSFIELD AND GLADSTONE.

Republics are proverbially ungrateful. Since the results of the English elections have come in, the changes rung upon "jingoism," and the praises lavished upon the liberals, with Gladstone as their leader, are a new proof of the truth of the adage. Few remember Gladstone's espousal of the cause of the South during our civil war, of his eulogies in season and out of season—even when official courtesy ought to have restrained his tongue—in behalf of Mr. Davis and the nation "he had made." Upon that question, most English statesmen were wrong. Palmerston, left to himself, would have acknowledged the South. Earl Russell declared it a war for empire on the one hand, for independence on the other. The conservatives, to a man almost, were on the side of the South.

Disraeli almost alone rose superior to his party and to his time, and, with statesmanlike sagacity, declared himself for the North. On May 1, 1865, an address in the House of Commons to the Queen, expressing the sorrow and indignation of the House on the assassination of President Lincoln, was seconded, not by one of her Majesty's ministers, but by Mr. Disraeli, in words which must touch the heart of every American; which brought "tears into the eyes of men to whom, before that moment, the President of the United States had been a mere abstraction," and which should at least secure kindness of feeling from all Americans for their author. Mr. Disraeli spoke as follows:—

"Sir, there are rare instances when the sympathy of a nation approaches those tenderer feelings that, generally speaking, are supposed to be peculiar to the individual, and to form the happy privilege of private life; and this is one. Under all circumstances, we should have bewailed the catastrophe at Washington; under all circumstances, we should have shuddered at the means by which it was accomplished. But in the character of the victim, and even in the accessories of his last moments, there is something so homely and so innocent that it takes, as it were, the subject out of the pomp of history and the ceremonial of diplomacy; it touches the heart of nations, and appeals to the domestic sentiment of mankind.

"Sir, whatever the various and varying opinions in this house and the country generally on the policy of the late President of the United States,—on this, I think, all must agree: that, in one of the severest trials which ever tested the moral qualities of man, he fulfilled his duty with simplicity and strength. Nor is it possible for the people of England, at such a moment, to forget that he sprang from the same fatherland and spoke the same mother tongue. When such crimes are perpetrated, the public mind is apt to fall into gloom and perplexity; for it is ignorant alike of the causes and the consequences of such deeds. But it is one of our duties to reassure the country under unreasoning panic or despondency. Assassination has never changed the history of the world. I will not refer to the remote past, although an accident has made the most memorable example of antiquity at this moment fresh in the mind and memory of all present. But even the costly sacrifice of a Cæsar did not propitiate the inexorable destiny of his country. If we look to modern times, to times at least with the feelings of which we are familiar, and the people of which were animated and influenced by the same interests as ourselves, the violent deaths of two heroic men—Henry IV. of France and the Prince of Orange—are conspicuous illustrations of this truth.

"In expressing our unaffected and profound sympathy with the citizens of the United States at the untimely end of their elected chief, let us not, therefore, sanction any feeling of depression, but rather let us express a fervent hope that from out of the awful trials of the last four years, of which not the least is this violent demise, the various populations of North America may issue elevated and chastened, rich in that accumulated wisdom and strong in that disciplined energy which a young nation can only acquire in a protracted and perilous struggle. Then they will be enabled not only to renew their career of power and prosperity, but they will renew it to contribute to the general happiness of mankind. It is with these feelings, Sir, that I now second the address to the crown."—E. H. S. in Advertiser.

Communications.

JUSTICE TO THE "IRISHRY."

IN THE INDEX of March 25, 1880, is a savage article against the Celts under the title of the "Irishry," which may do some good, but possibly as much harm, because error is intermixed to a degree calculated to embitter strife between the Celtic and Teutonic races; whereas it may be better for them to fulfil the law by loving one another, as some ancestors of the writer have done heretofore, seeing that he is descended from the Hollanders and Gauls, and fancies therefore (modestly of course) that he is better qualified to judge impartially between the races than if wholly Celtic or Teutonic. At all events, he has not the "long simian upper lip" or "large mouth" or "hideous animalism" which distinguished Henry Clay, the duellist politician of the Bank of the United States, leader of the Tariff men in congress for New England,—to say nothing of his Western popularity; so that, after all, a baboon's physiognomy is no objection in a country holding as self-evident that all mankind have been created equal, and that no one has a right to say, "Stand back, for I am holier than thou." But, if you ask an honest Irishman whether one man is not as good as another, he replies, "Yis, yer honor, and bether too," showing thus as much sense as the best and wisest of our countrymen, if not more, for on no other ground can any one pretend to advocate another for any office of trust, honor, or emolument.

But when the British cruisers used to impress seamen from our ships on the high seas, and Congress passed the Embargo Act and interdicted commerce with Great Britain, were they Irish Celts who, at the Hartford Convention, raised a clamor for free trade, and forbade encouragement to those in our midst who thus endeavored to preserve the honor of our flag in its just right to yield protection to the humblest citizen at sea, as well as on the land? And when "Perfidious Albion," after years of provocations to create a civil war between the North and South of our country, at last produced the boast of Madam Stowe's great and noble friend, the Earl of Sutherland, that Great Britain never brooked commercial rivalry, and Mr. Bulwer also said it was the interest of England to divide our Union, not alone between the North and South, but East and West as well, were the "Irishry" in our midst not as ready to go to the front to fight our battles as the best of us, who, like the writer, would much rather pay a man who loves to fight than go himself, as not accustomed to that kind of sport?

Certainly there must be some to raise the food to give soldiers strength to fight, and clothing to protect him from the climate; and it is always best to give to every man of every race the place he is best fitted for by nature. When England herself required a defender from the Celt, Napoleon the Great, they chose an Irishman, Lord Wellington, to lead at Waterloo. So also in America, in our last war with Old England, when the British under General Packington were threatening New Orleans, and the war-cry of the brutal soldiery of "Perfidious Albion" was "Beauty and Booty," and the terror-stricken daughters of our citizens gathered round a soldier, was that soldier Celt or Saxon? What was his name? And what did he reply? "I'll smash them, so help me God! I'll smash 'em!"

And he did, the veterans from Waterloo. This was General Andrew Jackson's speech, but when afterwards envired by the cares of State, and the sharp contest for the public funds between the Bank of the United States and the State banks, he was asked what troubled him the most, he answered that it was "the difficulty in his Presbyterian Church." Perhaps it was a trouble to him that he could not settle it at the sword's point, or at the muzzle of his pistol, as his blood was Irish, after all.

We see, however, that the bellicose propensity is not really an unmixed evil; and we are reminded of the answer of the Bishop who, when asked by William the Conqueror, of England, how it was that he had conquered by a single battle after several of the Scandinavian nations had attempted it, and failed after many efforts, replied that the warlike spirit of the people had been quieted by holy votaries. So it is manifest, after all, that a nation of Quakers would hardly be able to withstand the hordes of Northern barbarians, such as used to sweep down under Attila upon the vine-dressers of Italy, who mixed their blood with the Italian Celts. Yet to France and Italy the world now looks for elegance in arts as well as bravery in arms; and, even when overrun by Germany, the Celtic element from the ancient Gauls rises with a bound, astonishing its conquerors.

That tedious old wag and wit, Voltaire, for whom I never have had much respect, used to say that a Frenchman was a cross between a monkey and a tiger; but he had no reverence for his progenitors, more than some of us may have for him, upon his own admission thus. Indeed his moral sense was weak. Were he a bird, there is a maxim that might suit him well. The truth is that a genuine Frenchman is most happy always when he finds his guests most pleased with his entertainment; and it often has been said that a true Irish gentleman is the most really so of all in the world.

Be this as it may, the late Emperor of Russia, Nicholas the Great, as in the coming times he will be entitled to be called, has said that he would rather choose to be considered the first gentleman of Europe than the greatest emperor. This was true ambition. He, to be sure, was not a Celt. Nor was it the purpose of the present writer to extol the virtues of the Celtic races at the expense of the Teutonic, but to balance the scales of justice as evenly as possible, believing in the mean time the races are to be improved by crossing breeds and other forces not yet fully understood, as follows, seeing that

The resultant of all passion,
Made by climate, food, and station,
Crossing breeds, and other forces,
Change mankind as well as horses.

Very respectfully,

CLINTON ROOSEVELT.
No. 11 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.

INFORMATION WANTED.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 9, 1880.

MR. EDITOR:—

Will some one explain to me through your columns the main differences between the government of Scotland and Wales by England, and the government of Ireland? I am led to ask for information by reading the communication in this week's INDEX signed "Common Sense." As an illiterate toiler, who has stood at the rack "from boyhood's happy hours," I am woefully ignorant on these and some other matters. My dull-brained idea has always been that the poor Irish were rather an odd lot, like the Sepoys and some others, not altogether as manageable as the Scotsmen or Welsh or the colonial subjects of Great Britain. "Common Sense" shows quite clearly that nothing could be further from the truth,—Kearneyism, Orange riots, etc., notwithstanding.

SUBSCRIBER.

JESTINGS.

BETTER TRADE.—Even the bootblack says his business is brightening up.

TOO MUCH.—"The early bird gets the worm," but a knurlly apple gets it also.

A MR. TEASE recently married a Miss Cross. He teased her till she promised not to be cross any more.

LADY: "No, thanks: I never read newspapers on Sundays." Waiter: "Beg pardon, mum, but this is a Sunday paper."

ANNA: "How I do love pets! Before I was married, I always had a monkey." Arthur: "And what have you now?" Anna: "You."

IT IS very vulgar to keep time to music with your foot, but there's a vast deal of human nature in it; and it shows that a man's entire sole is in the melody.

LONDON PUNCH: Edwin: "Dull paper this morning, ain't it, Angy?" Angelina: "Yes! Not a soul one knows mentioned! Not even in the deaths!"

ONLY HALF A SHOW.—First Hibernian: "Well, Patsy, did ye see the illuminations?" Second Hibernian: "Faith, an' I sor one, bit it hadn't been loighted."

IT COMES kind o' sudden-like, just as the congregation have finished singing "Salvation's free," to have the preacher announce that "the collection will now be taken up."—Boston Transcript.

A FOND husband boasted to a friend, "Tom, the old woman came near calling me honey last night." "Did she? What did she say?" "Why, she called out, 'Come now, Beeswax, why don't you come to supper?'"

"WHY, YOU'D better knock the door down. What do you want?" "Och, my darling! don't let me wake any of your family. I'm just using your knocker to wake the people next door. I'm locked out, d'ye see, and they've niver a knocker."

LAND STEWARD (to tenant-farmer): "Well, Giles, what are you going to sow in here?" Farmer: "Ain't 'tactly made up my mind, sir; but if we could put in a few stewards and land agents,—They seems to thrive best on the land nowadays."

MOTHER (at table): "Jack, who helped you to those tarts?" Jack (aged seven): "The Lord." Mother: "The 'Lord! Why, what do you mean, Jack?" Jack: "Well, I helped myself; but father said yesterday that the Lord helps those who help themselves."

THE THREAT that Kansas is too cold a climate for the colored man to live in was well answered by a proposed emigrant from a Southern State the other day. A white man was telling him of the climate, when he asked: "O Mars Bob, ain't dat Kansas de place de big squabble was over afore de wah, 'bout you white folks takin' de niggers to?" "Oh, yes," was the reply. "Wall, den, ef it was good for slave niggers, how comes it to be so bad for free ones?" No answer when last heard from.

AN ENGLISHMAN and a German were travelling together in a diligence, and both smoking. The German did all in his power to draw his companion into conversation, but to no purpose. At one moment he would, with a superabundance of politeness, apologize for drawing his attention to the fact that the ash of his cigar had fallen on his waistcoat, or a spark was endangering his neckerchief. At length the Englishman exclaimed: "Why the dickens can't you leave me alone? Your coat-tail has been burning for the last ten minutes, but I didn't bother you about it."

A LITTLE CHILD has brought to the surface a new theological puzzle. When told the story of the Prodigal Son and how he was so reduced that he was compelled to eat husks, she looked into the face of the teacher with a bewildered sort of gaze and then said, "Why did he eat the husks, good sir?" "Because," was the reply, "he had nothing else to eat." "Nothing else?" responded the child. "I think I could have found something." "And what could you have done if you had been there, my child?" queried the teacher. "Why," answered the bright-eyed little one without hesitation, "I should have killed a pig and had a good dinner."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	6 " "
" 52 "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the holdest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

- WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
- WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
- Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
- GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
- DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, Mass.
- Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
- J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
- C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
- W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
- BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
- ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
- JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
- Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of the year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large," and later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 84 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Manrice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET, Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.
EDITOR
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 29 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia, or, the Great Renunciation; being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible; a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
French X-LXXVI. With the shorter French series allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Xton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher School and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
Bartholomew.....	1.25
GAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O.A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any vols. sent separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (Dr. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCOIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELLATION and Conservation of Forces. A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College's Reason to Education, Employment, and Outship.....	2.80
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	1.25
Habits of Climbing Plants.....	1.75
Orchids.....	2.00
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPEE (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	1.50
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	3.00
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	1.50
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.). Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and other Pieces.....	1.50
Science and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Quersel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outline of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols. The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	6.00
PROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creeds and Confessions.....	1.00
Crucible of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series, 40 numbers, each 10c. New Series.....	5.50
Stories. New Series.....	1.00
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Safest Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. 2 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Kindred my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wanderholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner. E.A. With nine Illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Life of Wong.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Sketches and Etchings.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young People.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.00
Nile's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
My Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUXLEY'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.75
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiology, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.75
IV. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Ames.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Mayr.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Pungt. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Growth and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animals, Parasites, and Mesomites. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. O. Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Music and its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction. By B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford. Prolegomena, Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPER (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	2.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I and II.....	1.50
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fair for Fair.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	.75
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter. Translated from the French.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Reformatory Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and the Monopod. A Series of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Social Changes. An Essay on social Economy.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Philology, and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Thelen. Doctrines of Practical Ethics.....	1.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....

Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....

Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLXVI. A Christmas Story.....

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....

Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....

The Trolley Book.....

Men, Women, and Ghosts.....

Hedged In.....

The Silent Partner.....

What to Wear?.....

Poetic Studies.....

The Story of Ayla.....

Travels and Tour. Illustrated.....

Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....

Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....

Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....

The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....

The Expanse of Heaven.....

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....

SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....

SCIENCE PRIMERS:

1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....

2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....

3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....

4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....

5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....

6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....

7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....

8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....

9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....

10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....

SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....

SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....

First Principles.....

Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....

Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....

The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....

The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....

Philosophy of Style.....

Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....

Sociology.....

Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....

Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....

Universal Progress.....

Data of Ethics.....

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....

Uncle Tom's Cabin.....

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....

TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....

TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....

Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....

Cape Cod.....

Letters.....

A Yankee in Canada.....

A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....

Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....

TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....

Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....

Light and Electricity.....

Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....

Heat as a Mode of Motion.....

On Sound.....

Radiant Heat.....

Forms of Water.....

Lectures on Light.....

Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....

Lessons in Electricity.....

Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Slings and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....

Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....

Sauterlings.....

Back-Log Studies.....

WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....

Humor, and Shakespeare.....

West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....

Essays and Reviews.....

Character and Characteristic Men.....

The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....

Success and its Conditions.....

Washington and the Revolution.....

WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....

We Girls: A Home Story.....

Real Folks.....

The Other Girls.....

Fancies. A volume of Poems.....

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....

Child Life.....

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. H. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail,

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.
A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the conditions and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,
THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES
By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50).

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leiden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.50 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00 in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS'
LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address

CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N.Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 540.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

A LADY inquires about the authorship of the poem, "After Death in Arabia," published in the cheap edition of the Light of Asia. Can any one of our readers inform her whether it is original or a translation, and, if the former, by whom it was written?

JOSEPH COOK is driven to declare himself a "vehement anti-Spiritualist," because somebody places him in that sect. His Lectureship is discovering how it feels to be misrepresented in this way, and perhaps will cease his precisely similar annoyance of Mr. Emerson.

IT IS REPORTED that Mr. Underwood's trial at Irwin Station, Pa., has resulted in the imposition of a fine of $150. If this is true, it is a most disgraceful instance of legal injustice. Mr. Underwood has precisely as good a right to proclaim his religious views as any occupant of a pulpit in that benighted town. He will have the hearty sympathy of every just mind in the wrong that has been inflicted upon him.

THIS IS from the Albany Bulletin of April 17: "The sum of $4,200 was subscribed last Sunday toward the erection of another fashionable religious club-house in this city, to be known as the Calvary Baptist Church. The ink is scarcely dry upon Dr. Clark's declaration that, owing to the financial depression of the times, these institutions were unable to pay their just share of taxation, when, in a few minutes, the above munificent sum is contributed to add another to their number, at the expense of honest and already heavily-laden tax-payers. And so the accumulation of this class of property will continue as long as the evil of exemption shall be indulged in."

MISS COBBE wrote this letter to the Woman's Journal :—

"My dear, kind Friends,—I am not dead! I have been reading your all-too-kind and partial remarks on me, here in my office, in the midst of business life, and awaiting a committee extending its influence all over the kingdom at the previous election. There is something half droll, half infinitely solemn, in thus seeing what will be said and felt of me some day,—no doubt not far distant, since I am fifty-eight years of age. God grant that such days as may yet be allotted to me on earth may be so spent as to merit in some measure all the good words which have been said over me now! It was a poor lady—unknown to me personally—who took my name, and whose death was announced so as to mislead. I am, thank God, not only alive, but as well and strong as any woman of my years may expect to be, and I hope to strike more than one blow for the noble cause of the Emancipation of Woman before I die.

"Sincerely and gratefully yours,

"FRANCES POWER COBBE,
"1 Victoria Street, S.W., London, Eng."

THE MOST comically absurd argument against church taxation that ever came under our notice is this, made by Rev. Henry Darling, D.D., of Albany: "Large tax-payers have great political power. The concentration of capital into a comparatively few hands, and the power that that capital can wield over government, political economists tell us, is one of the greatest perils of our civilization. But is not this as true of churches and corporations as it is of individuals? And the Roman Catholic hierarchy, with all the prodigious wealth of its churches, becoming a large tax-payer, will it not become a great political power?" Does this worthy gentleman suppose that "large tax-payers have great political power" simply because they pay large taxes, and not because they have large wealth to tax? And does he suppose that the Catholic Church, having "prodigious wealth," will be any less powerful if it retains it all, than if it disgorges a part to pay the cost of protecting the rest?

THE Nation thinks that Channing has been over-estimated. In its issue of April 15, it said: "On Wednesday week, the Unitarians celebrated at Brooklyn, Newport, and elsewhere, with éclat, the centenary of the birth of Channing. They did well, and yet it may be doubted whether another such celebration will ever take place,—whether, to use Dr. Bellows's phrase at Newport, 'his fame is still the morning star, and is climbing the sky.' Channing's theology, much as he did to liberalize that of New England, is already obsolete in the details of his creed, created no school, and has nothing in it which will guarantee it against the undermining force of the theory of morals involved in the new doctrine of Development. On this side, his work was strictly for the time into which he was born; and its most tangible result was in the sudden conversion of Calvinistic into Unitarian meeting-houses in Massachusetts in the memorable year 1820. Among Channing's contemporaries, his personal presence and character counted for more than his pulpit utterances; and what secured him the affectionate admiration of foreign philanthropists was his human sympathies, his passionate love of freedom of opinion, and his hatred of war; latterly, also, his opposition to slavery. That his intellectual reputation will hold its own we do not believe. He is not a 'quotable' writer, and those who wish to get something of his spirit must drink deeply or not at all."

THE Nation says explicitly what ought to be heard, now that Channing is pressed upon public notice too exclusively in the way of eulogy to be justly judged. Alluding to Charles T. Brooks' new Centennial Memory, it says: "Dr. Channing's relations to the anti-slavery movement are stated perhaps with candor, but without taking account of all the facts; and nothing could better reveal the want of robustness which kept Dr. Channing from hearty coöperation with the Abolitionists than the following sentence of his biographer's (p. 145): 'And what a dulness or wilfulness it implies, not to recognize the rare greatness of the man, who, with such a native craving for the calm atmosphere of meditation, deliberately, at the command of conviction, sacrificed his ease and comfort to the turmoil of social and political conflict,—the greatness of a man who, with all his deep and long and patient thought, suffered himself to learn and to be led along, with the meekness of a little child, by Divine Providence, even though its instruments were men whose ways and manners often shocked his taste and his sense of Christian justice.' This apology for a Christian minister, who had seen slavery in his youth in Richmond, who, having preached for more than thirty years (1803-35) in one pulpit, on the publication of his first work on slavery in the latter year was disowned by his society, so little had he done to prepare them for even the moderate views he expressed, and who took this step only after the most impassioned appeals on the part of the Abolition leaders,—this apology is nothing less than grotesque. Mr. Brooks is here rebutting Mrs. M. W. Chapman's depreciatory remarks on Channing in her Memorials of Miss Martineau. He does not conceal, he admits, the justice of the rebuke administered to Channing by his co-sectary and spiritual peer, the Rev. Samuel J. May, in 1834, a whole year before the appearance of the work just referred to, and which elicited the confession: 'I have been silent too long.' Mr. May reports that the Doctor's objections, 'if they were as well founded as he assumed them to be, lay against what was only incidental, and not an essential part of our movement. He dwelt upon them till I became impatient.' This accords with Mrs. Chapman's general statement, in a foot-note having reference to a religious topic, and so not quoted by Mr. Brooks: 'He [Channing] constantly needed the admonition of the French statesman conveyed in his definition of a bêtise: "C'est oublier la chose essentielle."'" It is a useful lesson to teach that neglect or unwillingness to aid a righteous and struggling cause in its difficult beginnings is not forgotten or condoned by posterity even in the good.

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SOHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL OOLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAH, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. HOPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 T. C. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorncliffe, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-cuse, N. Y.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 EBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN EAST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Channing's Life and Work.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

It will be one hundred years next Wednesday since Channing was born in Newport, Rhode Island, April 7, 1780. This anniversary is of peculiar interest to those who trace their spiritual lineage back to him; but it should be of hardly less interest to any thoughtful person. Certainly no one to whom the progress of religious ideas is an engaging theme, or who is enamored of the principles of religious liberty, can let these days go by without some serious endeavor to estimate aright the personal force and influence of one whose name and fame are associated with this progress and these principles to a remarkable degree.

Channing was well born. His father, an excellent man, was somewhat frigidly encased in the conventional manners of his time. But his mother, he tells us, "had a rough nobleness in all her ways." She was not to be imposed on by others, and what is rarer, she practised no imposition on her own mind. She called things by their right names." This is an item for the expositors of hereditary genius. The growing boy was almost dainty in his loveliness of face and form. His grandfather Ellery was a signer of the Declaration, and his father, an ardent federalist, loved to surround his table with "fine last-century faces," among them Jay's and Washington's. Channing's first notion of glory, he informs us, was attached to an old black cook who seemed to be the most important personage in town. Channing reacted too far from this materialism into ascetic rigors that must have permanently injured a constitution naturally delicate. After his graduation from Harvard, in 1798, we find him sleeping upon the floor instead of in his bed at night, lest he should become effeminate. At this time he was acting as tutor in a Virginian Randolph family. "Catch me," said Thackeray, "speaking ill of people who have such good claret!" But the gracious hospitality of the Virginians did not blind the young teacher to their defective social system. His anti-slavery convictions dated from this period of personal acquaintance with "the patriarchal institution of the South." He wrote: "Language cannot express my detestation of it. . . I should be obliged to show you every vice heightened by every meanness and added to every misery." This is not so compact as Wesley's phrase, "the sum of all villainies," but it is equally expressive.

Returning to Newport in July, 1800, he continued there the theological studies he had begun at Richmond. He studied also at Cambridge. His life in Newport was favorable to his individuality and self-reliance, while it increased those habits of loneliness and isolation which he had already contracted, and which further on hindered his usefulness and caused him serious pain. Two places in Newport contributed largely to his education. One was the Redwood Library, then so deserted that he spent day after day, and sometimes week after week, amidst its dusty volumes without the interruption of a single visitor. The other was the beach, now to the lotos-eater's heart so dear, and then as beautiful as now, but all unfamed. "Seldom do I visit it now," he said in later life, "without thinking of the work which there, in the sight of that beauty, in the sound of those waves, was carried on in my soul. No spot on earth has helped to form me so much as that beach. . . There began a happiness surpassing all worldly pleasures, all gifts of fortune—the happiness of communing with the works of God."

In Newport at this time lived Dr. Hopkins, the hero of Mrs. Stowe's novel, The Minister's Wooing, and of the theological doctrine "We should be willing to be damned for the glory of God." We think of him as the teacher of a horrible theology, but in his day he was a radical, and his theology was more human than that from which it appealed. Even his favorite proposition was an advance. Jonathan Edwards had got no further than that we should be willing to see our friends and near relations damned for the glory of God. Hopkins thought we should be equally willing to see ourselves in the same plight. He preached the gospel of unselfishness, and so doing he did well. The weak point in his system was that it should be for God's glory to damn anybody. His ideal man shamed his ideal God. For his God to worship his man would have been more natural and fit than the opposite relation. But better than any special result of Hopkins' thinking was the fact that he did think, that he did try to harmonize the "scheme of salvation" with reason, where others had been content to draw out the logical conclusions of certain premises without regard to their intrinsic reasonableness. Then, too, he was a practical philanthropist, opposed with all his might to slavery and the slave-trade, then Northern as well as Southern institutions. Hopkins' influence on Channing was considerable, and all for good. It was a four-fold influence. The elements were a passion for truth, a habit of independent thinking, an interpretation of the current faith which eliminated its monstrous selfishness, and a philanthropic disposition. Another personal influence on Channing was that of Ezra Stiles, president of Yale College, a preacher with a passion for scientific studies,—a rare phenomenon a hundred years ago,—and so corresponding with Franklin and with almost everybody worth corresponding with in his generation. His influence on Channing was through the circle in which the boy was reared. Channing traced to him some of the deepest sources of his own liberty-loving, anti-ecclesiastical tendencies.

Thus exercised and influenced, the period of preparation slipped away, and in the fall of 1802 Channing began to preach in different pulpits in and around Boston. Called immediately and simultaneously by two societies, he decided for the Federal Street Society, and was ordained its minister June 1, 1803. Even the first impression of his preaching was unusual and profound. He and Buckminster, who became, at the age of twenty, minister of the Brattle Street Society in 1805, first declared the banns between literature and theology. The preaching of the previous generation had kept the two apart, and this remorselessly. From the Pilgrim Fathers down, the New England pulpit had disdained the graces of speech. Any such addition to the "sincere milk of the word" savored of adulteration; yes, of impiety. The sermons were hard theological statements, thickly interlarded with scriptural quotations, with which chapter and verse were given. The sermons of Channing had not this character. His arguments were rational, not scriptural; or, when scriptural, the scriptural matter was assimilated, not presented in crude form. His style, less rhetorical than that of Buckminster, impresses me as more sincere. Its ornaments, like those of Eastlake furniture, are never stuck on, but inhere in the fundamental design of the composition, and are an outgrowth of it. When he attains to beauty, I have the feeling that the beauty is a necessity of his thought. Dr. Bartol specifies continuity as the most characteristic trait of Channing's style. I should say clearness.

"Plainness and clearness without shadow of stain, Clearness divine."

Such clearness was an easier virtue for him, because his thought, however profound, was always simple; never recondite, never mystical. But with the clearness there is also continuity,—a steady flow as of a river broad and deep,—a sweep of bird-like motion, as when the wings no longer beat the air, and yet the progress is not stayed.

But from the printed page the most acute will find it hard to extract the secret of so great a charm as that which Channing exercised over the listening multitude. Nor was the written word enforced by a commanding presence. Never did man's exterior semblance more belie his soul's immensity. His height and bulk were insignificant. "Three hundred pounds, and every pound for Jesus!" shouted the rollicking revivalist as he waddled up the aisle. Channing's weight was scarcely a third of this. His deep-set, luminous eyes monopolized the beauty of his face. His scanty gestures lacked both elegance and force. His voice participated in the general weakness of his physical organism. But the whole was greater than the sum of all its parts. A man was here who triumphed over all the accidents of his personality and spoke to the intelligence and heart of the community as did no other of his time, not even Webster with his magnificent physique and his voice of mellow thunder. When Channing prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered. He seemed as one beholding that which is invisible. And when he spoke, his tiny form became the shekinah of a wonderful presence. His piping voice discovered modulations that went thrilling through his hearers with indescribable power. In nothing superficial or external shall we find the explanation that we seek. The triumph of Channing as a public speaker was the triumph of that moral sentiment of which he was the visible incarnation. An English critic called his style "a naked thought." Good! That was what he would have it. So that it expressed the meaning with which he was impressed he was well content. When men listened to Channing, they could not help feeling that here was a man who did not speak from any habit or convention, but from some profound necessity of his thought and feeling. They did not so much seem to hear sermons addressed to them as to overhear the rapt communion of a living spirit with the living God.

For twelve years onward from his settlement, the life of Channing was that of a faithful Boston minister, as quiet, as uninterrupted as such a life could be. At times depressed by a deep sense of the responsibilities of his position, as he grew more and more at home in it, this sense no longer burdened him, and he went about his work with sacred joy. In the first years of his ministry, his preaching was sometimes oppressive in its solemnity, and it was a relief to escape from him to Buckminster's more genial eloquence. His intensity sometimes repelled, but oftener it attracted. The tinge of sorrow did not destroy the charm. His society grew strong under his ministrations, and a new church was built to meet the needs of the increasing congregation. Meantime, his health was miserable, and the tone of his sermons was lower than it would have been if the tone of his body had been higher. That contempt of the body and consequent abuse of it which was so conspicuous in medieval piety was one of Channing's most unfortunate survivals, and one for which he paid the price of many sick and useless days. If Maudsley's Body and Mind could have been among his books, his average of health and use might have been twice as high. As it was, he must be sparing in his diet, and must make his bed in the attic, and his study something very like a hermit's cell. It was a terrible mistake, and he came in time to see that it was so, when it was too late to undo the wrong that had been done. But the unity of mind and body is a gospel that is only just beginning to be preached, and those who preach it do not always practise what they preach. Channing, too long a bachelor for his own good, was married in 1814. This was an excellent move. Henceforth his mode of life was much more sensible. A grave man, without much laughter in his composition, quite devoid of humor, he was not severe, as some imagined; he was certainly not morose. And with his little children he could be himself a child. His kindness was inexhaustible. Asked before Brother Tuckerman's face if Brother Tuckerman's sermon had not wearied him, he insisted that he was tired before Brother Tuckerman began. Possibly he repented afterward of this equivocation.

The pulpit work of Channing was a unit from the beginning of his preaching to the end. He ripened and mellowed, but he underwent no violent change of method or of thought. As various exigencies arose, he drew out from his spiritual philosophy conclusions suited to the hour. But never was a life characterized by less of convulsion; by more of growth, expansion, and development. If his teachings in later life were more practical, the difference was but the difference between the blossom and the fruit. The Unitarian controversy, as it is called, did not fairly begin till 1815, but that controversy signalized no change in Channing's views or principles and was the cause of none. They were the same substantially before and after that troubled and unhappy time. As time went on, his doctrinal views, on certain points, became more rational and humane. Thus, from a doubtful he became a firm believer in the doctrine of ultimate, universal salvation, though finding himself in a small minority of Unitarian religionists, the majority of whom dreaded the taint of Universalism for themselves more than eternal hell for the great mass of mankind. But the fear of taint was never an element in the determination of Channing's views or actions.

The nature of Channing's views and principles, and their relative importance in the general make-up of his thought and life, are matters of such common misapprehension that it would seem as if some of his foes had been those of his own household, as if sufficient pains had not been taken to set him right before the world. The best way to set him right, however, is to let him speak for himself. Known as the greatest representative of the Unitarian initiative in America, many suppose that the distinguishing points in his preaching were the unity of God as opposed to the trinity, the subordination of Christ to God as opposed to his deity. No supposition could do him greater injustice. Not but that these points appeared in his preaching, but even to suppose them equally prominent with others would be most unfair to him, such a supposition would be so lacking in perspective. For these things were not in the foreground of that picture which he painted as reverently as Fra Angelico ever painted on his knees. They were not in the middle distance even. They were in the background. In the foreground were the goodness of God, the dignity of human nature, religious liberty. In the middle distance were his views of Christianity as a moral revelation, and his estimate of the personal character of Jesus as a beneficent and purifying power.

In denying that the distinctive glory of Channing was his assertion of the numerical unity of God, I am not denying that he was a Unitarian in his theology. Once writing to a friend he said, "I am very little of a Unitarian," and these words, wrenched from their explanatory connection, have been made to serve the supposition that he was something of a Trinitarian. Nothing was further from his thought. When he said "I am little of a Unitarian," he was not speaking of theological but of ecclesiastical—of sectarian—Unitarianism. He was fearful not without reason that Unitarianism might one day cease to be a movement and become a sect; and in that case he did not wish to be counted in with its adherents. If he ever hated anything, it was the idea of a sect; meaning by this an ecclesiastical body pledged to the maintenance of a certain fixed and definite and unalterable body of theological opinions. "I should hate truth itself," said Lessing, "if it should be the founder of a sect." And Channing's spirit says, Amen! But, although strictly Unitarian, his Unitarianism was not his most distinctive thought. It was the moral, not the numerical, atrociousness of Calvinism that offended him. The difference between one God and three was not so much; but the difference between a being infinitely good and Calvin's electing, reprobating fate, bestowing mercy upon creatures predestined for salvation from time's earliest morning, only in consideration of an atoning sacrifice of innocent blood—this difference was incalculably great. And this difference engrossed the mind of Channing. You will find nowhere in his writings the hair-splitting subtleties of Arius and Athanasius. Not as a speculative theologian, which he never was, but as a moral hero Channing rejected Calvinism. Much has been said about his "pale negations." And some one called the affirmations of the Declaration of Independence "glittering generalities." "Glittering generalities!" said Wendell Phillips; "They are blazing ubiquities." "Pale negations!" say we of Channing's anti-Calvinistic doctrines; "They are radiant affirmations." What is there pale, what is there negative, in the doctrine of God's infinite goodness? And what is there pale, what is there negative, in the doctrine of the dignity of human nature which Channing opposed to the doctrine of total depravity, as it was formulated in the creeds and delivered from the pulpits of his time? No doctrine was so central to the sphere of Channing's thought as this. He said, "My one sublime idea which has given me unity of mind is the greatness, the divinity of the soul." He understood himself completely. For this idea, when not explicitly set forth, pervaded like a subtle essence everything he said or did. Even the goodness of God was a deduction from this central proposition. All his reformatory action in behalf of the sailor and the slave, the prisoner and the drunkard, the fallen and the poor, was based upon it. Even his glorious principle of intellectual and religious liberty was based on his conception of the dignity of human nature. The dignity of human nature, the goodness of God, religious liberty—these were his three great radiant affirmations in which his soul took measureless delight, and for which generations yet unborn shall do him reverence.

To his conviction of the dignity of human nature, Channing found the doctrine of man's total depravity definitely opposed. This doctrine formulated the incapacity of man for knowing any truth or doing any good. He met this doctrine as he met the doctrine of divine depravity with no pale negation, but with a counter-affirmation. I say a counter-affirmation; but was there any affirmation on the other side? As darkness is the negation of light, and cold is the negation of heat, was not the assertion of man's total depravity the negation of his intellectual and moral sanity; not a "pale negation" certainly, but a most dark and dreary one, an essential negation; not a formal one merely? There was nothing easy-going and complacent in Channing's doctrine of the dignity of human nature. It did not mean the actual dignity of human character. He could recognize this when he saw it, and was always rejoiced to do so. He was also quick to see where it was lacking, and could be stern or pitiful, according to the nature of the case. But when he spoke of the dignity of human nature, it was its possibilities, not its actual results, he had in mind. And how he loved to speak of it! How he rejoiced in all the powers and manifestations of man's intellectual life, in the capacity for affection latent in every soul; in what awe he stood before the inspirations of conscience; this search for truth, this law of right within, this hunger of the soul for God,—how he bowed down and worshipped when he thought of all these things! But his worship never ended in complacency. The more he thought of what a man might be,—"how noble in reason, how infinite in faculties, in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a God,"—the more he thought of this the more terrible it seemed to him to fall short of this beatitude; the more dark seemed every stain on such a spirit; the more ignoble for it to rest in error; the more monstrous any crime against its liberty. When he had said, "See what you can be," if he did not always add, "See what you are," this injunction was always implied; and, if it struck remorse into the listener, at the same time it opened wide for him the doors of hope. He had more faith in the attractive power of a sublime ideal than in the repellent energy of man's actual sordidness, however vividly portrayed. On this he did not like to dwell. The other was "the haunt and the main region of his song."

With such views of human nature and of individual responsibility, it was impossible for Channing to embrace that theory of atoning sacrifice, which gave to the popular theology of his time all its dramatic interest. The harshest word he ever spoke was spoken of this theory when he said it set up a gallows in the centre of the universe. But here his denial of the popular teaching was no "pale negation" merely. It involved a counter-affirmation. Salvation by character is surely quite as positive a doctrine as salvation by magic or by creed or by the blood of a vicarious sufferer. Nor did the teaching of Channing fail to preserve for Jesus a large place in the divine economy. He was nowhere so indefinite and vague as he was here—in speaking of certain possible relations of the death of Jesus to the divine forgiveness. But where he was indefinite and vague he placed no emphasis. His emphasis was all upon the example of Jesus—the imitableness of his character. This source of high encouragement—not any "fountain filled with blood"—was central to his thought of Christ's relation to the moral welfare of mankind. And in the thought of Channing the real hell to be avoided was not some far-off consequence of sin, but sin itself; or, if its consequence, a consequence immediate and inward, the deterioration of the sinful mind.

Closely allied with Channing's faith in human nature was his faith in the unfettered exercise of the human mind. In its full development and expression this faith came later, when the practical need was more pronounced. But the germs of it were in his mind from the beginning of his public life, and I know not how much earlier. It was because the mind was so great, so splendidly endowed, that it must not be tampered with, must not rest in any truth attained, must not accept any creed as final. Speaking of Dr. Channing, Renan asks: "What sort of a rationalist is he who admits miracles, prophecy, or revelation?" But rationalism which is frequently, as here, confounded with certain results, is in truth a method. It was the method of Channing. Read him anywhere and you will see that his final appeal is always to reason, never to authority. And the method which he constantly illustrated he frequently affirmed in unmistakable language. Henry Ware, Jr., as pure a spirit as earth ever knew, felt obliged to tell the young men of Cambridge that when their reason conflicted with the letter of the Bible they must "follow the written word." "For," he said, "you can never be so certain of what takes place in your own mind as of what is written in the Bible." Channing did not so think. "The truth is," he said, "and it ought not to be disguised, that our ultimate reliance is and must be on our own reason." These words, to which Channing was never false in action, make him fundamentally a rationalist. Nor Renan himself is more of one than he. The boldest of our modern radicalism is contained—an oak-tree in the acorn's tiny cup—in that single phrase of Channing. We were all of us prophesied in him. But the phrase which I have quoted was not an isolated phrase. Taking that by itself one might imagine that he did not see its bearing on the question of a Biblical or other supernatural authority, that if he had done so he would have written differently. Alas for this illusion, it was in speaking of revelation that these words were said. And these also: "If, after a deliberate and impartial use of our best faculties, a professed revelation seems to us plainly to disagree with itself or to clash with great principles which we cannot question, we ought not to hesitate to withhold from it our belief. I am surer that my rational nature is from God than that any book is the expression of his will." It may be objected to Channing that he recognized two sources of knowledge—reason and revelation—while our modern rationalism recognizes one only source of knowledge, namely reason. True, most true, and Channing would have seen it to be so, if he had lived a few years longer; but when he was living the evidence was not all in; Biblical criticism was still in its infancy. Channing proved his rationalism sufficiently by making reason the ultimate test. This done, the rest was sure to come in time in his or in some other mind. To-day the rationalist is well aware that reason is our only source of knowledge, and that the Bible is only a commanding illustration of its imperfect exercise—imperfect and yet glorious.

Having this faith in human reason, Channing never closed his mind, never thought the evidence all in; but believed there was "more light yet to break forth from God's word," written and unwritten. Having this faith, he was jealous of all ecclesiastical pretensions, of all sectarian fellowships, believing in individualism as did no other of his time. He knew the dangers of free-thinking, but he also knew that they were nothing in comparison with the dangers of exclusiveness and repression. He was magnificent in his consistency and courage in every matter that involved the right of private judgment and the freedom of the pulpit and the press. When Abner Kneeland, editor of the Investigator, was indicted for atheism and sentenced to three months' imprisonment, it was Channing who headed a petition for his release. It is hard for us to realize, at this remove, the amount of moral courage involved in such an act in 1834. Some of his dearest friends were inconsolable. One hundred and sixty-six other gentlemen followed the lead of Channing, but their petition was refused. Nevertheless there has not been an indictment for atheism in Massachusetts from that day to this, and there will never be another. We know at last that atheism is not a sin, and surely not a crime, and may be less of a misfortune than belief in such a god as many worship, even as Shakespeare's Caliban his "dam's god, Setebos."

But, though rationalistic in his method, Channing was far from arriving at the results for which our later rationalism had made itself responsible. The Bible was to him a very different book from what it has been proved to be by modern critical science, before whose face the last vestige of its supernatural character has disappeared. Jesus might have been a man to him, and still have been a being of unique and glorious attractions, not "a mere man," a creature which had for him no existence. He revered man too much to qualify his generic title with any such contemptuous word as "mere." But Jesus was not a man to him in any proper sense, though he insisted, illogically it must be confessed, on the imitableness of his character and the power of his example. The Christ of Channing's apprehension—for the name Jesus, so absolutely human, has no appropriateness when he is dehumanized—the Christ of Channing's apprehension was a superhuman, superangelic being, unlike any other. English Unitarianism, in his time, led by Priestley and Belsham and Lindsey, was humanitarian. It held that Jesus was pure man. From this opinion Channing recoiled, almost with violence. And with his conception of the New Testament he was perfectly consistent in so doing. Taking the New Testament as it stands, it does not favor a humanitarian conception of Jesus. Channing's conception of Jesus, or rather of the Christ, was exactly that of the New Testament in its most developed form as it appears in the Fourth Gospel and the later Epistles of St. Paul. Again, in the matter of the atonement, Channing held that there was some peculiar efficacy in the death of Jesus; the nature of which he could not be clear about because the New Testament upon this head was painfully obscure. But his views on all these subjects were incidental and subordinate. He did not insist on them. He seldom referred to them save when he was directly challenged in private correspondence or in public debate. His radiant affirmations of the dignity of human nature, the eternal goodness, the morality of intellectual freedom—these were the staple of his thought. Not to discover the exact rank of Jesus in the scale of being, but to glow with his enthusiasm for humanity, to thrill with his compassion for the suffering and the weak, was to him the all-important thing.

It would be fruitless to inquire whether, if Channing had lived longer or been born later, he would have been or have remained a supernaturalist in his theology. Certain it is that men possessed of all his intellectual power and a more generous culture are supernaturalists unto this day, but then they are not men who have Channing's openness of mind or his entire sincerity, first with themselves and next with all the world. And it is also certain that in his lifetime the materials for a satisfactory judgment on the supernatural claims of Christianity were not at hand. I know that long before his death some had arrived at anti-supernatural results. But the saying is that "truth is at the bottom of a well," and in their case the well was one that they had tumbled into in the dark. The kingdom of rationalism had suffered violence, and the violent had taken it by force. The time had not come for the gentle and quiet people to go in. That wondrous tide of German criticism, which has so enriched us since his day, had not then deposited its costly freight upon our shores. What welcome Channing would have given to it, it is not for me to say. I am only sure that he would have listened to the new thought, and listened very patiently, before condemning it or adopting it. This he did always. This was his glory, and it was enough. It is the spirit of liberty that leads us into all truth, and Channing had this spirit without measure. He was intolerant of nothing but intolerance. He wished to fetter no man's faith, to check no man's researches. They told him in the last years of his life of Theodore Parker's radical preaching—the memorable South Boston sermon. "Let the full heart pour itself forth," he said. "I wish him to preach what he thoroughly believes and feels." Not long before his death he wrote to Mr. Martineau: "Old Unitarianism must undergo important modifications or developments. Thus I have felt for years. . . . Its history is singular. It began as a protest against the rejection of reason—against mental slavery. It pledged itself to progress as its life and end; but it has gradually grown stationary, and now we have a Unitarian Orthodoxy. Perhaps this is not to be wondered at or deplored, for all reforming bodies seem doomed to stop in order to keep the ground, much or little, which they have gained. They become conservative, and out of them must spring new reformers to be persecuted generally by the old. With these views, I watch all new movements with great interest."

In setting forth these views with ever-growing power and deepening earnestness passed the first dozen years of Channing's ministry. But while he was thus quietly pursuing the work of a good minister, the Sumter-gun of a long-threatening controversy sent forth its hateful challenge, and the Unitarian controversy was begun. Channing was no lover of controversy, rather a sincere hater of it, but in the present instance he felt that there was no choice for him but to embark upon this perilous sea. This was the situation: For many years Calvinism had been undergoing a process of softening and abridgement in some of the New England churches. Since the beginning of the century, this process had become more frequent and conspicuous in its manifestations. It especially characterized some of the ablest ministers in and around Boston. A class was thus formed to which the name "Liberal Christians" was applied. The meaning of this term was simply that they were disposed to put a liberal construction on the Calvinistic creed. Among the members of this class there was no organized sympathy. The most of them were Arminians. A smaller majority were dissenters from the Trinitarian dogma. In regard to the rank of Jesus and the nature of the atonement, there was much less unanimity. Liberal Christian ministers exchanged pulpits freely with the so-called Orthodox, and united with them in all the ecclesiastical relations of the time. Presently some of the more rigid of the Orthodox party began to see that Liberal Christianity was silently but surely eating out the heart of Calvinism. The catastrophe would probably have come a few years sooner but for the war of 1812, which was of such absorbing interest that for the time the dangers of Calvinism were forgotten. But peace between America and Great Britain had hardly been proclaimed when war between Orthodoxy and Liberalism was declared. The declaration came from the Orthodox side,—an article in the Panoplist by one Evarts, written at the instance of Dr. Morse, its editor. The Panoplist had been started in 1805 to offset The Monthly Anthology, an organ of the liberal Anthology Club, which included so many of the best spirits in its membership that the Boston ladies never gave tea-parties on Anthology nights. Dr. Morse, of the Panoplist, is probably best known to the more venerable among you as the author of Morse's Geography, some sharp criticism of which he thought inspired by odium theologicum. The article in the Panoplist was a review of a book called American Unitarianism compiled by Dr. Morse from Belsham's Life of Lindsey, and made up, mainly, of letters to Lindsey, who was a leading English Unitarian, by Dr. Freeman, Buckminster, and others. Its aim was, in the first place, to identify the Liberal Christians of America with the English Unitarians; in the second place, to convict them of dishonesty in covertly teaching or hypocritically concealing their opinions; and, in the third place, to call upon all Orthodox Christians to come out from these Liberals, deny them the Christian name and any Christian fellowship. Channing replied to this article in a public letter. He showed that the majority of the Liberals were not in sympathy with the English Unitarians, but held his own exalted views of Christ. Still he allowed that there were humanitarians among them, and he claimed for these the Christian name and all the rights of Christian fellowship. But it was the second count in Dr. Morse's indictment which touched him to the quick, the charge of dishonesty and hypocrisy. Nothing was more characteristic of Channing than his self-respect. To have it allowed that he was honest seemed to him an insult hardly less pointed than the charge of dishonesty. "There is insolence," he said, "in this concession of honesty." What a commentary is here on the obsequious alacrity with which some of our modern Unitarians—"Channing Unitarians" they call themselves—snap at the crumbs of recognition which fall from evangelical tables! As if the applause of Orthodoxy and not its ban hinted at the divine approval! But this is a digression. Channing's disclaimer of dishonesty or hypocrisy was entirely rational. He and his co-religionists had only abstained from controversy, preaching not negatively but positively. But the event proved the mistakenness of the policy. In periods of transition, negation and affirmation must go hand in hand. A distinguished Boston minister said he was "mighty careful to tell no lies." He preached nothing he did not believe, not everything he did. Channing had done more than this. He had preached all that he believed; but he had not openly denied the things which he believed no longer. It was not dishonest; but it was not wise. The event established this. The negations had to come out. They always must come out. The experience of many generations is convincing that affirmation of the higher truth must be accompanied at every step with frank rejection of the lower; else the work is only half done; else an element of confusion is introduced into men's thoughts; else a premium is offered upon charges of dishonesty and hypocrisy, to repel which is not a pleasant task. Good friends, so help us God, we will deny the lower as undisguisedly as we affirm the higher truth.

As for the denial of the Christian name and Christian fellowship, Channing said that to him personally it would make no difference. He should still preach to those whom he best loved. But to the Church at large, to Christianity, the introduction of this narrow and exclusive spirit would make a world of difference, and he pleaded earnestly against it. You know his pleading was in vain. The controversy thus begun went on for several years. Scores of congregations were divided. The ministers of the two parties no longer found their way into each other's pulpits; and, as far as its opponents could accomplish it, Unitarianism was forced into the attitude of a sect.

The importance of Channing's contribution to this controversy was owing altogether to its weight, and not at all to its bulk. Three public letters and two mighty sermons, one at Jared Spark's ordination in Baltimore, and one at the dedication of the Second Unitarian Church in New York, with a few articles in the Examiner, and an "Election Sermon" in 1836, made up the amount of his direct contribution. And here, as always, his appeal was to reason and the moral sentiment. In the battle of texts into which the contest afterward degenerated, he took no part. There were those better fitted for it than he by taste and culture. Especially did Andrews Norton prove himself a foeman worthy of the sharpest and the bluest steel.

It is impossible to consider this controversy and not be impressed with the bad grace of those who, from the standpoint of Orthodoxy, charge Unitarianism with being a set of "pale negations," when Unitarianism was wholly positive until the acrimony of its assailants forced it to state the negative side of its opinions, as indeed it should have done. But the statement of its negative side did not make its positive side any less positive. In the Unitarian ranks there were no doubt some shallow pulpiteers who were content with mere denial of the doctrines of the Calvinistic creed. But Channing was not content with this, and in this respect he was only the first among many equals. He affirmed the infinite goodness of God, the dignity of human nature, the natural inspiration of the human soul. His opponents denied all this. On which side were the pale negations?

The intensity of Channing's labors was too much for such a delicate organism as that in which his soul was housed. He was prostrated by sickness. About sixty years ago, Orville Dewey—who lives to see his friend's centennial, although but fourteen years his junior—became his temporary assistant but found it hard to preach with Channing sitting behind him in the pulpit. It was said that though his text was "Forgetting the things that are behind," it was impossible for him to do so. In 1824, Ezra Stiles Gannett became Dr. Channing's permanent colleague, and brought an ample consecration to the place. He gave his son the name of Channing, and with the name he has the spirit, without which the name would be a mockery.

But even with this abridgement of his labors health did not return. As the years went by, his appearance in the pulpit became less and less frequent, and was on this account all the more highly prized. To be cut off from preaching was for him a heavy cross, but it was not without its compensations. It widened the circle of his influence. He found more time to enter into social and political questions, and not one of these failed of his scrutiny; and his written opinions on them as they then presented themselves make up a body of wisdom to which the modern reformer cannot go too frequently for suggestion, warning, inspiration. He came more and more to see that "the field is the world," that the Church does not exist for its own enlargement, but as a force to operate on the community. I know not who among us is not shamed by the persistency with which Channing brought his pulpit utterance to bear upon the social questions of his time; and, studying his life anew, I have resolved that I for one will not be so remiss in the future in this respect as I have been in the past.

My unecclesiastical hands have fondled the first bands he ever wore, at the preaching of his first public sermon, now so pathetic in their yellowness, though once as white as snow. But as time went on, he rejoiced to find himself growing "less ministerial and more manly." He no longer walked to church on Sunday in short clothes, with black silk stockings, gown, and bands, as he had done aforetime. He had served a stern apprenticeship in silence and comparative obscurity, but what he had done in darkness was now manifested in the light. His word became a power on both sides of the Atlantic. It was listened for in legislative halls. The leading statesmen of the time took counsel with this gentle peace-maker. No other man in the United States had such an influence. Consulted on all great questions, hearing the echoes of his words from the Alleghenies to the Alps, he was still not elated. His humility was fostered by his fame. When, from across the Atlantic, hands, calloused by the pick and trowel, wrote to thank him for his words, he said, "This is honor!" When humble people nearer home responded to his utterance, he said, "This is a thousand times better than fame." But generally he burned laudatory letters without reading them through, and employed a friend to cull for him the unfavorable criticisms of his reviewers and let the rest go by.

There was, however, small need for him to fear that too many kind things would be said of him. In the first years of his ministry his sermons were mainly of an abstract character, and men sometimes wished that he would be more practical. He knew that his abstractions were of all things the most practical. They were his premises. Men said they were as clear as day. Now then for the conclusions; now for the translation of the abstract into the concrete. The dignity of human nature; it was an axe laid at the root of all such evils as intemperance and slavery and war; it meant education; it meant better wages for mechanics and better opportunities for culture; it meant no more whipping in the navy, and great changes in prison discipline, and the abolition of the death penalty. And then his critics were less satisfied than ever. They said he had "gone into politics," that "he had better stick to his calling," and so on. This was the tragedy of Channing's life—his inability to carry his congregation with him in the work of practical Christianity. He had been too sanguine. He ought not to have expected that Boston conservatism would lay down its arms at once, entrenched as it was behind its cotton-bales and manufactories, with a whole forest of genealogical trees from behind which to pick off the advanced guard of freedom and humanity. He asked permission for the Anti-Slavery Society to meet in his church and was refused; and, as if to add insult to injury, the Colonization Society, a plaster on the nation's deadly wound, was allowed the use of the church immediately after. Charles Follen perished on a steamer's flaming deck one winter night. He was one of Channing's three most intimate and valued friends, and Channing asked permission for Samuel J. May to preach his funeral sermon in his church. And again, because Follen was an abolitionist, the men to whom Channing had given his heart's best blood for nearly forty years refused him; but their refusal marked the lowest depth of shame sounded by the pro-slavery Christianity of Boston. Imagination cannot picture any lower deep. But after all the kingdom came in Boston sooner than anywhere else, and through Channing's influence in no small degree.

Channing's relation to the early abolitionists is one of the most interesting episodes in his career. It was not wholly sympathetic, nor was it wholly just. He dwelt too much on what was incidental to the movement, not enough on its essential traits. Once when he complained to Samuel J. May of the harshness of the abolitionists, he was suddenly met by the demand, "Why, sir, have you not moved? Why have you not spoken?" It was like a bolt of thunder out of a cloudless sky, and Mr. May was almost overwhelmed with a sense of his temerity. But the great man, never so great as in his meekness, answered him, "I acknowledge the justice of your reproach; I have been silent too long." From this time forward, his criticism of the abolitionists became more sympathetic and more just. When Mr. May came to Boston as agent of the Anti Slavery Society, he at once invited him into his pulpit, a daring act which found no copyists among the other clergymen of Boston. When Lovejoy was murdered, Channing was the first to suggest an indignation meeting in Faneuil Hall, and the old cradle of liberty rocked again to the passionate music of his words. His last public utterance was on the 1st of August, 1842, the anniversary of the West India emancipation. He had never before arraigned the "peculiar institution" of the South so solemnly. One day last summer I walked five-and-thirty miles to the spot where this swan-song was sung, as to a sacred shrine. And as I sat among the quiet graves in the old church-yard,* it seemed to me that I could hear the pulses of that song re-echoed from the hills, which darkened down the valley under the deepening shadows of the falling night.

Channing's anti-slavery labors, though they were great, were but a humble fraction of his extra-ministerial activity. Or shall we say that he rightly apprehended the office of the minister as one maintained by an organized body of persons for the benefit of the community, not for their own benefit solely? I have no time to tell you how earnestly he labored in the cause of temperance, with a method whose fundamental seriousness rebukes the superficiality of the majority of temperance reformers unto this day; how he stood side by side with Pierpont in his fiery trial; how he worked for the reform of prison discipline; how he disputed the hangman's right to the criminal's body with the same earnestness which marked his dispute of the devil's right to his soul. "What, strike a man?" he said, and in one sentence summed up his objections to the punishment of seamen in the navy with the lash. All that is best in modern labor-reform was foreshadowed in his wise and temperate considerations.

The last years of Channing's life were very beautiful. Like Swedenborg's angels he grew younger all the time. "Why, Dr. Channing!" some one said to him after the downfall of the Bourbons in 1830, "you are the only young man I have met." "Always young for Liberty," he cried. Always hopeful, he was never so hopeful as in the closing years, and never so familiar, never so accessible. Men had been afraid of him. He was too earnest for them; too intense. His mind was always on the stretch. The circle of his intimate friends was very small and admitted no flatterers. Said his most intimate friend to a group of persons praising his transcendent holiness: "I believe Dr. Channing to be capable of virtue." "He has splendid talents," said Father Taylor. "What a pity that he has not been educated!" And Channing understood and prized the comment. He had not been educated in Father Taylor's way. He had never been to sea. He was not like Dr. Ripley "good at a fire." "A course of mobs," said Emerson, "made Wendell Phillips the best stump-speaker in America." Channing had not this training. Pierpont said, "Strip him of his protections and he would die." But his protections were the sluices that drained off his power. He came to see that it was so, to wish that he had lived a less fenced and sheltered and secluded life. He grew to the last more natural and spontaneous, giving his impulses freer play. Young, earnest, and enthusiastic souls made him their confident, and no one of these climbed his study stairs oftener than Theodore Parker, or prized the privilege so much. "I have found life an increasing good," he said. Asked his opinion of the happiest time of life, he answered, "About sixty," that being his own age. And so, guarded by reverence, embosomed in affection, he approached the parting of the ways. He died, looking eastward, October 2, 1842, what time the setting sun was touching all the hills and sky with purple and with gold.

The genius of Channing was preëminently moral. The moral principle—by this sign he conquered. Many have been greater in their intellect, in their imagination, in their emotional nature, in their scientific acquirements or there philosophical acumen. In the region of the moral sentiment I do not know where we shall look for a greater than Channing. I make no exceptions. His devotion to the principles of rectitude was simply absolute. I can imagine nothing more complete. And what he was he could communicate. His moral earnestness was contagious. Do not read his writings, I charge you, and especially do not read the memoirs of his life, if you do not wish to be made ashamed of your own imperfect, halting moralism. But if you dare be made ashamed of all that you have yet attained, dare be enticed, provoked, inspired to tasks of self-control and fellow-service more considerable than any you have yet attempted, then make his biography your breviary for a little time: it need not be for long.

In the old family Bible I have seen his name with the day and hour of his birth as his father's hand engrossed them, little thinking in what characters of living light the angel of history would one day blazon the name which he had written high up among the names of those who have been the greatest benefactors of the human race. The hundredth anniversary of that day and hour is close at hand. What is the verdict of the impartial years upon the work of Channing? How does he stand the awful test of time? The seed he planted has borne thirty, sixty, and a hundred fold. Much of his doctrinal teaching has been revised by subsequent developments of thought. But all that was highest, deepest, and most central in his affirmations has been expanded and confirmed. Our latest science and philosophy outrun his zeal for the divine perfection. His doctrine of the dignity of human nature suffers no diminution from the hypothesis of man's evolution from the lowest organisms. Nothing that is behind us takes from the glory of this present time, albeit all the long way that we have come is prophecy and pledge of the yet longer way we are to go. His doctrine of the right and duty of the freest thought upon the highest themes has the intelligence of every sect to-day enlisted under its capacious folds. Far be it from me, however, to suppose that all the harvests that are whitening the land to-day come from his sowing. "The field is the world," and there have been many laborers. Think not he would have had it otherwise. Think not that it would trouble him that not a hundredth part of all our modern liberalism is snugly sheltered in the Unitarian fold. Little he cared,

"So the right word was said
And life the sweeter made,"

what uniform the speaker wore, and whether he said sibboleth or sibboleth. Ernest Renan, by invitation of Dean Stanley, is about to deliver a course of lectures on Christianity in Westminster Abbey! It is a sign of the times. Channing's frail body lies mouldering in the ground; his soul is marching on.

O friends, let us abandon ourselves without reserve to the guidance of that spirit of truth to whose promptings he was never disobedient! Let us

"arise and pay
To Freedom and to him our debts
By following where he leads the way."

WILLIAM KINGDON CLIFFORD.

William Kingdon Clifford died last March in the Island of Madeira, at the early age of thirty-three, the victim, apparently, of what is called "overwork,"—that is, of work long pursued in utter disregard of the necessary limitations and imperative requirements of the human system. Never, perhaps, has the demon of overwork carried off a more illustrious victim. Never, perhaps, has it been more strikingly shown of how little avail is the mere knowledge of hygiene in ensuring obedience to its precepts. No one understood better than Clifford what are popularly known as the laws of health; no one had fathomed more deeply or discussed more lucidly the dependence of the mind upon the body; no one in our time has been better able to apply in the physiological domain the most accurate and definite conceptions of the relations of energy to work. Yet, from all I have been able to learn regarding Clifford's intellectual life, it would seem to have been at all times carried on with an intensely passionate, irrepressible zeal, as regardless of all physical laws as if the mind were not merely a distinct but an independent entity, unhampered even during the present life by physical conditions.

I cite this singular discrepancy between knowledge and practice on account of its intrinsic interest, not in reproof of the course of one whose loss I mourn as that of a friend. Admitting, with Mr. Spencer, that one is morally bound so to treat the body as not "in any way to diminish the fulness or vigor of its vitality," one sees at the same time that, as the world is now constituted, emergencies often arise which subordinate to higher duties the duty of keeping one's self well. To save human life, I may jump into a freezing river, though an ice-water bath be not recommended by hygienic advisers. So one sympathizes with the heroic sense of duty which often leads the scholar to toil early and late, and long after weariness has set in, in the performance of work which is expected of him,—though in many cases the work itself may be obscure in fame and the taskmaster thankless and treacherous. For my own part, I sympathize keenly, too, with a very different feeling,—with that glorious exuberance of vital energy which in youthful days leads one far on into the night, working with a kind of sacred fury to seize and secure the sudden glimpses of the fairyland of scientific truth or literary beauty ere drowsy memory shall let them slip and fade away. I think it very likely that in many such cases a systematic self-repression, in deference to hygienic considerations, might be just enough to clip down the brilliant discoverer or original thinker into a mere scientific or literary prig. The secrets of Nature and of Art are not to be won without struggles; and in the serene regions of philosophic meditation, no less than in the turmoil of practical life, the highest results are often accomplished by those who work with desperate energy, quite regardless of self. Generous feelings of this sort have no doubt frequently urged great thinkers, like Clifford, fatally to overtask their physical resources; and such mistakes are peculiarly facilitated by the accommodating disposition of that faithful servant, the brain, which in men of highly-strung nervous temperament is but too ready to keep at its work without protest, as a thoroughbred horse will run till it drops. . . .

Materialists talk about "ideas" as "originating" in the brain; and people generally have become so far impressed with the notion that mental states are caused by physical actions on the nervous system, that when you begin to explain to them the wonderfully minute correlations between psychical action and brain-action which modern psychology is disclosing, they immediately take fright and think you are "explaining away" the mind altogether. They think that in order to refute materialism it is necessary to deny that associations of ideas occur simultaneously with the passage of waves of molecular motion from one cell to another in the gray surface of the brain. I wonder it never occurs to them that they might more summarily effect their purpose by denying, once for all, that the brain has anything whatever to do with mind, or has any further function than that of a balance wheel or "governor" for regulating the motions of the viscera! But in point of fact their alarm is altogether groundless.—John Fiske in International Review for January, 1880.

M. RENAN.

M. Renan starts on Monday for London to deliver four lectures on the influence of Rome on the early Christian churches. In the course of the winter, I have several times conversed with this accomplished writer and profoundly religious man. The author of the Life of Jesus always speaks with affectionate reverence of the church in which he was brought up. Nevertheless, it appears to me that he has forever quitted Romanism. M. Renan is suffering from acute rheumatism. The last time I saw him his arm was in a sling, and the sharp pains and swellings in the wrist-joint and fingers were accompanied by fever, from which he has never been entirely free since he was in the Holy Land. Within the last year, he has quitted his well-known dwelling in the Rue St. Guillaume, and is now living on the first floor of an old house in the Rue Tournon, in the immediate vicinity of the Luxembourg, and between a vast and silent courtyard and a shady garden. The ceilings are high pitched and the rooms spacious. Everywhere, except in the salon, the walls are hidden with books. There they are adorned with paintings by the illustrious Ary Scheffer, Madame Renan's uncle, and by her father, Henri Scheffer, the painter of the arrest of Charlotte Corday, which for many years was in the Luxembourg, and now adorns the cabinet of M. Cocheret. M. Renan works in a roomy chamber between a fireplace, in which at all seasons big logs burn, and a window commanding a view of the garden. Thick carpets are laid down on the floor, and on the big tables and desks there is a litter of books and papers with which tidy maid-servants never interfere.—London News.

SHE WAS FIVE years old, looking out of a window of a car that was being whirled through the kitchen-garden region of New Jersey, anxious to be informed of the character of the growing crops. Said her father: "That field contains sweet potatoes; that one, beans; the other, cabbage." "Cabbage," quoth the five-year-old. "Yes, cabbage." "Well, where is the corn beef?"

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 24.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

C. C. Stearns, $3.20; Dr. T. W. Johnson, $3; G. R. Taber & Co., $20.74; Chas. Richardson, $3.20; Rev. Geo. Batchelor, $3.20; Nathaniel Allen, $3.20; Mrs. Eliza W. Leggett, $4; Chas. Ellershaw, $4; Geo. W. Mead, $3.20; Miss T. F. Von Arnim, $3.20; Chas. H. True, $3.02.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

*In Lenox, Mass. "The loveliest in the world," says Fanny Kemble.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 29, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns, and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged April 15.....	$2,081.00
HENRY OBERMEYER, New York.....	1.00
A. E. KARBELSON, " ".....	1.00
I. TAUSIG, " ".....	1.00
Dr. FRIEDENBURG, " ".....	2.00
CHAS. PARTRIDGE, " ".....	1.00
WM. KILLIAN, " ".....	1.00
THEODORE KILIAN, " ".....	1.00
P. W. MOELER, " ".....	1.00
S. F. BARSTEN, " ".....	1.00
Col. C. B. HACKLEY, " ".....	4.00
Dr. J. W. LYON, " ".....	1.00
Prof. A. WERNER, " ".....	5.00
ADOLPH PESTER, " ".....	1.00
EMANUEL EISING, " ".....	1.00
MAX REIF, " ".....	1.00
JOHN FLOYD, " ".....	1.00
M. MAHN, " ".....	1.00
EMIL L. BOAS, " ".....	5.00
E. H. MACHIN, " ".....	1.00
Mrs. E. H. MACHIN, " ".....	1.00
Dr. E. HOBER, " ".....	1.00
V. H. SEAMAN, " ".....	1.00
SIGMOND GOGG, " ".....	1.00
A. J. S. WEISE, " ".....	2.00
Dr. S. KOHN, " ".....	1.00
H. KEMBAL, " ".....	1.00
W. L. TAYLOR, " ".....	5.00
THEO. WEHLE, " ".....	2.00
CHAS. HASKELL, " ".....	1.00
EDWARD GROSSMAN, " ".....	5.00
Total.....	$2,132.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

WESTERN UNITARIANISM.

The "rejected stone" of the National Unitarian Conference at Syracuse, in 1866, became, it appears, the "head of the corner" of the Michigan Unitarian Conference in 1878. The National Conference rejected simple "truth, righteousness, and love" as its foundation, and planted itself on an avowal of allegiance to the "Lord Jesus Christ"; the Michigan Conference has planted itself on that very "truth, righteousness, and love" which was voted down at Syracuse by a two-thirds majority. Verily, the world does move!

The subjoined circulars, just received, will explain the present catholic attitude of Western Unitarianism, as compared with the narrow and dogmatic attitude taken by the Unitarian denomination as an organized national whole. That the former should continue to submit itself to the latter,—that it should still consent to wear before the nation the yoke of that "Lordship" dogma which it has discarded before its own local constituency,—would be to us a cause of unbounded amazement, had we not long since learned that logical inconsistency is a fault which sits very lightly on most consciences. Small indeed is the number of people in this world who are more concerned to square their practical action with clearly seen and deliberately approved principles, than they are to avoid the unpleasant ruptures and antagonisms forced upon all who are incapable of surrendering or compromising those principles in real life. It is not an agreeable, not a profitable, not always a peaceful destiny that is pressed upon the uncompromising adherents of ideas. Once we used to be indignant at the countless evasions of consistency between avowed principles and practical conduct, on the part of religious people; but now we experience less indignation than amused pity at this everlastingly recurring spectacle. For instance, Unitarians like the good Mr. Donthit sometimes wax virtuously hot over the contrast between Orthodox practice and Orthodox professions; but Unitarians themselves are just as inconsistent. And those who pique themselves on their "liberalism" are frequently no less so. It sometimes requires great clearness of head to discern what a noble consistency between principle and practice demands; and it often requires tremendous boldness of heart, coupled with immense force of will, to go and do just that. We do not think "liberals" at all superior to the Orthodox or the Unitarians in this respect; riding two horses is quite as common among themselves as among those they are so quick to criticize. Common, however, as is the exhibition of great principles chopped and lopped to fit petty exigencies, and impossible as it is to live in a state of chronic indignation over such outrages, we confess to a great glow of admiration when some unconquerable soul exhibits that rare and splendid spectacle of non-conformity for conscience' sake. And if the Michigan Unitarian Conference, out of intelligent and reverent fidelity to the grand truths of their own "platform," should convert its now "glittering generalities" into a lustrious deed, by voting unanimously no longer to stultify those truths by acting under a National Conference which has deliberately denied and rejected them, it would be impossible not to feel a thrill of joy at so signal a triumph of the grand logic of conscience over petty denominational policy. But we expect no such phenomenal outburst of heroism in any ecclesiastical quarter,—no, not even in "Liberal Christianity." We should be as much surprised by it as we should be if the National Liberal League, now ridden by bad men for bad purposes and plunged by them into a ruinous policy in flagrant contradiction to the noble objects of its own Constitution, should rise in just wrath, break the yoke of the free-love ring, and declare itself in favor of "reform" rather than of "repeal." Such things might happen in the Utopia of our early dreams; they seldom occur in the world of triumphant shams and cowardly surrenders which forces itself upon the recognition of our maturer years. Let all who prize truth and valor celebrate a jubilee when they do occur!

The circulars alluded to are these:—

Platform of the Michigan Unitarian Conference,

ADOPTED OCTOBER 10, 1878.

Whereas, "We are persuaded that the truth on all subjects, as fast as it becomes known to us, is the sole and sufficient authority for all human belief; that justice is the certain and practicable law of all human conduct; that love is the highest and most effective temper of the human spirit"; and

Whereas, We desire to rally the liberal minds of Michigan around this common centre; therefore,

Resolved, That the Michigan Unitarian Conference conditions its fellowship on no dogmatic tests, but welcomes all thereto who desire to work with it in advancing the kingdom of truth and righteousness and love.

OFFICERS OF M. U. C., 1880.

Prof. CHAS. E. GREENE, President, Ann Arbor.
J. N. PARDEE, Secretary, Charlotte.
J. C. RICHARDSON, Treasurer, Jackson.

Michigan Unitarian Conference.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., April 21, 1880.

The semi-annual meeting of the Michigan Unitarian Conference will be held at Kalamazoo, May 17, 18, and 19. The opening sermon will be preached Monday evening, by Rev. T. B. Forbush, of Detroit.

The exercises will consist of sermons, essays, and discussions on living questions. The Unitarian Society of Kalamazoo extends the hospitality of its homes to visitors.

"We condition our fellowship on no dogmatic tests, but welcome all who desire to work with us in advancing the kingdom of truth and righteousness and love." Please extend this invitation to the friends of "freedom, fellowship, and character in religion, in your vicinity."

Fraternally yours,

J. N. PARDEE, Secretary.

CHRISTIANIZING THE CAPITOL.

General A. J. Warner, member of Congress from Ohio, and an occasional contributor to THE INDEX, has kindly sent us a House copy of the following curious and astonishing bill, which was introduced by Mr. Downey in the House of Representatives on April 12, read twice, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed:—

A BILL

PROVIDING FOR CERTAIN PAINTINGS ON THE WALLS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL.

Whereas, The people of the United States are a Christian people and firmly believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary; suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried; he descended into hell, the third day he rose from the dead; he ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead; and believe in the Holy Ghost, the holy catholic church, the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting. Amen. Therefore

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, to commemorate in suitable paintings by the great living artists of this century upon the walls of the National Capitol the birth, life, and death of our Saviour Jesus Christ, as told in the four gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

Here is a new plan for Christianizing this wretchedly pagan republic. Mr. Downey wants to get Congress solemnly to adopt the Apostles' Creed as that of the United States, and to incorporate it as such in the United States Statute Book! And, still further to carry out the programme of the Christianizers of the Constitution, he desires to appropriate half a million dollars of the people's money to the scheme of setting forth the Christian Mythology in a series of great paintings on the walls of the National Capitol!

It is perhaps incredible that such a bill should pass Congress. But the proposition itself shows how confused are the popular notions respecting Church and State. Christianity is the religion of the Christian Church; it is not the religion of the United States. Yet the statement that "the United States are a Christian people" is constantly made and seldom challenged; and there are various serious inconsistencies with the letter and spirit of the Constitution in the administration of the government which ought to induce the people to protect their own religious equality by adopting the Constitutional Amendment kept standing on our first page. Such outrageously brazen attempts as this of Mr. Downey to foist the Apostles' Creed upon the nation will continue to be made, and may even in time succeed (for who dares to reckon on the action of Congress nowadays?), so long as the least legal countenance is given to the claim that "Christianity is the religion of the United States." The people need to be educated in this matter. They are woefully ignorant now concerning it; and this ignorance constitutes a great and grave peril to the national future. It is within the power of demagogues at any time, by adroitly making use of this ignorance, to precipitate a religious quarrel of vast dimensions and of painfully uncertain issue. The demoralization of the National Liberal League, which was originally projected and created as a great educational influence in behalf of secular government, and its perversion by unprincipled free-love fanatics to objects unworthy of the sympathy of true liberals, may yet prove to be a national calamity. Whether Mr. Downey is a shrewd religious demagogue or only a blundering religious enthusiast, remains to be seen; but his appearance under either character in the halls of Congress is an unhealthy symptom. He and his scheme will both bear watching.

IS FREE RELIGION "RELIGION"?

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

If you agree with me that the following may be of general interest to the friends of greater activity in the line of Free Religious work, please give it a place in THE INDEX. As the matter fully explains itself, I need not add any further preliminary word.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY.

PROVIDENCE, April 16, 1880.

To the Honorable Committee of the Judiciary of the Senate:

GENTLEMEN:—

The undersigned, in behalf and by instructions of the Free Religious Society of Providence, respectfully ask for a favorable report upon the bill in Amendment of Section 7, Chapter 149, of the General Statutes concerning the parties who may join persons in marriage, now in your hands, either in its present form, or with such amendment as, while meeting any possible objections on your part, shall secure to us the right we claim, and beg leave to state the following facts:—

1st. The Free Religious Society of Providence was organized in February, 1874. It is therefore at this date a little more than six years old.

2d. It at that time adopted a Constitution, the preamble and first three articles of which read as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

Believing that a reasonable and natural religion finds its best and truest expression in the physical, intellectual, and spiritual development of mankind, we organize in accordance with the following

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I. Name.—This society shall be called the Free Religious Society of Providence.

ARTICLE II. Object.—Its object is to promote the practice of virtue, the study of truth, and the fraternity of man.

ARTICLE III. Opinions.—Membership in this society shall leave each individual responsible for his opinions to himself alone, and affect in no respect his relations to other societies; and nothing in the name or constitution of the society shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief; or as defining the position of the society, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief; or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being.

It appears by the foregoing that we have claimed from the first, as we now claim, to be a Religious Society, although not adopting the creeds and formulas usually accepted by the church.

3d. The society held regular Sunday meetings from the time of its organization until the summer vacation of 1878, which were addressed by various speakers, representing what are known as the Free Religious, the Unitarian, and other liberal schools of thought.

4th. On the first Sunday of October, 1878, with a view to enlarging its operations, it ordained a minister at public services held in Barney's (now Beethoven) Hall, a full report of which was published in the Providence Journal of October 12, 1878, a copy of which is herewith placed at the disposal of the committee. The form of this ordination was as follows:—

The President of the Society said:—

"Mr. Frederic A. Hinckley: I am instructed by the Free Religious Society of Providence officially to recognize you as our resident minister; and we therefore ordain and install you as such, in accordance with the principles and usage of our religious fellowship."

To which the resident minister replied, accepting and assuming the trust.

5th. On Sunday, October 13, 1878, the society organized a Sunday School, called the Free Religious School, which has held and is still holding a session each Sunday.

6th. In view of the foregoing facts, we claim that we have established our honest intention to maintain what to us is a religious organization, that we have or should have the same rights under the law to ordain a minister in our own way that other religious societies have, and that our minister when once thus ordained has or should have the same rights under the law which other clergymen have, including the right to join parties in marriage.

But doubts have been raised as to the rights of our resident minister, under Section 7, Chapter 149, of the General Statutes, which says that any ordained minister or elder of any religious denomination who shall be domiciled in this State and either Justice of the Supreme Court may join persons in marriage in any town of the State.

The question raised is a twofold one: 1st. Was our form of ordination sufficient? 2d. Are we a religious society within the meaning of the statute?

Our answer to both these points was and is, Yes; but the doubt raised worked a practical denial of the right involved, for no parties about to be married would or should take the risk of having the form illegal, and no parties to a marriage would or should be willing to make theirs a test case which might be carried before the courts.

We were driven therefore to the necessity, in maintaining what we deemed our rights as a religious society, either of appealing to the General Assembly for further legislation, or to the Supreme Court for construction of the statute, which we were advised they would be authorized to give under the act entitled an Act to further regulate Proceedings in Court and to facilitate the Administration of Justice.

Believing that the statute was sufficiently broad to cover our case, we chose the latter course, and appealed to the Supreme Court.

In response to this appeal, we received the following:—

KINGSTON, Jan. 5, 1880.

REV. MR. HINCKLEY:

Dear Sir,—In relation to your request for a construction of the law as to marriage, we should have no hesitation in saying that no particular form of ordination is necessary, but there are some words of more doubtful construction; and as, in the present form of application, our decision would have no binding effect, we think it might be best to apply to the Legislature whose session is now so near.

(Signed) Yours truly,

E. R. POTTER.

From the above, it was at once apparent that our only relief must come from the General Assembly, and so at our suggestion the bill now before you was introduced and passed in the House. In regard to it, allow us to say that we do not care as to its precise form, least of all do we desire to impair in any way the sanctity of marriage: we simply claim the right to define for ourselves what constitutes religion, and having formed a religious society, ordained a minister, and shown our evident honest intent to continue our work as we have begun, we claim to have the same rights under the law that other religious societies have, and that all doubts on this question which may have arisen should be removed by the General Assembly, the only body which under all the circumstances of the case can remove them. Adopt such amendment to the law as you please, gentlemen, but do not decline to render us this simple act of justice. That is what we seek as a religious society at your hands, and we do not believe the Commonwealth of Roger Williams can understandingly say no to our appeal.

(Signed)

ARNOLD B. CHACE, Pres.,
J. D. FROST, Vice-Pres.,
SARAH E. REXFORD, Sec.,
GEORGE LEWIS, Treas.,
ANNA E. ALDRICH,
RACHEL E. FRYE,
WILLIAM BARKER,
FRANCES C. FROST,
MARY R. BALLOU,
B. A. BALLOU,
ELIZABETH B. CHACE,

Ex. Com.

PROVIDENCE, April 14, 1880.

The foregoing petition was presented by the resident minister, who further explained to the committee the aims and purposes of the society.

The result will appear from the following report of proceedings in the Senate, taken from the Providence papers:—

Mr. Tillinghast, from the committee on the judiciary, reported back House amendment to Section 7, Chapter 149, of the General Statutes, recommending non-concurrence. The amendment declared that the words "ordained minister or elder" in Section 7, Chapter 149, are hereby declared to include a stated preacher of any religious association. The majority of the committee recommend non-concurrence.

The Governor asked the chairman of the committee to explain the matter.

Mr. Tillinghast replied he didn't think he could, as he didn't know what the act means, but the moving party in the matter in favor of a change is a society in this city, calling themselves the Free Religious Society of Providence. This society is anxious that the man whom they see fit to call their minister can join people in marriage the same as other ministers. Mr. Tillinghast read from the preamble and constitution of the society, showing that the corner-stone of the organization is that man is responsible to himself alone. Continuing his remarks, the Senator said he believed that marriages were solemnized with too little ceremony now, and he would be in favor of going back to the law of 1822 and 1844, requiring the banns to be published,—in favor of throwing more restrictions around the performance of this solemn duty. It is altogether too easy to obtain a person to join people in marriage, and instead of making it easier the State should throw more restrictions around it.

Mr. Cross, of Westerly, moved the indefinite postponement of the whole matter.

Mr. Potter was not a little surprised at the position taken by the Senator from Pawtucket (Mr. Tillinghast). This religious denomination is composed of the most respectable people: they are exceptionally intelligent people. It would be foreign to discuss whether they are a religious denomination or not, and he did not think it was the duty of the State to inquire what men's religious opinions were before granting them the rites of marriage.

Mr. Tillinghast inquired if it would be improper to question the validity of conferring such privilege on the president of a boating club.

Mr. Potter said they were dodging the whole question.

Mr. Tillinghast said that from the statement of the minister of the society that the boat club would have as much rights in the premises as the Free Religious Society.

Mr. Dyer said this was the first religious society he ever heard of that didn't worship anything.

Mr. Tillinghast read from the ordination address of the minister of the society, showing he said that everything we held sacred is a sham and a lie. This belief strikes at the fundamental doctrines which we cherish and hold dear as a people. But, while he did not question the right to holding the belief, he did seriously question the expediency of this General Assembly adopting any such plan as this.

Mr. Tobey remarked that the minister before the committee said he believed in God.

Mr. Smith, of Barrington, said he did in a certain sense, but at the time remarked that people might differ as to what was God.

Mr. Tillinghast believed that so long as we keep God in the Constitution we must have some regard to this and to the laws which we make.

The motion to indefinitely postpone the whole matter was passed.

And so one State has undertaken to define religion in so far as to say that no society is a religious society in the eye of the law, unless as a society it professes a belief in a personal God.

F. A. H.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S REPLY.

The Editor of THE INDEX requests me to answer publicly certain questions in regard to the National Liberal League. I am quite willing to do so to the best of my ability.

"1. Did not the National Liberal League at Syracuse reject one board of directors because they were opposed to repeal, and elect another board of directors because they were in favor of repeal, reelecting the only member of the old board who was in favor of repeal?"

Yes.

"2. Did not the League at Cincinnati reelect the same board elected at Syracuse?"

Yes.

"3. Did not the League at Cincinnati pass resolutions favoring 'such postal laws as will allow the free transportation through the mails of the United States of ALL BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND PAPERS,' and that without making ANY EXCEPTION WHATSOEVER?"

The language above quoted from one of the resolutions, rigidly construed, without reference to any explanatory facts, would seem to imply what the editor of THE INDEX claims; but, considered in connection with the other two resolutions adopted at the same time, and with reference to the views on this subject of Col. Ingersoll who wrote them, and of opponents of repeal who favored them in the Convention, and judged by what I believe they were intended to express and were understood to express, both by the friends of repeal and the friends of reform who voted for them, I do not think they commit the National Liberal League to the policy of repeal. I will quote the three resolutions adopted by the League at Cincinnati:—

Resolved, That we are in favor of such postal laws as will allow the free transportation through the mails of the United States of all books, pamphlets, and papers, irrespective of the religious, irreligious, political, and scientific views they may contain, so that the literature of science may be placed upon an equality with that of superstition.

Resolved, That we are utterly opposed to the dissemination, through the mails, or by any other means, of obscene literature, whether "inspired" or "uninspired," and hold in measureless contempt its authors and disseminators.

Resolved, That we call upon the Christian world to expurge from the so-called "sacred" Bible every passage that cannot be read without covering the cheek of modesty with the blush of shame; and, until such passages are expurged, we demand that the laws against the dissemination of obscene literature be impartially enforced.

According to the report of the Convention now before me, these resolutions were submitted by Mr. R. C. Spencer, of Milwaukee, after he had made a speech in which, referring to the Syracuse Convention, he said: "The founder and father of this organization also withdrew in consequence of the proceedings which were had at that time. I am frank to say I am in sympathy with the action of that gentleman. I think the act of Congress is in the main a just and wise law."

After these resolutions had been adopted, Mr. Wakeman, one of the strongest advocates of repeal, plainly manifested his dissatisfaction with the resolutions. He said:—

"But two wrongs do not make a right. A prosecution by the United States against the Bible, if it ever comes, will not justify a federal prosecution against Mr. Heywood's pamphlet. You have properly denounced obscenity in every form and everywhere, whether inspired or uninspired, but many liberals now know that it makes all the difference in the world to our liberties whether obscenity of any kind is to be suppressed by the State, common law, and municipal authorities, as hitherto has been done, or whether the post offices and the federal government are to be prostituted and given unconstitutional and unlimited criminal jurisdiction under that pretence. These questions may be considered at another time, but hardly again at this Congress, for greater and more pressing issues are before us."

The first resolution is certainly not as carefully worded as the Editor of THE INDEX is accustomed to express himself; but, if we can get at its real meaning, we should not be too exacting as to the phraseology. The words I have italicized indicate, I believe, what was in the writer's mind. The third resolution demands that, until objectionable passages are expurgated from the Bible, "the laws against the dissemination of obscene literature be impartially enforced," which still further indicates that the first resolution does not, interpreted so as to give its real meaning, favor the transportation through the mails of indecent literature. And when we consider that Col. Ingersoll, who wrote the resolutions, is opposed to the repeal of the United States postal laws against obscenity,—that Mr. Spencer, who submitted the resolutions, is not only opposed to the postal laws, but applauded the action of the minority at Syracuse,—and that the only word of dissatisfaction with the resolutions after their adoption came from the repeal party,—it seems extremely improbable that the resolutions were intended or understood to favor repeal. The repeal party have never been satisfied with the resolutions, and, so far as I have been able to learn, all the prominent advocates of repeal regard the resolutions as a surrender of their position, which however they hope to regain at some future time,—a hope that never will be realized.

"4. Do not these three facts prove beyond cavil that the National Liberal League, as an organized body, demands free circulation through the mails for all literature whatever, including the foulest and the worst?"

If my answer to the third question is correct, the "three facts" are reduced to two, and, in spite of them, the National Liberal League, even though its board of directors are in favor of repeal, has declared in favor of postal laws that will allow the free transportation through the mails of books irrespective of the views they contain, "so that the literature of science may be placed upon an equality with that of superstition"; has denounced the dissemination of obscene literature through the mails, or by other means, and expressed contempt for its authors and disseminators; and demanded "that the laws against the dissemination of obscene literature be impartially enforced." The language of the resolutions, the first and third especially, is not very compact or precise, and the reference to the Bible was perhaps intended, and probably had the effect, to divert attention from the real issue between the repeal and the reform party in the Convention; yet I cannot see how these resolutions, fairly construed, sustain the claim that the League "demands free circulation through the mails for all literature whatever, including the foulest and the worst."

I recognize the ability of the Editor of THE INDEX, and none can more admire the independence, directness, and clearness with which he usually maintains his own views, and criticises the positions of those from whom he differs. But I nevertheless think he takes an erroneous view of the resolutions given above, and he will doubtless remember that I so expressed myself in conversation with him when the report of the proceedings of the Convention of the National Liberal League held at Cincinnati was first received, before his criticism of its action had appeared in THE INDEX.

In saying that it is not true that those in favor of the repeal of the so-called Comstock law are in favor of the circulation of obscenity, I did not intimate that the Editor of THE INDEX had so stated. My criticism was directed against the charge of Joseph Cook and others who had so represented. B. F. U.

[Mr. Underwood has probably said the utmost that can be said in defence of his position. It is not from any want of ability, but from the obstinacy of the facts, if he fails to convince. After all that is or can be argued, it remains true that the resolutions actually call for freedom of transportation for all books, pamphlets, and papers without exception; and it is, in our opinion, quite futile to argue that the League meant the exact opposite of what it voted. The report referred to states that it was Col. Ingersoll, not Mr. Spencer, who reported the resolutions; and Col. Ingersoll is not so verdant as to be ignorant of the force of his own words. Moreover, the members of the League are far too sensitive on this subject to vote one thing when they mean another; the really decisive facts, contained in the story of the preceding year or two, are totally omitted by Mr. Underwood. The verdict of all who consider the action of the Cincinnati Congress in the light of all those facts cannot be reversed now, but will remain unshaken, to the effect that the League voted for repeal, but in a manner so artful as to throw dust into the eyes of the public and deceive those who, like Mr. Underwood, are reluctant to take that ground. The whole subject has grown so tiresome that we gladly drop it. Mr. Underwood's eyes will yet, we believe, be opened to the real character of the men whom he now thinks so "childlike and bland."—ED.]

PERSONAL ITEMS.

DR. SCHLIEHMANN is a short man with bald head and round face.

JOHN SINEY, a prominent labor agitator, recently died at St. Clair, Pa.

THE MOTHER of John G. Saxe, the poet, died in Vermont, a few days since, in the ninety-first year of her age.

ARTEMAS WARD once commenced a lecture by saying: "Ladies and gentlemen, I possess a gigantic intellect, but I haven't it with me."

THE AIM of the Whittaker investigation at West Point seems to be to prove the colored cadet a wise-acre, or worse, rather than to reach the real facts of the case.

WASHINGTON IRVING's proper title, at twenty-five years of age, was "attorney at law." How strangely it would sound now, if seriously applied in the face of his history!

BRET HARTE has been promoted from the obscure and trifling office of commercial agent at Crefeld, Germany, to that of consul at Glasgow, Scotland, a place worth $3,000 a year.

CAPTAIN BELKNAP of the United States ship Tuscarora has made the deepest sea measurement on record. In the North Pacific Ocean, he reached the amazing depth of nearly five and a quarter miles.

LUBKE, the author of the well-known work on Art, is a Stuttgarter, and a man of about sixty-five, of handsome person, courtly manners, and an attractive countenance, framed with white hair and beard.

LADY CHARLOTTE BACON, one of the famous beauties of London of the early part of the century, to whom Byron refers in the poem of Ianthe, which forms the prelude to Childe Harold, has just died in London.

THOMAS HUGHES has been saying some very pleasant things about Mr. Lowell, our new minister to England. The Biglow Papers, thinks Mr. Hughes, did more to spread sound views on the slavery question than any other influence that could be named.

LEWIS G. JAMES, whose intelligent and critical papers upon the origin and developments of primitive religious faiths have attracted much attention, read his essay on "Persian Influence upon Judaism and Christianity" on a recent Sunday before the Liberal League of Newark, N.J., with flattering commendations.

REV. HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET, the well-known colored preacher of New York, lies seriously ill at his residence in that city, from the effects of a recent apoplectic fit. His sick-room is cheered with profuse offerings of flowers and numerous expressions of sympathy and affection from his people, among whom he is greatly beloved and has labored with faithful devotion for many years.

D. M. BENNETT, whose term of imprisonment expires in a few days, is to receive a public reception on his release, by the friends of a "go-as-you-please morality." This is, of course, perfectly consistent. As Mr. Bennett has been proved guilty, by his own letters, of having attempted the crime of seduction, it would be interesting to know whether this is included in his claims to the proposed honors.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY, of the Free Religious Society of Providence, occupied Prof. Adler's place on the platform of Chickering Hall, Sunday before last. It was a rather hazardous position for a speaker who was comparatively unknown to his audience. But Mr. Hinckley at once won the sympathy of his hearers, and sustained their clearly manifested interest and attention to the close of his discourse, which was greeted with hearty applause. The theme was "Sentiment in Religion."

FOREIGN.

M. RENAN has been lecturing at the Royal Institute, London, on "Marcus Aurelius."

THE PROSECUTION of Mr. Mackonochie, the English ritualist, has cost a round $60,000.

THE GENEVA municipality has voted fifty thousand lire for the erection of a statue of Victor Emmanuel in that town.

A MONUMENT to Couture, the artist, has just been erected at Père-la-Chaise. It is a pedestal of black marble bearing a bust of the painter executed in 1848 by Clesinger.

THE FOUNDERS of the Catholic University at Angers, France, have issued a circular urging the clergy and laity to continue their support, in view of the alarming progress of theism and materialism.

HOLY WEEK in Rome was marked by a larger attendance of foreigners than usual. All the hotels were full. Five hundred pilgrims came from France on March 23, and five hundred others on the 25th.

THE FIFTH annual meeting of the Sunday Society was held last month, in London. The report for the past year presented a satisfactory aspect, and was unanimously approved. The members were congratulated upon the fact that everything went to show that museums, art galleries, libraries, and public gardens would soon be opened to the people on Sundays.

EAST OF THE River Jordan there is an Arab tribe which has embraced the Catholic faith and is ministered unto by a native Italian priest. These Arabs wander about from place to place with their flocks of sheep, and when their tent is pitched in any place a temporary building to serve as a church is put up. Other Arab tribes, it is said, are disposed to follow this example.

COLONEL GORDON has received a letter from one of his late officers in Abyssinia, from which the following is an extract: "I feel bound to tell your excellency that amongst many horrible things that I see here every day, I have just beheld one which goes to my very heart. Picture to yourself, excellency, that I have just seen arrive from Ras-Adal, of the Godjam province, which lies to the south-west of this place, and is under the rule of King John, a caravan of about two hundred boys and girls, of the ages of eight to sixteen years, who have been received by Ras-Adal as payment of the taxes imposed upon the recently conquered Gallas tribes. Those poor children have been sent by Ras-Adal as a payment to King John for taxes due from the Godjam province, and the King has bestowed them in payment to his various chieftains, by whom they are treated worse than the very donkeys in our country."

ON SUNDAY week the grand Sala Ducale of the Vatican was thronged by a gathering of at least four thousand persons, nearly all of whom were "doctors of philosophy and cultivators and encouragers of science," assembled from all the regions of the earth to pay their respects to Pope Leo XIII. Surrounded by members of the Sacred College, his Holiness was addressed in Latin by Monsignor Triperio, and the Pope delivered an extempore reply in the same language, speaking with ease and fluency for about twenty minutes. In this address the successor of Peter "dwelt," says the Times, "upon the importance of the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas, and especially on its great utility as a means of combating the scepticism of the present century. He pointed out that it was not opposed to the progress of natural science. Those were in error who, without having studied it, slighted that philosophy which constituted the glory of the Christian centuries." There can, we think, be little doubt that Pope Leo's policy of combating modern scepticism on its own ground is wiser and more creditable than his predecessor's habit of anathematizing it. Our knowledge of the Summa of the "Angelic Doctor" is somewhat rusty; but if the Church's warriors are about to use it for their armoury, there are many of their natural antagonists able to meet them with their own weapons.—Secular Review.

A CORRESPONDENT of the London Echo thus describes Herbert Gladstone who has just been called into public life by the elections in England: "Mr. Herbert John Gladstone is the fourth son of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and was educated, as his illustrious father before him, at Eton. Thence he went to University College, Oxford, taking classical honors in moderations in 1874, and obtaining a first-class in the final school of modern history in Trinity term, 1876, an honor which he shared with only one other out of a class list of forty-one honor men. Since that date he has continued his historical studies, and has been a lecturer of Keble College, Oxford. It may be safely said that few young men of Mr. Gladstone's age have presented themselves as candidates for parliamentary honors with higher credentials of character and intellectual capacity. And these, which, added to his social qualities, and to his conspicuous success as a gymnast and athlete, were among the causes of his universal popularity at the university, may be relied upon to commend him to the good esteem of the electors of Middlesex. His age is twenty-six—older by three years than was his father when he entered upon public life. He has had little or no experience hitherto in public speaking; but those who heard his maiden speech at the City Liberal Club will not have been slow to recognize in his address some of the highest qualities of the political orator,—intense and transparent earnestness, balanced judgment, and moderation of expression, exhibited, moreover, under circumstances of no ordinary anxiety and excitement. Those who know Mr. Herbert Gladstone best can say this—that he is well worthy of the noble name he bears. And no higher praise is possible."

Communications.

"THE IRISHRY" AGAIN.

SAVANNAH, Cal., April 7, 1880.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is wonderful with what pertinacity certain persons or classes will continue to misrepresent the facts of history for the purpose of bringing into disrepute those for whom they have an antipathy. Were such perversions of facts confined to a few individuals, it would be less unaccountable; but when we see the same thing carried on year after year, and by numbers of those who are supposed to constitute the intelligent class of the country, it is saddening. A lie oft repeated will in time pass for truth, even among those who, at first, are disposed to question it, and so mislead even truthful and conscientious folks. To this fact might perhaps be attributed the attack by your correspondent "B. W. B.," in your issue of the 25th ult., on what he is pleased to style "the Irishry." But his diatribe shows him to be both ignorant and malicious. He takes for granted "facts that are not facts," and is, at the same time, entirely oblivious of facts that are facts. He repudiates or distorts the history of this country, and tries to give a fresh impetus to baseless assumptions that every thorough student of history knows to be false. As I cannot think, Mr. Editor, that you would wilfully and maliciously misrepresent and slander any man, race, or nation, I ask you in a spirit of justice and fair play to allow me the use of your columns to correct some of the misrepresentations of your correspondent.

In the first place, he assumes that this is an Anglo-Saxon nation. This baseless assumption shows him to be a mere boy, who has no knowledge of the history of the North American Colonies. While it is true that the Plymouth Rock colonists were almost all, if not altogether, English,—though it is by no means certain that they were Anglo-Saxon,—and that some other colonies were successfully planted by Englishmen, yet an intimate acquaintance with the history of the colonies will show that they were recruited in great part from Ireland and other Celtic nations. A moderate estimate places the number of the Celtic population of the colonies, Celtic by birth or direct descent, at the time of the Revolution at nearly two-thirds, while the Anglo-Saxon element was little more than one-fourth of the entire population. Of these two-thirds, those of Irish birth or immediate ancestry constituted fully one-half. At the present day, the relative disparity is greater still, the Celtic element in 1870 being estimated at twenty-four millions to four and one-half millions of the Anglo-Saxon race.

From 1691 to 1775 there was a constant stream of emigration from Ireland to the colonies. This was induced by the failure of the Irish Revolution of 1688, and the consequent confiscations and persecutions. The land was taken from the people who owned and tilled it, and given to English and Scotch adventurers. Manufactures were suppressed, and both agriculturists and operatives were compelled to seek some other field for their labors. To this voluntary exodus must be added the forcible expatriation of about one hundred thousand persons of both sexes, between twelve and fifty years of age, and all to the North American colonies. There was no such movement from England. England was prosperous and contented, and its people stayed at home or stepped over to Ireland to take advantage of the policy of confiscation and robbery there carried on against the Celtic population. The most careful investigation shows that this nation is eminently a Celtic one. This is evident to every observer of our national traits and characteristics. There is a wide difference physically and mentally between Americans and men of the Anglo-Saxon race, and no thoughtful observer could make such a ludicrous assertion as that they are identical.

Now the Anglo-Saxon element furnished in great part those who were known as Tories in Revolutionary days, while such a thing as an Irish Tory was unknown. The Irish element had too recent experience of English cruelty, tyranny, and blood-thirst to harbor any love for its rule. The Anglo-Saxon Tories, on the contrary, then as now looked up to the king and aristocracy of England, and were then as now loud in their denunciation of the patriotic, the Celtic element of the population. The Revolutionary fathers had to fight not alone the power and prestige of England, but the formidable Tory Anglo-Saxon element of their countrymen, who, according to Sabine, furnished over twenty-five thousand men to assist in putting down the rebellion. These facts their descendants would now ignore, while they endeavor to arrogate to themselves all the glory and renown. The descendants of the Harpers, Garrisons, Gardners, and other Tories, now spout about their Revolutionary ancestors, and fret and fume at the real patriots, who were in great part Celtic and largely Catholic. "Fighting Jack Barry," the father of the American navy, was a Celtic Irishman and a Catholic. So was Gen. John Sullivan, who, in December, 1774, before war had been declared, captured Fort William and Mary in New Hampshire, with all its munitions of war. So were the O'Brien brothers, six in number, who won the first naval battle of the Revolution near Machias, Maine. To the Celtic Irish belongs the honor of capturing the first gun and the first stronghold and fighting the first battle for American independence at sea. And in every subsequent action from Concord and Bunker Hill to the surrender of Cornwallis and the termination of the war, the Celtic Irish were always present, always brave, always devoted, always true, while the Anglo-Saxons were divided.

The Celtic Irish element furnished fully one-half the soldiers of the Revolution, from Major-General down, and not a single Tory or traitor; while the Anglo-Saxon element furnished Arnold and Lee, and over twenty-five thousand armed Tories, with more than ten times that number of earnest, active sympathizers with the cause of royalty. I have by me a list of names of some hundreds of Celtic Irish who distinguished themselves in the Revolution, including such men as Sullivan, Montgomery, Hand, Warren, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and his Jesuit brother; but I deem it unnecessary to transcribe it here.

From the foregoing facts, it will appear how ridiculous your correspondent makes himself in questioning the rights of the Celtic Irish in this country. As to his aspersions of their character for bravery, honesty, industry, love of justice and equality, they are simply amusing. The idea of the "cowardly Irish" is rich. Ask Washington, ask Jackson, ask Scott, ask even Grant or Sherman what record the Irish have made in every fight that ever occurred in this country, from Braddock's defeat to the last Indian war.

It is very probable that "B. W. B." is himself the descendant of an Anglo-Saxon Tory, if not a more recent importation. He thinks and writes more like an ignorant English bigot than an enlightened American, which latter I am sure he is not, no matter how "ignorantly read" he may be.

In conclusion, the Celtic element of our population is now, and always has been, as brave as the bravest, as patriotic as the most patriotic, as loyal as the most loyal, to our republican institutions, and withal constitute now, and always have constituted, a large majority of our population; and no one but a base slanderer or an ignorant bigot could write the article under consideration.

Yours, JOHN J. BODKIN,
A Catholic Celtic Irish American.

TAXING CHURCHES.

Permit me to offer a few notes upon the arguments (in THE INDEX of April 8) urged by Rev. Rufus W. Clark, D.D., in opposition to the proposed taxing of church property in New York. I "quote" the doctor's arguments.

1. "Religion, in our Republic, does not ask the State to furnish the means for its support; and it does not seem expedient or just for the State to ask religion to aid in its support." Substitute "agriculture" for "religion." Then it will appear that, if Dr. Clark is right, no farmer ought to have to pay a tax. So of other interests, such as house-building.

2. "To compel the churches by law to contribute to the support of the civil government is to make them vassals of the government." Substitute "people" for "the churches"; for, if true of one, it is of the other. Then it will appear that, if Dr. Clark is right, only "vassals" pay taxes, and we are all "vassals." But this is absurd.

3. [Continuing the last quotation.] "And to introduce a principle that may lead to consequences beyond the taxation of edifices in which worship is rendered to God." What does Dr. Clark mean here? Apparently, that to tax churches will result in making feudal vassals out of all of us. But this is absurd. Or does he mean some threat? If so, he should have stated it plainly.

4. "We object to the taxation of churches, because the Christian religion is . . . absolutely essential to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people." If this is right, nothing thus essential should be taxed. But all our ordinary secular property is thus essential; and yet it is taxed.

5. "The churches form a moral police force for the protection of life and property, for the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order. . . . Will the revenue of money received from the taxation of churches be an equivalent for the loss of the services they now gratuitously and gladly render to the State?" First: Dr. Clark here implies that no policeman should be taxed; but policemen are not exempt from taxation. Second: Dr. Clark implies a threat that if the churches are taxed they will not exert any moral influence: this is absurd. Third: by Dr. Clark's own showing, the services in question are not "gratuitously and gladly" rendered, but are rendered in payment for exemption from taxes; so that the doctor contradicts himself.

6. "The proposed tax . . . will fall upon those citizens by whose liberality the churches have been built," and not upon others. This argument is aside from the point, which is, not who will have to pay the tax, but whether the tax ought to be paid. If it is just, of course those who built the churches—or, more correctly, those who own them (a different set of people, often!)—will have to pay, just as the owners of hotels will pay taxes on hotels.

7. "The difficulties that would attend the raising of this annual tax by most of the churches." The fact that it is hard to pay taxes is no argument against insisting on their payment. The same reasoning would justify a remission of all public duties and payments whatever.

Lastly. One or two general observations. If the effect of the churches is to make certain people better off, justice requires that these fortunate people should pay accordingly. The richer they are, the more they should pay taxes upon the means of their riches. On no other principle can the cost of government be justly apportioned.

The fact is all Dr. Clark's arguments do really come right down to one very human and natural one, to wit: we don't want to pay.

Some of my statements repeat the gist of some of your own comments on Dr. Clark's arguments. But the question is important, and possibly it may be worth your while to set forth this comment by way of keeping the subject alive.

F. B. P.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

In the North American Review for May, ex-Judge Jere. S. Black continues the very interesting series of papers on the Third Term Question begun in the February number. His article is entitled "Gen. Grant and Strong Government," and its purpose is to show, first, that the limitation of tenure of office in the Presidency to two terms is a fundamental principle of our republican form of government; and, secondly, that not only does disregard of that principle threaten the permanency of republican institutions, but that Grant's third candidacy is actually a plot to revolutionize the republic and introduce monarchy. Mr. Leslie Stephen writes of "The Religion of all Sensible Men," and speculates on the prospect of that religion displacing the present creeds of the multitude. The creed of the future, he says, must be capable of assimilating modern scientific theories. George Ticknor Curtis continues his series of articles on "McClellan's Last Service to the Republic." These papers are specially valuable on account of the large number of hitherto unpublished documents which they contain. Mr. Francis H. Underwood contributes an essay on R. W. Emerson and his writings; and an anonymous writer labors to show that the United States Government cannot, consistently with the Monroe Doctrine, permit the construction of an American Isthmian Canal, unless the same shall be controlled solely by cis-Atlantic Governments. The notices of New Books are by Mr. Alex. Gustafson.

JESTINGS.

REV. MR. PENTECOST tells of a man who was converted by seeing in the theatre the sign, "This is the way to the pit."

THE HACKENSACK Republican calls them telephone cigars, when they can be smoked in New York and smelled in New Jersey.

EXTRACT FROM A ROMANCE.—"With one hand he held her beautiful golden head above the chilling waves, and with the other called loudly for assistance."

A LITTLE GIRL being asked, on the first day of school, how she liked her new teacher, replied: "I do not like her: she is just as saucy to me as my mother."

"HUMPH!" said a young gentleman, at a play with a young lady, "I could play the lover better than that myself." "I would like to see you try," was the naive reply.

SCHOOLBOY, with a big apple. Another boy without any. "O Bill! give us a bite, won't ye?" "No, I won't." "Well, then, give me the core?" "H'm! h'm! I tell you there ain't going to be any core."

A SCPTICAL OLD rascal in Philadelphia has written an eighty-five-page pamphlet, in which he endeavors to prove, in spite of overwhelming evidence to the contrary, that Mary never had a little lamb.

TWO YOUNG men out riding were passing a farmhouse where a farmer was trying to harness a mule. "Won't he draw?" said one of the horsemen. "Of course he will," said the farmer: "he draws the attention of every fool that passes."

A BRIDGEPORT (Conn.) woman preserves a desirable amount of liveliness in the town in which she lives by opening her window several times each night, screaming for the police, and insisting on having her house searched for burglars and ghosts.

THEY WERE sitting together Sunday evening, with an album or two between them, when she pleasantly asked, "How would you like to have my mother live with you?" In just fifteen seconds, he had his hat down half way over his face, and was bolting through the gate.

THE NEW YORK Herald has raised more than three hundred thousand dollars for the Irish relief fund, and a woman in that city couldn't go to church last Sunday because her bonnet was six weeks old. We little dream, while assisting others, of the suffering at our own doors!—Norristown Herald.

A MAN NOTED for his close-fisted propensities was showing an old coin to a neighbor, when the latter asked, "Where did you get it?" "I dug it out of my garden," was the reply. "It is a pity you didn't find it in the cemetery," said the neighbor. "Why so?" asked the coin-owner. "Because you could have saved the hole to be buried in," was the somewhat unexpected reply.

A SCHOOL-BOY got up to read a composition on "The Tree." He got as far as "This subject has many branches," when the teacher said, "Stop! you have not made your bow yet." "If you interrupt me again," said the boy, "I'll leave." "You give me any more of your impudence, and I'll take the sap out of you," said the teacher, and then the regular order of business proceeded.—Baltimore Herald.

WHEN MARSHAL NARVAEZ, it is related, was on his death-bed, his confessor asked him if he freely forgave all his enemies. "I have no enemies," replied the dying Marshal, proudly. "Every one must have made enemies in the course of his life," suggested the priest, mildly. "Oh, of course," replied the Marshal, "I have had a great number of enemies in my time, but I have none now. I have had them all shot!"

"YES, SIR, I have stopped drinking for a whole year," said a young man to a companion. "I have sworn that for three hundred and sixty-five days, my friend, I shall not drink another drop." "But you see," replied the companion, "that this, being leap year, has three hundred and sixty-six days." "That's a fact," mused the sworn-off man. "Guess I'd better select some other year." And they went into a saloon.—Worcester Gazette.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " " 8 " "
" 26 " 51 " " 6 " "
" 52 " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

- WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
- WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
- MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
- GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
- DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
- MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenaft, N.Y.
- J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
- C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
- W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
- BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
- ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
- JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
- MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.

A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET, Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

- W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
- W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
- MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
- GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
- DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
- MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenaft, N.Y.
- J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
- C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
- W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
- BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
- ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
- JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
- MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS, SENT BY MAIL AT PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience, being the Life and Teaching of Gantama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
Goethe the Bible: A Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities. Many, with New Preface.....	2.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Philosophy and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside, or Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (WM. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court, or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Amusement.....	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different "Forms of Flowers".....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.75
Orchids.....	2.00
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols. 3.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.). Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. George Eliot's translation. 3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. 2 vols.....	2.00
Origins of Common Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Society and Concord.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 1 vol.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each 1 vol.....	1.00
Stories from the Life of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Safest Creed.....	1.50
Knowledge.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen F. Schilling.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Lights on Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Characters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wanderholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
More of Franchère. Five Chapters.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Mount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Woman's Wrong.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sketches and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of Talk in Rome and Venice for Young Folks.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Annapolis Romance.....	1.50
Huxley's Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUMES (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Ly Sermons, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics, or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Respiration, or, Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Amos.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Darwinism and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fungi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Minerals. By Prof. M. A. Mallet.....	1.50
By Mons. Van Beneden, and Messmates.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Music of the Future. Its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
Balliol College, Oxford, and Begun Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPET (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
Car Story.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fire-side Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter. Translated from the French.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVATT (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and his Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	2.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Mysticism. A Lecture. Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I and A.D.CCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.2
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedgehog in the Snow.....	1.00
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
Poetic Studies.....	1.5
The Story of Aris.....	1.5
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 240 Figures.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Static Statics; or, the Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.80
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, Social Problems. New and enlarged edition. Sociology.....	8.00
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I. II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.5
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Cherry Orchard.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.25
Light and Electricity.....	2.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunderings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Little Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.
A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,
THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50).

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Gort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. L. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 285 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsey Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St. Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS'
LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Bird-people and Oracles of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address

CHARLES DEB. MILLS,

Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable, practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special office is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 541.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

REV. SAMUEL JOHNSON has this noble reproof of politic silence: "The unbeliever is he who deliberately declines to speak what he thinks, or to trust humanity with what helpful truth has been intrusted to himself."

THE FOLLOWING advertisement appeared in the Raleigh Standard, July 18, 1838: "Run away,—a negro woman and two children. A few days before she went off, I burnt her with a hot iron on the left side of her face. I tried to make the letter M."

MATTHEW ARNOLD is now fifty-seven years old, and lives mostly in London, with a grown-up family about him. He is not dependent on his pen for support, having inherited a modest competence from his father, the distinguished Dr. Arnold, of Rugby.

NEXT SUNDAY, May 9, being the twentieth anniversary of the death of Theodore Parker, the event will be noticed by a discourse to be delivered by Rev. John W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, N.Y., at the Parker Memorial, Boston, on the subject: "Theodore Parker: his Relation to his Time and Ours." It would be a pleasing thing to see a full congregation of Mr. Parker's old parishioners on the occasion.

SAYS THE Nation: "Prince Napoleon has made the oddest stroke of his eccentric career by publishing a letter supporting the decrees against the religious orders, on the ground that these decrees are in accordance with Napoleonic principles and traditions, and therefore, even if they do come from the hands of the enemies of religion and morality, he cannot conscientiously oppose them. The Republicans are naturally delighted with the letter, both as an approval of their policy and a sign of the confusion in the Bonapartist camp, while it has filled the Bonapartists with dismay, as it practically amounts to their desertion by their own chief. The Bonapartism of the First Empire was an openly cynical and sceptical affair, which made no secret of regarding the Church as a department of police; but the modern edition professes to be pious, reads its Heures punctually, and rolls its eyes over the infidels with as much unction as the Legitimists."

THE Spectator has the following: "A dog belonging to a United Presbyterian minister killed the fowls while the family were at church, and buried them in the garden. The bodies were found. 'The dog,' says Dr. Calderwood, 'was taken to the garden, and immediately confessed his guilt. His master took him to his library, and having shut the door began to reprimand after this fashion: "What a wicked thing you have done in murdering the hens! You are a minister's dog, and should have been an example to other dogs, instead of doing such a thing as this. Then this is Sabbath day, and the deed is all the worse on account of the day on which it has been done." Thus admonished, the dog was put out at the door, and the door shut. Next morning he was found dead.' A veterinary surgeon was consulted, and declared that the dog had died of a broken heart. So far, Dr. Calderwood. We can only say that, if the minister and the veterinary surgeon spoke the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and were correct as to the dog's comprehension of the reprimand and consequent death, the dog was as truly a reasoning and feeling animal as any minister that ever signed the Confession of Faith."

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY writes to an atheistical correspondent: "I hold that any school of philosophy which dogmatically asserts that man has no soul and that there is not a God saps the very foundations of morality, and that all history proves the propagation of such opinions as a substitute for Christianity to lead to the degradation of the human race." The Archbishop evidently regards morality as founded on the Will of God and on man's fear of future punishment; whereas it rests on the nature of things, and cannot possibly lose its foundation so long as human nature endures. People are very apt to see "all history" on the side of their own opinion. One of the daily papers, noting a late rumor that the King of Burmah had murdered seven hundred persons at Mandalay to restore his own health, remarks: "If King Theebau should murder seven hundred persons, picked up at random from among his people, he would be destroyed shortly by the relatives and friends of the murdered individuals. It is to be borne in mind also that the Burmese know the criminality of homicide as well as the Christians do, for morality is far less a religious than a human attribute." The unknown quill-driver who wrote those words is wiser than his Grace, the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"SAUNTERER," in the Springfield Republican, has many good things, of which this is one: "Theodore Tilton talked eloquently in his recent lecture here on the hunger of the modern world for laughter, so that, besides opera bouffe and minstrel shows and farragos of funny nonsense on the stage, men have invented something unknown to Emerson,—the comic lecture. Why, we thought at the time, did he stop at that, and not go on to say, the comic sermon? Not only do we have the Hardshell Baptist and the negro sermon of the South and the unconsciously funny discourses of silly brethren in camp-meetings, but we have ministers drawing audiences by tomfoolery in the pulpit, since a zany in a tabernacle is quite as attractive as he is in a circus ring. Sermons are now not only interpretation of Scripture, exhortation to right living, or discussion of truth, but often catches for the appetite of curiosity. That was an innocent question we heard a Methodist country store-keeper ask as he assumed the pulpit in a Berkshire village,—'What shall I talk about?' Talk about! Why, anything,—all's grist to a minister's mill nowadays, even the 'gem' puzzle is in the pulpit; for we observe that last Sunday evening Rev. J. A. Bartlett, a Congregational minister at Reedsburg, Wis., addressed his people on '13, 14, 15, or 13, 15, 14,—which?' This is a pretty specimen of the modern gospel."

THE Transcript says: "At the instance of George Jacob Holyoake, the London Guild of Coöperators has taken steps to form an organization to encourage coöperative emigration to the United States, furnish information regarding locations for settlement, and advance capital under proper guarantees. The organization will act in correspondence with the Coöperative Colony Aid Association of New York. In a recent address before the guild, Mr. Holyoake gave an account of his travels in the United States, and of the interest he found manifested in the subject of coöperation. The special purpose of the address was to show how the principle of coöperative effort could be advantageously applied to immigration and settlement upon the new lands of the United States and Canada. 'The ordinary emigrant from England,' he said, 'passes from the brightness, convenience, and abounding society of cities, to the silence of the forest, and the companionship of unknown creatures who beset or crawl in his path. His new destiny is to fight the sullen and fruitful wilderness, which accords him plenty if he conquers it, or gives him but a grave if he fails. It is of the nature of a merciful thing to mitigate the bitterness of this experience. Coöperation can smooth the path of this form of enterprise. It can collect families to go out together. It can procure them right information. It can provide a conductor on their passage out, and convey them to colony land, where houses are erected, and provisions provided until crops can be raised; and it can supply a practical director until the settlers learn to take care of themselves. Coöperation can take the peril and uncertainty out of friendless adventure, and lend the charm of comfort and security to manly and industrial enterprise.'"

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. E. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenasny, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX, W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT, C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wiltonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SOHMEMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

as created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSHES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTE C. TRUEDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSSES W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y. wauke, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 W. T. GAGAN, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N. Y.
 ESEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, E. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Ernest Renan.

HIS LECTURES IN LONDON.

FOUR DISCOURSES ON THE INFLUENCE OF ROME UPON EARLY CHRISTIANITY.—A SKETCH OF THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIFE OF JESUS."—HIS DOMESTIC HAPPINESS.—A BEAUTIFUL HOME NEAR THE LUXEMBOURG.

[Though written two months ago, this account of Renan is still pertinent and fresh, and will be read with much interest.—ED.]

PARIS, March 3.

M. Ernest Renan will leave Paris on the 29th instant for London, where, under the auspices of Dean Stanley, he will deliver four lectures in the Chapter Room of Westminster. His subject will be the effect, in the first, second, and third centuries, of Rome, political, social, philosophical, and pagan, on Christianity. Nobody in our time is better qualified to treat this subject than M. Renan. He is a man of true intuition, the fine point of which has not been blunted by his extraordinary erudition. Though he has turned his back forever on the Roman Catholic Church he harbors not the bitter feelings of a renegade against her. On the philosophical heights to which he has ascended his mind is more at ease, more active, more vigorous than it could have been had he entered holy orders and remained in them. But the Church of Rome is always to him the mother country, the old home of his soul. If he has emigrated to a Better Land and established himself in a happier and more commodious dwelling than the primal one, he still looks back with filial tenderness to the Church of his youth, her imposing and often consoling rites, practices, and teachings. There are Americans of Puritan stock who feel toward England as Renan feels toward Roman Catholicism. They would not be English, because they have in the Great Republic outgrown England. But they are, and often unknown to themselves, disposed to yearn for her. Their love enables them to enter, so to speak, into the heart and brain of the nation, and to appreciate what is best in her at its real value. A Frenchman who has been making a visit to Great Britain draws a caricature of her when he returns to France and tries to expand his tourist's notes into a book. An American rarely sets England in a ridiculous light, because filial affection gives him a true vision. Renan sees Rome as an American sees the old country, and he will do her no injustice in the four lectures which will, in April next, be the great literary event of the British capital. Her broad bosom nursed him, and he will never mangle it with the dissecting knife of criticism.

Renan and Cobden.

I have, at different times and on noteworthy occasions, met and conversed with M. Renan in the course of the last twenty years. The first time I saw him was in the company of the lamented Richard Cobden, who had read with interest, articles by him in reviews and journals. Mr. Cobden was profoundly religious, although he did not attach himself to any kind of theological dogma whatsoever. I believe the idea of bringing down heaven to earth by promoting peace among nations, justice and popular education, came to him in his early readings of the Bible. He was convinced that it was the duty of every man to endeavor to make, at least, this world a fitting road to a celestial kingdom. His soul cleaved to men and women of religious feeling who had cast away those fancies of the theologians standing in the way of human progress. I remember how he kindled with enthusiasm when Renan spoke of the religious intuition of the Jewish people which led him to hope for a renovated earth on which there would be neither war nor injustice.

A Sister's Devotion.

The next occasion on which I met M. Renan was at the house of Madame Cornu, the foster-sister of the Emperor Napoleon III. He had just come from the Holy Land, was very broken in health, depressed and cast down in spirits, for he had just lost at Beyrout his heroic sister Rosalie. She had been to him the incarnation of Divine Providence, and had enabled him to emancipate himself from the seminary which he entered to be a priest. Both were the children of a pious Breton woman. She was animated by the most ardent faith in Roman Catholicism, as it is understood in Brittany. Their father, a Bordelais captain, perished at sea just previous to the birth of Ernest at the ecclesiastical town of Tréguier, in the north of Brittany. The captain's widow was poor. Her lot and that of her two children lay in the Valley of Humiliation which Rosalie turned into a flower-garden for her infant brother. When their mother broke down and died, she took a situation as governess in Russia, received a high salary, and with part of it helped along her beloved Ernest in the pursuit of knowledge and scholarship. With the rest, when he informed her that his faith had died out, she set him up in a humble lodging at the bottom of an old garden, in the scholastic quarter of St. Jacques. She then came to France to help him in his studies, by her cheering and maternal companionship. Her erudition was extensive. Her literary capacity was on a par with his. In his journey to Syria she accompanied him. She went with him over every spot trodden by Jesus. Her intuition, her insight, her learning, her critical acumen were a further aid to him when he was collecting materials for the Life of Jesus. M. Renan on a late occasion observed to me that the love bestowed on a child keeps him warm for the rest of his existence. A boy who has not been allowed to play and a girl who has not had dolls become a misanthropic man and a sour, nervous woman. I instanced the present Empress of Russia, who had every virtue except womanly sweetness. "Yes," said ady listening to what we said, "she was supposed Darmstadt to be merely the daughter of the Grand Duchess, and was treated as a Cinderella by the Grand Duke. Her gloomy piety, which led the Court to persecute the heterodox sects in Russia, was responsible for a great deal in the fermentation now going on there. The Empress had had no dolls in fancy, and had never been petted by anybody. There was no caloric stored up in her for the winter of life, and the Czar went to be warmed by the conversation of a lady who had been a favorite child."

Renan, when I saw him at the house of Madame Arnoux, was so broken in body and will that he never could have dared to raise a storm by bringing out his first initial work, had he not been persuaded that in publishing it he was following his sister's behests and honoring her memory. Those who said he was tempted by a thirst for lucre to write many things which scandalized the Christian world wronged him. His Life of Jesus was composed in a pious frame of mind. Part of it was inspired by the sister. The remainder was written in memoriam.

M. Renan was married when I saw him at Madame Arnoux's and the father of two children. His wife, a daughter of Henri Scheffer and a niece of the famous Ary Scheffer, was then a slender young woman with sweet blue eyes, a fresh complexion, high protuberant forehead, slightly retroussé nose, and dimpled cheeks. She was a rock of sense, poetized by a large romance in her disposition, and was refined, pretty, very intelligent, and of witty, cheerful conversation. One of her virtues was devotion to the memory of Rosalie, the free-thinking saint of the family; and her heart and ambition were centred in her husband. She was then full of quiet enthusiasm for his work, and hopeful and courageous, but in an unobtrusive, gentle sort of way. Madame Renan's grandfather Scheffer was a German artist, settled in Holland; her grandfather was Dutch and her mother French. The elements of the three nations to which she belonged by hereditary descent were happily and harmoniously mingled in her, and perfected by high culture.

Renan and Victor Hugo.

I met M. Renan on the third occasion at a dinner party at Victor Hugo's. The author of the Life of Jesus and M. Paul St. Victor were then both rival candidates for a seat in the Academy. A few days previous they had called on the Titan among modern poets to ask him for his vote. He invited them to come and dine with him. I sat close to the Master and his two eminent guests. Paul St. Victor has a Medicinal profile. It has almost the same outline as the medallions of Leo X. Power, scholarship, taste, and luxuriousness are expressed in it. M. St. Victor is a little deaf and unconscious that he talks loud, and often ignorant that he is being talked to. Victor Hugo was in a communicative mood. His conversation was a monologue, broken and varied in the most astonishing manner, until Paul St. Victor spoke, when they both talked together. I regretted there was no stenographer behind the curtain to hear what the Titan said. August Comte, whom he hates, Michael Angelo, whom he adores, Gothic art, with which he is in close sympathy, the Bible, the Old and New Testament, the lies and calumnies of the moral-order journal, Windsor Castle and its picture galleries were among the topics on which he descanted. He dived into some; he merely touched others; and he never wrote better than he then improvised. The Titan hurled rocks with prodigious ease while playing an excellent knife and fork. He anon seemed to make it his pastime to fling pebbles lightly and with a sure aim. Renan, whose face had filled out, and particularly the lower part, had his seminary look. He was discreet, unctuous, smiling, and repeated at short intervals the only phrase which fell from his mouth during the dinner. It was, "Maitre, vous avez raison," "Master you are right."

After dinner, Victor Hugo sat on a little sofa in a corner of the drawing-room, where a dialogue was carried on in a low tone between him and the author of the Life of Jesus.

The Theological Mould Outgrown.

My fourth meeting was at the house of an English magnate, the possessor of two historical castles in the North of England and of fabulous wealth, which has been in his family since the reign of Elizabeth. This gentleman is married to a French lady of cheerful spirit, thoroughly generous heart, and very unaffected manners, who gathers round her the best literary, artistic, and political society. Her husband shares her taste for litterati. He was at college with Thackeray, ever after his intimate friend, and had him and Dickens down to describe the poll at his own election for a Durham constituency. I had been invited to a dinner at this gentleman's house, which, he and his wife hated publicity, I do not name. While I was waiting in the drawing-room, where I arrived punctually, for the Maitre d' Hotel to announce that "Madame was served," the folding doors were flung open and a middle-aged lady of very comely presence entered. She was in black velvet and old point lace, and her nut-brown, wavy hair was arranged in the plain, classical bands in vogue before the Second Empire, and now becoming again fashionable. This lady was followed by a man of short stature and full figure, with a very large head and face. His hair, a faded, sandy-brown, seemed drawn from the cranium by an electrical agency. There was a deal of vivacity in the manner in which he advanced to salute the host and hostess, and the flourish he made with his left hand in which he held a flattened opera hat. One saw directly that he was no ordinary person, and that he was full of internal heat and power, and had tremendous "go" and vitality. He and the lady, whose names I did not catch as they were announced, interested me. The latter was thoroughly the gentlewoman, and very sweet and animated, without rattle or self-assertion. I thought I must have been acquainted with her previously, and with her peculiar-looking husband, but could not recollect where. He sat opposite to me at dinner and got into conversation with a literary man beside him on Zola's novels, which were then beginning to excite the attention of the town. In speaking, the little, stout man warmed up with almost Southern fire and became eloquent. I said to the host who was near me, "How like that gentleman would be to Renan were he not so animated." "It is Renan," he replied. "Surely not," I whispered. "Renan had the indelible stamp of the seminary very strong upon him. There is nothing in my over-the-way neighbor, except his shaved face, that is at all priestly. Nor is he subdued and unctuous; he has the eloquence and steam of a Gambetta, of whom there is something in the upper part of his face and nose. One is forced to listen to him with rapt attention. I always thought Renan an enchanting writer and a man of extraordinary talent, but not a man of genius." "Which he is this evening," said my host. "The change is curious; I have noted it myself. He has outgrown completely the theological mould in which his mind and body were originally cast. The habit of lecturing in the fullest liberty in the College of France has developed the whole man. His health is also better, and his wife, whose education was Protestant, renders his home thoroughly happy. Her life is beautiful. She is in close community of views with him in all the subject in which he is interested. Her wisdom supports and her sympathy cheers him."

A Philosopher's Home.

After dinner, I made myself known to M. and Mme. Renan, and was asked to visit them on Sundays when M. Renan is free from the College of France, or on Tuesdays, when Madame Renan is "at home." They now live in an old-fashioned house on a first floor in the Rue de Tournon, in the immediate vicinity of the Luxembourg. Their "flat" lies between a vast and silent courtyard, of aristocratic air, and an ancient garden. One ascends to their apartments by monumental stone stairs in the seventeenth century style. A plainly-dressed servant-girl opens one side of a folding-door, and an octagonal chamber, floored with black and white marble, is entered. Its ceiling is high-pitched, and there are glazed mahogany bookcases and large presses all round. "Is Madame at home?" "Yes," The servant leads the visitor through another room, also floored with marble, and octagonal. It is used as a dining-room. The buffet is flanked with two more bookcases. Then comes a passage in which books are stored away, and from which there is a vista of a corridor lined with nothing but volumes in paper wrappers. A lofty drawing-room is entered. It is furnished with old, solid, useful, and very picturesque furniture in green velvet. Artistic sentiment and family affection are expressed in the general appearance of this salon, which is as roomy as it is lofty. Elegant old-fashioned étagères and bibliotèques are stuffed with books in costly and substantial bindings. Pictures brighten up the white walls. And what pictures too! There are Ary Scheffer's mother by Ary Scheffer, and a number of uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, sons, daughters, and illustrious and intimate friends. Ary Scheffer's daughter was, probably the type of the "Mignon Regneltant la Patrie." She has the profound expression in the eyes of the vagabond Italian child, the heroine of Wilhelm Meister, and a mellow warmth of color which is delightful. Henri Scheffer, Mme. Renan's father, was also a very distinguished painter, and some of his choicest works remain to his daughter. Among them there is another likeness of the venerated "mother," a very refined, dainty, kind-looking, courtly old lady, falling into the serene and yellow leaf of existence. Her head and neck are draped and muffled in old lace, as if she had just come home from a hot theatre. About the room, on tables and stands, there are flowers and rare plants in jardinières, and busts on pedestals and sockets. I shall also observe, in laying bare the Lares and Penates of M. Renan to the public gaze, the total absence of glimmering and of gilding, except on the picture frames. In his dwelling there is no altar for the golden calf.

M. Renan's study is next the salon. It is also roomy, and lined from the floor to the high ceiling with books. Desks and tables are covered with scholastic litter. Madame will not touch it. She is aware that authors find their way easily in the apparent confusion of their manuscripts and tomes, and that housewifely neatness would be disorder to them. A bust in terra cotta, and a noble and speaking one it is, of Eugène Delacroix stands on the bare mantelpiece. At first sight, it might be taken for a likeness of John Philpot Curran, the Irish orator and wit.

M. Renan is very rheumatic. The last time I saw him, which was only a few days ago, his left arm was in a sling. Whenever he has an acute attack of this malady, it comes with fever and insomnia. In childhood he was a martyr to articular rheumatism. Brittany, his native province, and no part of it more than Tréguier, his native town, is damp. He was also reared under the shade of humid cloisters. To enable him to resist the disease, Madame Renan has caused thick carpets to be laid on the study floor, and thick curtains to be hung at the doors and windows. She also makes M. Renan pass his vacations in sunny climates. They have been to Sicily, the social condition of which they found to be delightful, less of course the brigandage. Masters, servants, landlords, tenants form there a happy family. Their mutual relations are analogous to those of clansmen and their chieftains, a hundred and fifty years ago in Scotland. I believe it was the social organization of Sicily, so different from that of the industrial towns of Europe, which inspired M. Renan with the anti-democratic idea pervading his last work, and his worst also, Caliban.

An Outline of the Westminster Lectures.

I asked M. Renan, the other day, to give me a brief outline of the lectures he is to deliver in England. He will show, he told me in reply, how Rome modified the Jewish Christian Church, which was founded by the Apostles, how the Roman colonies became Christianized, and how they, in Africa and Byzantium, acted upon Rome and were re-acted upon by her. Christianity, as we know it, is more Roman than anything else. The root was Hebrew. The graft was Pagan, when Paganism had gone through its higher evolution. It was the taking of Jerusalem which enabled the Christian Church to live and spread. If it had remained at Jerusalem, it would have died for want of body, or become an insignificant sect. In Rome, there was a vast servile population, in whose half-developed brain the religious germ, cast into it by the enslaved Jews brought back by Titus, fermented with such rapidity as to cause a social explosion. Religion was new to the poor Roman slaves. Cato advised the patricians never to allow their slaves to meddle with religious practices. The master sacrificed for them as well as for himself and his household. Clericalism was unknown to the Romans and hostile to their genius. Their cult had ever been in the hands of laymen. Their pontiff was the chief engineer, who, commanding the bridge, was in the post of danger. An official Church was a Byzantine notion; a sacred order, a Jewish notion. African fanaticism and fetishism absorbed the dregs of Paganism, and imposed them on the Christianity of the African colonies. The mythology took the form of a martyrology. The African intellect did not feel the philosophy of Jesus. It fed upon legends and marvels and upon the spurious gospels, the offspring of which were many of the most popular festivals of Roman Catholicism. Protestantism, M. Renan thinks, is in nearer affinity to the Judaism of the Apostles than Roman Catholicism. The Roman graft was cut off at the Reformation, and the Hebrew root allowed to give its harsh savor to the fruit. Protestantism is less "Christian," as we understand the word, than Popery; but more Christian in the sense of being more what the Israelite Jesus wished his followers to be.

M. Renan had a great many kindly things to say of Roman Catholicism. But he foresaw that free thought and scientific research and philosophy must profoundly modify it, and that the Jewish instinct would finally prevail over all existing theologies. "What is the Jewish instinct?" I asked. "Monotheism and a belief in the immortality of the human race, and in the renovation of the world. The Jews never much believed in the immortality of the individual soul. They never troubled themselves with the world beyond the skies. They looked forward to a millenarian-spring, or renovation, or resurrection, and to the reign of justice upon earth. This is now the universal aspiration. Science hastens to realize it. Who knows whether it will not be attained? Its attainment would not kill the Caucasian instinct, which points to the migration of the individual soul to other planets. This instinct will only receive a new and truer life in being released from metaphysicians and theologians. It will acquire greater strength by its alliance with science, liberty, and justice, which will find their artistic expression in a new Church. Materialism is a sad and sinister door of exit. The world will not pass through it."

The Religious Condition of France.

M. Renan is in correspondence with the highest-minded men in England. The Queen, I am told (but not by him), is personally interested in his forthcoming lectures, which the Grand Duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt would certainly attend, were she living. In a conversation on the religious state of France, M. Renan said to me that he thought the working-classes had irrevocably broken with the Church. It was a pity the breach had been made so soon; that its makers were not the Voltaireans, but the political leaders of what is known here as Catholic France. In 1848, the people were thoroughly religious. If they wanted to plant a tree of liberty, they first secured a priest to bless it. M. de Falloux's alliance with Louis Napoleon, and the Pope's fall into reaction entirely alienated them from the Church. This alienation, in many respects, was (taking place at the time it did) an evil. The poor man in the Church was soothed and refined by the tones of the organ, the noble architecture, the rich coloring of windows and pictures. It was all music to his irritated soul. It charmed and quieted the savage animal lying hidden in his breast. The Church ejected him in allying herself with despotism against the Republic. The Assomoir was open to him, and he went in. "How remedy this state of things?" I asked. "By exerting ourselves to accomplish the Jewish ideal of a reign of justice and of peace, and a planetary renovation. All the rest will come after." "Amen," I inwardly ejaculated, and then I took leave.

The smooth course of M. Renan's married life has been broken by severe domestic trials. His eldest son was early attacked by a malady of the spinal marrow. The disease has been surmounted; but bodily growth has been checked, and the activity of the brain and nerves abnormally developed. This youth has a vocation for an artist's life. He will be a painter. A daughter died as she was advancing from childhood to girlhood. Another daughter remains to her parents. She is pensive, affectionate, and at once a notable housekeeper and an artist. I have been told by an old friend of the family that she is the image of the Aunt Rosalie, whom I never saw, and the picture of her mother.—New York Tribune, April 21.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION IN THE UNIVERSITIES.

The exceeding dulness of the season, from the news-vender's point of view, has seldom been better illustrated than by the effort of the Times and Herald to give an account of a "conflict between science and religion" at Yale College, growing out of an alleged controversy between President Porter and Professor Sumner about the use of Herbert Spencer's Sociology as a text-book. The reporter or correspondent of the Times, who first went in search of the conflict, found that none of the professors knew anything about it, or, at least, all admitted that he seemed to know much more than they did. On visiting Professor Sumner, he was met by the information that the question of using Herbert Spencer's book had been discussed some three months previously between himself and the President in a slight way, and had then been dropped, and not revived. This singular absence of facts about the conflict naturally excited his suspicions that, if it had not broken out, it was imminent; and, by way of preparing the public mind for it, he wrote another letter giving some account of Spencer's book, and indicating particularly the passages which would be likely to give offence to theologians. Usually when one paper makes a discovery of this kind its contemporaries treat it with scornful silence, but in the present case the Herald seems to have considered it of sufficient importance to see what it was the Times was after, and despatched a reporter to President Porter, whom the Times seems in a strange way to have neglected. After the usual description of the President's house and furniture, the emissary had to record that President Porter had some recollection of the conversation referred to with Professor Sumner, but that nothing came of it, and that he too knew nothing of the approaching conflict between science and religion in the university. The Times, nevertheless, has never given up its expectation of the convulsion, and has followed it in imagination to the Corporation, which, as containing a large majority of ministers, will, it confidently expects, give Professor Sumner the worst of it.

This little journalistic voyage of discovery, however, probably had behind it a desire in some quarter or other to find out how Religion stood to Science in Yale College. The Independent has been recently making similar explorations, not in Yale only, but in other colleges, with the view of extracting from the Faculties an account of their attitude toward the doctrine of Evolution. The attempt was not, we believe, very successful, and resulted in the editor receiving in some quarters very rough handling, on the ground that he had incorrectly reproduced the views of eminent professors. From the head of one college, the inquiries drew down positive vituperation of Evolution and its belongings. From none did there come any clear statement by which the college could fairly be bound. We presume the fact is that it is no longer easy for professors any more than for other men, however reflective, to say exactly where they draw the line between their faith and their reason, or between the things they believe because they can prove them, and the things they believe because they cannot help it and like to believe them. A very striking illustration of this vagueness of the dividing line was afforded by Dr. Asa Gray's recent masterly exposition of the doctrine of Evolution before the Yale Theological School. In following the exposition, one moves in a world of pure law, but at the close the author admits the possibility of miracles, and, in fact, he recommends the retention of a corner of the mind for simple faith in things neither visible nor provable.

Probably no better account of the attitude of theologians, and in particular of those of New Haven, toward science, can be found than that in the volume of lectures on "Faith and Rationalism" delivered by Professor Fisher, of the Yale Theological School, before the Princeton Theological School last year. He describes faith as springing out of feeling, as having "no connection with any particular grade of intellectual power," and as in large part the product of the will. It has its source in the conscience, in a sense of dependence, and in each man's personal experience of his needs. In fact, the lectures are an elaborate attempt to remove religious belief from the domain of logic, and to create for it a field into which the machinery of intellectual proof will not be, and need not be, introduced. Speaking of Evolution, the author says:—

"It is obvious that the doctrine of Evolution relates to the extent of the operation of second causes, or efficient causes, in the production of the world as we see it—the Cosmos. The doctrine does not touch the question of the ultimate origin of the world; it does not necessarily touch the question whether the world as we behold it is the fruit of a designing mind; nor does it affirm or deny the continuous coöperative agency of God in the processes of nature. Physical or natural science, as such, has nothing to do with religion. Its field of inquiry is second causes. In exploring for links of causal connection between the objects of nature, it is engaged in its proper work. Wherever it judges it impossible to find such links, it must say so. But science is right in never giving up the search so long as there is any probability of success, and nothing is more unreasonable than to raise an outcry against a man like Mr. Darwin for broaching the hypothesis of a common descent of animals, and for adducing the evidence which leads him to favor it. If there be anything in that hypothesis to affect the doctrine of theism, it must be in collateral assertions which are sometimes made in connection with it. It does not inhere in the theory itself."

From these and other passages in the same work, it is tolerably plain that liberal theologians, both in New Haven and elsewhere, have discovered, or think they have discovered, a modus vivendi between Science and Religion. The plan may be called roughly that of a division of territory between two claimants, each of whom has been contending for the whole. But that this is a concession on the theological side is plainly to be seen from the great subsidence of controversy between the scientific men and the theologians which has taken place within the last ten years. The active polemics which raged during the earlier period of Darwin's, Huxley's, Tyndall's, and Lyell's prominence has ceased, and the main cause of its cessation has undoubtedly been the abandonment by theologians of attempts to contend with the scientific men in their own fields, the attempt—that is to say—to overthrow scientific hypotheses or inferences by means of Scriptural authority or Church tradition, or by means of arguments drawn from the mischief which such hypotheses or inferences would probably work in practice. Outside of the Catholic Church, very few clergymen venture on anything of the kind now. After this had been given up, there was for a while a disposition to try the plan of taking the facts as furnished by scientific men themselves, and working them over with the logic taught in schools of philosophy and theology, so as to show that the men of science could not extract from their own premises what they thought they could. But this too has been abandoned by all theologians of mark. It was very soon discovered that no man can reason successfully among facts of whose connection with each other and probative force he knows little or nothing.

Whether Professor Fisher's basis of peace can be made permanent, must still be considered very doubtful. There runs through his argument, as through that of many of his associates, the assumption that there is a body of persons competent to answer for science, as there is a body of persons competent to answer for theology and settle questions of disputed boundary and the like; and from this error—for error it can easily be shown to be—there has arisen more than one proposal to scientific men to make peace with religion, and concede this and agree not to touch that, just as a church synod or council might draw up a creed or define a heresy. But science is not and cannot be in the keeping of any man or any body of men. Nobody is authorized to say the last word for it or in any way speak in its name. It does not consist of a body of beliefs: it consists of a body of laws, some known and some unknown. The scientific man is not a master or philosopher or prophet. He is an explorer, and he cannot predict what he will discover, or pledge himself that what he may discover will or will not have any particular effect on the mind of the civilized world. Will does not play any part in shaping scientific belief, as it does in shaping religious belief, and the attitude of readiness to believe or of desire to believe, and the feeling of the need of belief, which Professor Fisher makes one of the sources of faith, not only play no part in directing a scientific man's labor, but are among the things which he has most sedulously to avoid. He is, therefore, absolutely incapable of negotiating with anybody about anything.

That Professor Fisher's position with regard to Evolution, or, in fact, with regard to natural science generally, is one which Theists may and will continue to occupy for an indefinite period, nay, probably must occupy for ever, there can be little doubt. But whether that portion of the domain of theology which is appropriated to the evidences of the historical truth of Christianity is one which can be protected against the intrusion of scientific methods is very questionable indeed. The attacks of Rationalism on all that portion of a man's religious faith which he draws from his conscience, from his experience of his own needs, and from the exercise of his will ministering to those needs, may be easily repelled. But that portion which he draws from the truth of certain historical facts, and the authenticity and correct interpretation of certain writings, must of necessity be for ever open to the operation of the laws of intellectual proof, and will, therefore, probably continue to be the object of assault both to Rationalists and Rationalistic modes of thought. It is probably, too, rather from the mental attitude it creates among even plain people, than from the direct criticism of scientific men or sceptics, that historical religion suffers most, and on this side we must expect to see the conflict go on. Signs of it in the Church itself are very numerous, and not the least important is the immense liberty of interpretation which both ministers and laymen are allowing themselves in our day. Pending the discovery of a final resting-place, however, disputants of all schools must take some comfort in the fact that the mundane ends of religion do not seem to have ever, on the whole, been more fully attained than in our own day. Human society has never displayed so many marks of the kingdom of God, and love and hope have never done so much to sweeten human life.—The Nation.

THE INTELLECTUAL ORGANIZATION OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

BY PROFESSOR BENJAMIN PEIRCE, LL.D.

The material prosperity of the College was never greater than it is under its present admirable administration. The frequent additions to its resources can justly be claimed as evidence that it enjoys the public confidence, which it richly deserves. The demands of education are always increasing; and the expenses of the College, augmenting with its numbers and almost in proportion to them, require constant vigilance and unremitting application for pecuniary aid. The brighter light with which the institution is now illumined makes its deficiencies more apparent; and it requires all the energy and generosity of its friends to sustain it in its commanding educational position amid the growing culture of the age and the country. It especially behooves us to look forward, and anticipate the direction in which rival institutions are likely to gain upon us, and may perhaps even come to surpass us. Those who have lived long enough to have observed the growth of American colleges, and have seen in how short a time the favorite seat of learning and instruction can change from place to place, will not regard some apprehension on this respect as visionary, or believe Harvard to be so firmly rooted and so largely expanded as to preclude all possibility of any loss of prestige. We have seen flourishing institutions of learning reduced to comparative inefficiency by the loss of great scholars and vigorous investigators of science. It is questionable whether Harvard is not already suffering in this direction, and whether there is not too profuse an expenditure upon class teaching, and whether the outlay to supply the loss of the higher and more inspiring instruction, which is given by such men as Felton and Agassiz and Wyman and Winlock, is not unfortunately restricted. I hear it intimated that the funds of the College are limited, by the terms of donation, to elementary instruction. But it seems to me an unjust restriction of the generous and enlightened intentions of the founders, to suppose that there was any desire to limit the use of their donations in such a way as not to include all the noblest forms of instruction, and especially those which can only be given by the masters of original investigation. Enthusiasm, which is the highest element of successful instruction, can best be imparted nearest the fountain-head, where the springs of knowledge flow purest, and where the waters are undiluted by the weakening influence of text-book literature. I cannot believe it to be injudicious to reduce the time which the instructor is to devote to his formal teaching to a couple of hours each day, or even to less than this, and to much less, if the same man is to undertake more than one branch of study, so as to leave him time to expand into new investigations in the learning of his department, and thereby add to the lustre and reputation of the University.

The student who is truly ambitious, and sincerely desirous of knowledge, should mostly be expected to seek it by earnest questioning of his instructor, or by diligent study of original memoirs under the master's direction. He should be an active instrument in the accomplishment of his own progress, and not a passive tool in the hands of his teacher. Knowledge is power in proportion to the intellectual energy expended in its acquisition. The advanced students of our highest institutions cannot remain children subject to the rule of a schoolmaster; but they are men seeking the guidance of the great thinkers in their pursuit of knowledge. They are not rafts floated down the stream, but vessels navigating the ocean. The system which is adapted principally to compel attention to study is comparatively unfruitful, and fails to promote sound and original scholarship. As long as the instructions are limited to formal class teaching, the college must remain a higher school, and cannot deserve the name of University.

Closely connected with the overwork of the teachers in what may be termed pedagogic instruction is the great difficulty or apparent impossibility of organizing a system of combined investigation, or any united discussion of the higher questions of science and learning, and especially of those to which various departments must be expected to contribute. Such combinations have hitherto been attempted with but moderate success. It is fervently to be hoped that the President, and the members of the Corporation and Overseers, will be induced by the pressure of the times, and inspired by the success of younger institutions, to make a thorough personal study of this great subject. Such an investigation deserves profound and serious consideration, and there has never been a time more propitious for pursuing it to a satisfactory conclusion. It cannot be that so favorable an accumulation of elements will be permitted to slip from us unimproved; and it may not unreasonably be hoped that, in the course of the coming year, wise steps may be taken for the inauguration of a better intellectual organization of the University.—Harvard Register.

SCEPTICISM vs. ORTHODOXY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WITNESS:

Sir,—As you have taken a wide departure from your "right of silence," in relation to Col. Ingersoll after his exit from our city, perhaps you will consider it not inconsistent with the character of the Witness to allow a few words in reply to the accusations brought against those who agree more or less with Ingersoll's view of theology.

You are giving your readers full reports of all that is said, at the Rev. Mr. Hammond's meetings, concerning "infidels," with apparent approval of the many serious charges brought to bear on their character and conduct. The term "infidel" does not apply, with any degree of reason, to men who are faithful to the verity of their convictions, and to the dictates of conscience. All Christians are called infidels by the Mohammedans, and all Protestants are infidels to genuine Roman Catholics. He only is an infidel, indeed, who violates the eternal principle of justice, who is untruthful, who crucifies the majesty of his intellectual powers, from fear of losing caste in society by yielding a hypocritical assent to incredible creeds.

The attempt is constantly being made, especially by clergymen, to link together, as cause and effect, anti-supernaturalism and immorality. The refutation of this assumption in the lives and conduct of freethinkers generally, is obvious to every candid and intelligent observer. In our knowledge of and dealings with men, we find the highest types of moral excellence, honor, benevolence, and large-hearted humanity among those who recognize no other theology than that which is manifest in the universe, in the nature of man, and in the relation which we bear toward each other and toward the immutable laws, physical, organic, and moral, which grant no absolutions, no vicarious atonement to those who transgress them.

The complex and misty questionings respecting the origin of things and the ultimate destiny of our race will always afford, as they always have afforded, deep and earnest cogitations to men who are not too indolent to do their own thinking; men who are able and willing to accept a new truth, however much it may be reviled by a bigoted and unscrupulous priesthood, or by the persecutions of a blinded and brutalized people.

If Christianity were to be judged by the countless atrocities perpetrated in its name, perpetrated by men who devoutly held the same fundamental beliefs as are still claimed to be essential to salvation, and to the welfare of society, what could we say? It will not be denied that the Orthodox Christianity of a not very distant date exerted its utmost powers to block the wheels of human progress, while men of a broader faith confronted them, battling with all the energy of their souls to urge the wheels forward. The bigots who burned the noble Giordano Bruno at Rome, in 1600, on a charge of atheism; who persecuted Galileo a few years later, and the Protestant fanatics who roasted the learned Servetus at Geneva, in 1553; the Christians, Protestant, and Catholics alike, who, up to a recent day, burned unfortunate men and decrepit old women for witchcraft, the reality of whose existence was held as an indisputable Biblical fact,—all these followers of the Cross were possessed of a profound belief in a personal God and a personal devil; of the transgression of Adam and Eve, and consequent necessity of the Atonement; a belief in the deity of Jesus, miracles, heaven, and hell. And yet they were cruel to the last degree! Do these facts not demonstrate that the beliefs cited failed to produce the morality that is claimed as their legitimate outcome? Do they not rather show the reverse? In the light of historical facts, I cannot but hesitate to grant that supernaturalism can justify lay claim to preëminence over a less passionate and more modest outstretch of thought.

We are asked, What has scepticism ever done for mankind? I have shown that certain beliefs have led to the worst of crimes, while I gladly acknowledge that thousands of Christians, and other believers in other systems of so-called revealed religion, have stood as sublime examples of all that is good and great in the nature of man. Scepticism, as I understand it, means doubt, a sense of uncertainty in the soundness of some proposition, doctrine, or dogma presented as true and sacred. A Buddhist must become a sceptic to his religion before he can reject it, or exchange it for any other. The same remark applies, with equal cogency, to all theologies. Consequently, scepticism is the mainspring of all reformation, all advancement in knowledge. It is the detective and expositor of superstition; the anatomist of dreams and hoary fictions. And the odium that has been cast upon the term is but the unhealthy exhalations that never cease to emanate from stagnant minds.

"Well," you may ask, "what have those men who have denied the Bible to be our sole authority in morals and religion, and our sole guide in life, ever done for their race?" I answer, many such men have rendered the most exalted service to the world. Space and time will only permit the naming a few. Nearly all the leading spirits in science and philosophy, and very many in political reformations and revolutions, must be classed under this head. The principal founders of the great American Republic, men who refused to be taxed by Orthodox England without their consent,—Jefferson, Franklin, Thomas Paine, John Adams,—were deists, and this accounts for the character of the constitution which they adopted. It ignores any connection of Church and State, and established a government which is neither Christian nor anti-Christian, but simply and purely secular. Who will pretend that those men did not enlarge the boundaries of human freedom and human happiness? Garibaldi, the acknowledged architect of Italian independence, is a pronounced free-thinker; and the chief founders and sustainers of the present French Republic, men who waged incessant warfare against arbitrary power, till it fell by its own folly, and who are smiting ecclesiasticism in the forehead, are undisguised rationalists. Again, who were the first to denounce, and the most potent in exposing and overthrowing the infamous crime of Southern slavery? Was it the Orthodox clergy? Did the churches, either North or South, hurl their protests against the iniquity? Did they not, in fact, defend it, and quote Scripture to prove that it was a divine institution?

The first in honor among the champions who swept that enormous curse from the earth was William Lloyd Garrison, a man who, on account of his hatred of Southern bondage, was once dragged through the streets of Boston, with a rope round his neck, by a Christian mob. Next looms up the heroic figure of Theodore Parker, the bête noire of his day to all "sound believers." Then Charles Sumner and Gerritt Smith, God-like in their moral greatness; men who would have suffered martyrdom, as Bruno did, sooner than assent to a lie and a crime. Were these men orthodox Christians? Not at all. From a Hammond point of view, they have all been doomed to eternal flames; inevitably so, if his "plan of salvation" holds good. In the inception, and, for a long time, in the great temperance reformation, free-thinkers, in many instances, struggled unaided by any of the churches; and it was only when shamed into active coöperation by individual members, that they laid aside their apathy. We know that in England the churches, on the whole, are still hostile to the suppression of the liquor traffic, while many individuals, who are not influenced by fear of hell, or prospective reward in heaven, but simply from love of their fellow-men, are zealous in their efforts to undermine the vast prison-house of alcohol.

In concluding this somewhat long letter, my apology for which is the gravity of the subject of which it treats, permit me to observe that, in the opinion of more of your readers than those who give public utterance to their thoughts, the theology of our fathers, if not actually dead, is in the last throes of dissolution, and all the D.D.'s in the world cannot restore it to a healthy existence. It will be kept lying in state for some time, and mourned over by many tender souls as a corpse of peculiar beauty,—will be mourned over more especially by the clerical order, who will realize in its demise a collapse in their occupations. But let us hope that a brighter and better theology will beam upon the world, and minister to the thousand wants and aspirations of the human heart.

GEO. MARTIN.

—Montreal Witness, April 19.

THE MURDER OF SERVETUS.

The martyr of 1553, Michael Servetus, has been the object of a good deal of study recently, the result of which has been in a high degree to vindicate his memory, and seriously to damage the reputation of his persecutor, John Calvin. The principal investigator in this field is Dr. Henri Tollin, preacher in Magdeburg, who has for a number of years been engaged in this study, and has published several monographs upon it. The result of these labors is stated briefly and popularly in No. 254 of the Deutsche Zeit- und Streitfragen, which does not, however, profess to relate the life of Servetus, but to discuss his character and theological position. It begins with a vivid picture of the auto da fe of Geneva, and then passes in review the various phases of activity of Servet (this is his true name) and the charges brought against him. Servetus was not merely a theologian; he was, says Tollin (p. 7), "the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, the inventor of Comparative Geography, the editor of the best edition of Ptolemy." And as to his theology: "Whatever Servet might be engaged upon, from the time of his finding a Bible in Toulouse until his death, he was throughout one thing—a Bible student" (p. 24). A still better sketch, because more complete, is "Michel Servet," by Charles Dardier, in the Revue Historique, vol. x. (May-June, 1879). M. Dardier agrees fully with Dr. Tollin's judgment, although he cannot give to Servetus the credit of having discovered the greater circulation of the blood; but he did discover "the lesser circulation, the pulmonary circulation, which must easily have led to the other, and proved it in clear, exact, and decisive terms" (p. 33). He, like Dr. Tollin, refutes completely the charge of pantheism: "It would be more correct to say that he was a pan Christian, for Christ is, to him, immanent in the world, the soul of the world" (p. 19). M. Dardier concludes his sketch with these words, reversing the judgment given by Pastor Henry: "A definitive judgment, from which there is no appeal, has been pronounced by historians of different Christian churches and nations, at Geneva, in Germany, England, France, Holland, and elsewhere. But the terms of the verdict are reversed: Servet is declared not guilty, and Calvin guilty with extenuating circumstances,—with the exception, be it understood, of the action of the Genevese reformer in denouncing the Spanish doctor to the French inquisitors; of this guilt he cannot be acquitted,—there is on this point no extenuation possible" (p. 54).

Dr. Tollin's principal work is in examining the relation in which Servetus stood to the several Protestant reformers. About this he has published several treatises: "Michel Servet and the Wittenberg Reformers: 1. Martin Luther and Michel Servet; 2. Philip Melancthon and Michel Servet"; "Michel Servet and the Oberland Reformers: 1. Martin Butzer (Bucer) and Michel Servet. 2. Capito and Servet." Dr. Tollin says ("Butzer and Servet," p. 11): "The Orthodoxy of the sixteenth century held Servet's appearance for a 'sin of Canaan,' and laid upon the 'shameless' man a threefold curse. The first curse was to burn him to ashes; Michael met the fate which hundreds of thousands before him experienced. Refined by fire, he has attained a purer immortality. The second curse was the destruction of his works. By this he was for two centuries deprived of the honor of having discovered the circulation of the blood, and philologists, philosophers, geographers, physicians, theologians, have been able to learn very little about him. Not till the present day has begun the more complete estimate of the Spanish writer. But the third curse is not yet healed. It is the effacement of all traces of his intercourse with his contemporaries, executed with the most painful care. To discover these traces is one of the most difficult tasks of historical investigation." Another work of Dr. Tollin is the publication of a brief treatise of Servetus, discovered by himself in Paris, Apologetica Disceptatio pro Astrologia. It contains only twenty-five small pages, but is one of the grounds of Servetus' condemnation, and had been supposed to be so completely lost that Dr. Tollin could hardly believe his eyes when it was laid before him in 1858. All these works are published by H. R. Mecklenburg, in Berlin.—Nation, April 8.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 1.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

J. H. Holley, $4.20; Arthur Farrar, $3.20; M. H. Conaway, $3; James McArthur, $5; E. R. Potter, $3.20; G. A. Lane, $3.20; Wm. S. Thomas, $3.25.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

CALVIN'S DREAM.

REVERENTLY INSCRIBED TO THE U. P. SYNOD OF SCOTLAND.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THROUGH THE AGES."

The books had been closed and the Judgment was done;
The stars had fallen, and black was the sun;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And Heaven and Earth had been swept away
In the blood-red storm of the Judgment day;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And behold! in the Heaven and Earth made new
The Tree of Life by the Water grew;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And under its branches was sorrow unknown;
And all the Angels stood round the Throne;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And, clothed in white raiment, a countless throng
Waved shining palms, and sang a new song;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And shawm and timbrel and psaltery and fife
Shook the golden boughs of the Tree of Life;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And lo!—though the Heaven and Earth was glad,
The great, human heart of Christ was sad;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And he looked at the Blest; "Of all that were dear—
Of all that I died for—how few are here!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And in the glad silence, 'twixt psalm and psalm,
Vague murmurs He heard in the Heavenly calm;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And faint, far echoes of wailing came
From the outer dark and the deathless flame;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

Save Christ's human heart, there was none that heard
The faint cry of anguish, the bitter word;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

But ever some voice, between psalm and psalm,
Sent a throb of pain through the blissful calm;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"It was not for us that He died," one said:
"Or ever He came, we were doomed and dead!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"He died such long ages before," one cried,
"Men knew not for certain that ever He died!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"He died for us—truly. I saw it!" one said,
"But only God knew that a God was dead!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"Yea, truly, a God! not a Man to know Man in his weakness, man in his woe!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"Lord Christ, I would pity and spare Thee," one said,
"Wert Thou, the Lord, man, and I Lord in Thy stead!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"Remember me, Christ, for I stood at Thy knee
When the children were suffered to come unto Thee!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"He forgets how we played," said a low, sobbing, breath,
"In the street by the fountain at Nazareth!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And Christ's heart ached; He felt the tears rise
And darken out Heaven from His human eyes;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

But ever the shawm and timbrel and fife
Shook the golden boughs of the Tree of Life;

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And He said: "Do the men made perfect hear
No sounds of the Lost who were once so dear?"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And the Thousands signed: "We hear no word;
For these which are dead praise not the Lord."

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

Then the Lord Himself said: "Son, let be;
Even as it falleth, so lieth the Tree."

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

But Christ said: "Once yet again will I die
For these which in utter anguish lie!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

"It may not be, Son," the Lord God said,
"For Sin is cast out, and Death is dead."

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

Christ rose: "If I cannot die again,
I will go to my Lost in their endless pain!"

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And an awful, shuddering silence fell
As Christ went forth to the gates of Hell.

The Lord is a just and terrible God!

And, with a cry of terror, Calvin woke,
Spread aguish hands, and raised to heaven a face

Haggard and wet with agony of soul.
"Pity me, God!" he moaned; "nor judge the sin

Corrupted nature blindly sins in sleep!
Deal clemently, nor visit with Thy wrath,

O Lord, Thou God most terrible and just,
The insensate blasphemy of evil dreams!"

WILLIAM CANTON.

—London Examiner, May 17, 1879.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 6, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy), and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired; $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged April 29.....	$2,132.00
CHAS. ROTHSCCHILD, New York.....	5.00
E. FEZANDIE, ".....	1.00
WM. ZAISSEE, ".....	1.00
I. E. SMITH, ".....	5.00
GERALD LLOYD, ".....	2.00
ARTHUR M. JEE, ".....	1.00
DR. LILLIENTHAL, ".....	2.00
DR. STEIBLING, ".....	1.00
A. KLAMROTH, ".....	5.00
S. ROTHFELD, ".....	5.00
A. C. RICHARDS, ".....	5.00

Total.....$2,165.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows: Business session, for election of officers, hearing and discussion of reports, etc., Thursday, May 27, 7.45 P.M., at the Parker Fraternity Hall in the Parker Memorial Building, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets.

Convention, Friday, May 28, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M. in the Parker Memorial Hall. Arrangements are in progress that promise interesting discussions, of which the details will be given hereafter.

Social Festival, Friday evening, in the same place, using both upper and lower halls. There will be music, brief addresses, refreshments, and opportunity for social greetings and conversation.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY, AND RELIGION.

These are great words, and they mean great things. Shall we make their mutual relations the subject of our weekly talk with our readers?

SCIENCE is nothing but human knowledge, sifted out from that crude mass of truths, half-truths, and errors which constitutes the intellectual capital of the general community. The process by which science does this work of sifting is called verification; and it consists essentially in bringing all suppositions, guesses, imaginations, hypotheses, beliefs, etc., to the test of facts. Science appeals from the mere world of thought to the world of real existence, and forbids us to believe anything which actual facts disprove, or to accept as a certain truth anything about which actual facts tell us nothing. The "facts" are whatever is real, existent, known by positive experience of any kind; and one of the greatest reforms which human thinking needs is to enlarge the common notion of experience so as to include all real contact of the mind with the universe, instead of limiting it to mere sensation, as almost everybody does. But this reform of thought will come in due time; meanwhile, it is easy to understand that science discriminates truth from error by the process of bringing all notions to the test of experience, and that this process is called verification. The aggregate of all truths, established as such by the Consensus of the Competent (that is, by the unanimous agreement of all those thoroughly qualified by education and practical skill to decide what notions have or have not been verified), constitutes what Professor Jevons, in his great work entitled The Principles of Science (page 504), calls "the whole body of science already accumulated." It cannot be too often or too emphatically said that this "whole body of science already accumulated," as expounded in each particular science by the unanimous teachings of all the great specialists in that particular science, is a SCIENTIFIC AUTHORITY to which every outside individual must submit, on penalty of demonstrating himself to be a conceited ignoramus.

But the specialists in each particular science, although (when unanimous, and not otherwise) the final appeal for all rational persons on all questions involving that particular science, are usually very incompetent judges on questions involving other sciences than their own, and still more on questions involving the comprehensive principles which underlie science in general. As a rule, the best specialist is usually the worst generalizer outside of his specialty. Hence arises the necessity of PHILOSOPHY. The common opinion is (and it has been pretty well justified by the practice of so-called philosophers, since the triumph of Nominalism over Realism in the Scholastic philosophy of the Middle Ages) that philosophy lives in a cloud-land of abstractions, having no real existence outside the brain of the individual thinker; and the "rough justice" of this opinion is amusingly illustrated in the anecdote of the German Denker who, being called upon unexpectedly to define a camel, instead of going to Natural History to learn what the facts were, sat down in his study and "evolved the definition out of his inner consciousness." That joke precisely exposes the fatal weakness of both the a priori and the a posteriori schools of modern philosophy: namely, its ruinous subjectivism or individualism. But the same reform is going on in philosophy itself which is going on in the religious world; and this consists in the substitution of the scientific (or objective) method for the dogmatic (or subjective) method. What might be called "the philosophy of the future" will plant itself unequivocally and unreservedly on "the whole body of science already accumulated," and not, as heretofore, on the mere fancies of the individual thinker, as the great groundwork and foundation of all philosophic activity. It will clearly perceive that its own function, as philosophy, is simply to systemize science as a whole; that is, to gather up all the special facts and verified truths of the several sciences, and rearrange them in one complete, comprehensive, and self-harmonious system. Expressed in the language of the schools, it will grasp the true relations of science and philosophy in the pregnant principle that science is to furnish the "matter," and philosophy the "form," of verified human knowledge. Or, to express it more popularly, science is to furnish the brick and mortar, while philosophy is to furnish the building plan, of the great temple of truth. When this mutual relationship is thoroughly established and understood, the present suspicious and quarrelsome attitude of science and philosophy towards each other will become for the future just as unreasonable as would be a feud, in building a house, between the bricklayers or carpenters and the architect whose plan they are executing.

To recapitulate, then, science, on the one hand, gives judgment as to the truth or error of every particular statement respecting the universe, and gives this judgment, moreover, simply and solely on the warrant of verification. Philosophy, on the other hand, confessedly accepting all its materials from the hand of science, has the higher function of uniting them into a harmonious intellectual whole, or system, and thereby vindicates its ancient title to be considered "the science of sciences."

But both science and philosophy, thus conceived, deal exclusively with truth; they do not warm the heart or nerve the will to convert the truth into life, action, affection, character. To do this is the special and peculiar function of RELIGION. When the vast revolution now going on in the world has been fully worked out,—when the systematic dogmatisms of Judaism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, Parseeism, Christianity, Mohammedanism, etc., are fairly outgrown, as mere partial, confused, and more or less erroneous reflections of objective cosmic reality,—then the truth of universal religion, already dawning on the world, will be unanimously and joyfully hailed. Then it will be acknowledged, as a mere matter of course, that religion, accepting the substance of its ideas from science and their systematic form from philosophy, should occupy itself with the noblest task of all: namely, to mould the life of every individual, and the life of society as a whole, into perfect accordance with the truth thus made plain. It will come home to every heart, teaching how to realize the ideal truth in real being, how to give free and full development to all that is good in humanity and to overcome the evil, how to create happiness here and now as the true goal of human activity. It will introduce into the now repulsive political life of mankind the elevating and ennobling element of universal justice; it will introduce into their equally repulsive ecclesiastical life the sadly lacking element of universal truth; it will introduce into their imperfect social and domestic life the blessed element of universal love, replacing selfishness with generosity, the impulse to encroachment with self-control, and all hard insensibility with manly and womanly tenderness. And (we believe in our inmost soul) it will throw over all human life the glorious rainbow arch of such an idea of the Universal Divine as shall win all truth-loving natures, and repel none—such an idea of the grandeur of the Human Soul as shall render the hope and expectation of personal continuance after death the natural heritage of each and all.

Such is our dream of the future of Science, Philosophy, and Religion—three in one, and one in three. And the future alone can testify whether it be indeed a dream, or the faint foregleam of a reality nobler still.

Is "KNOW-NOTHINGISM" to be revived? We have received the prospectus of a paper, to be published at San Francisco and called the American Patriot, which says: "A greater and more impenetrable barrier than the great Chinese wall should be thrown about our country, that it may no longer be made the retreat of the vicious foreign rabble and discontents whom indolence, poverty, treachery, or crime has driven to our shores." Its main purpose seems to be to arouse hatred between native and naturalized citizens, and natives and foreigners generally—with well-understood allusion to the poor Chinese. We suggest that the name be changed to American Traitor; for we know no worse treason to America than the devil's work here proposed.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Madford, Ont., May 12, 13, 14; Toronto, Ont., 16, 17, 18.

MR. F. A. HINCKLEY, of Providence, is open for a limited number of engagements for Sundays in July and August.

ALFRED RODGERS, a child of ten years of age, was arrested, a few days since, in New York, in a state of helpless intoxication.

PROF. ADLER resumed his lectures at Chickering Hall Sunday before last, speaking to his usual audience, and with his accustomed vigor. The course of the present season closes next Sunday.

MISS LAI SUN, a Chinese woman educated in this country, has married Captain Anderson of the Chinese gunboat Kwashing. The ceremony was performed at Shanghai, China, by the dean of the English cathedral.

M. ERNEST RENAN says that from personal observation at Ephesus he is convinced that not the slightest evidence exists for believing that the building which is called the Tomb of St. Luke has any connection with the Evangelist.

CHARLES DICKENS' son Charles, who has already become distinguished for his successful bookmaking and as the manager of a large printing establishment, recently had all the stock of his Dictionaries of London, the Thames, and the continental railways, destroyed by fire.

REV. MR. HOLT, of Whitesville, Allegheny County, Pa., has been compelled to transfer his residence to the jail for stealing a horse and buggy. He is reported of the Universalist persuasion. It will not be strange if his faith in universal salvation is somewhat shaken in this case.

DEAN HOWSON, of Chester, England, who is best known in this country by the Life of St. Paul, which he wrote conjointly with the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, is the guest of the Hon. John Welsh of Philadelphia, and will soon deliver, in that city, a course of lectures, provided for by the Bohlen fund.

THE LINCOLN GUARD of Honor held a memorial service at the Lincoln Monument, on the occasion of the fifteenth anniversary of the death of Abraham Lincoln. The services began at twenty-two minutes past seven o'clock A.M., which corresponds with the time of the President's death at Washington.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR., recently lectured before the Independent Republicans of New York on "Individuality in Politics." Mr. Adams, in the course of his lecture, instanced James Freeman Clarke as the type of the Independent Republican, and the New York Nation of independent journalism, and thought that the special need of our politics is more of them.

PRINCE BISMARCK is more than six feet three inches high, and is by no means thin. He wears a uniform, and the lapels of his coat, of a bright yellow, overspread his immense chest. He writes at his desk nearly all night long, and then he sleeps until about noon. He likes to sleep with street noises about him. He has in his study portraits of Moltke, Beaconsfield, and King Humbert.

THE Woman's Journal is the authority for this statement: "Miss Gabriella T. Stickney, who was for a number of years a compositor in the Chicago Legal News office, has, in addition to the office of Postmistress, secured the appointment of notary public, and now does most of the swearing for the village of Collyer, Kansas." Doing the swearing for a whole Western village must be a pretty heavy responsibility.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL, in his last article, says that the emotions of man are older than his understanding, and that the poet who brightens, purifies, and exalts these emotions may claim a position in the world, at least, as high and well assumed as that of the man of science, because he ministers to different but equally permanent needs of human nature. The man of science, he thinks, will never be able to destroy the glory of the lilies of the field.

THE FOLLOWING is Emile Zola's style of working: He collects, by degrees, a series of notes,—a sketch of character here, an episode there, a detail here, a mot there,—and he puts all these together after having carefully numbered the pages, and then digests the whole. It is then, and not till then, that he begins writing; but such is the mathematical care with which the notes and memoranda have been collected and put together that he can tell beforehand exactly how much work he will get through in a day, and announce to his publisher the precise date when the novel will be ready for publication.

"IN EVERY AGE," says Fichte, the German scholar, "the kind of education and spiritual culture by means of which the age hopes to lead mankind to the knowledge of the ascertained part of the divine idea is the learned culture of the age, and every man who partakes in this culture is the scholar of the age. To maintain their places and to be leaders of men, preachers should feel the necessity of devoting themselves to severe mental and spiritual training, and by studying, praying, thinking, by close, self-denying labor, that sometimes sees the stars grow pale, to obtain a deep and broad culture."

SECRETARY SHERMAN, in a speech at his home in Mansfield, Ohio, March 31, said that the Republican party proposes to maintain and enforce the constitutional amendments with all the powers of the National Government, so that every man, poor or rich, white or black, may be secure in the full enjoyment of his civil and political rights, and to foster and extend the system of free common schools, both by State and National Governments, to the end that every child of the proper age may receive instruction in the primary branches of education, and thus give the poor as well as the rich, a fair chance in life, so that the opportunities to win an honorable position in life may not be confined to any favored or fortunate class.

SHAKESPEARE'S birthday was duly observed in New York on the 23d of April. Miss Kate Field, who took a prominent part in the recent English Shakespeare festivals, for the benefit of the Stratford-on-Avon Memorial, arranged a novel and interesting celebration for the occasion. She had, while in Shakespeare's birthplace, procured a slip of a mulberry-tree from the very grounds surrounding the house in which the poet was born, and meant to plant this tree yesterday in Central Park. The gardeners, however, gave it as their opinion that owing to the cool weather the tree would die, if planted now; and the event had therefore, to be postponed till May. Miss Field, however, in order to contribute still further to the progress of the Memorial, gave for the benefit of the fund for constructing the art gallery and library at Stratford-on-Avon an appropriate musical monologue at Chickering Hall.

IT IS CLEAR that Mr. D. A. Wasson does not hold Jonathan Edwards in very high esteem, if we may credit this report of his remarks at a recent meeting of the Chestnut Street Club in Boston: "In discussing Dr. Holmes' Essay on Edwards the other day, he mentioned that in his diary Edwards said that he desired so to live as to secure for himself the greatest amount of future happiness. 'I don't believe he was a good man,' asserted Mr. Wasson. 'In that is the key to his character. Edwards had a realizing mind, which understood fully the terrible import of eternal punishment and total depravity. Now the man who realizes those things and rolls them as a sweet morsel under his tongue and then becomes a father, that man is a scoundrel.' Mr. Wasson thought most men did not thoroughly realize the full terrible truth of those doctrines, but Edwards did. 'He was a cold-hearted, hard man; and his exaltations would have been possible only to a man essentially and at the core bad.'"

AMONG THE NOTABLE PERSONS who have recently passed away in New York, there is none whose decease has awakened a more profound or general sense of loss than that of Joseph Seligman, of the banking-house of Seligman & Brothers,—an event attributed to heart disease, that occurred at the residence of Mrs. Hellman, his daughter, in New Orleans, Sunday, April 25, whither Mr. Seligman had lately arrived, as he thought, with improved health, in company with his wife, from an absence of some months in the South. Mr. Seligman was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1819, and was the eldest of eight brothers. He was educated at the University of Erlangen, and came to this country when but eighteen years of age. After two years of service as cashier for the late Judge Asa Packer, at Nesquehoning, Pa., he entered into business for himself at Greensborough, Ala. This enterprise was attended by marked prosperity, and enabled him in 1848 to remove to New York, where he became an importing clothier. A few years later, having been joined by several of his brothers in this country, he founded with them the banking-house of J. & W. Seligman, of which well-known and prosperous firm he was the principal member, up to the time of his death. The banking-house just referred to is one of the most extensive in this country, and has branches of its business at Paris, Frankfurt, London, and New Orleans. In addition to Mr. Seligman's great distinction in business and financial circles, he was noted for his urbane and kindly manners and his free-handed, unpretentious benevolence. He was the founder of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum of New York; a constant, helpful friend of the Hebrew people in this country, of which he was one of the foremost representatives; and actively and earnestly interested in various works of charity. He was the president of the Society for Ethical Culture of New York, and a warm and devoted friend of Prof. Adler. It was through Mr. Seligman's munificence that a professorship was founded, some years ago, at Cornell University, which was filled by Mr. Adler during its continuance. A few months since, Mr. Seligman gave to Mr. Adler the handsome sum of $10,000 to aid him in promoting the objects of the free kindergarten of his society, and in other educational and philanthropic enterprises; and there was no one who sympathized more appreciatively in his aims, or cherished a larger faith in the movement of the new religion which he represents. Great as is the vacancy which he leaves in the world of business and financial affairs, that is no less a one which he leaves as the friend of his race and humanity, the wise and helpful counsellor toward benevolent and enlightening ends, who lived amid busy and engrossing cares with constant thoughts of disinterestedness and service to others. To honor those who have so nobly lived is to honor ourselves.

FOREIGN.

THE FIFTH centenary of the death of St. Catherine of Siena is to be celebrated by the Dominican Order on the 30th inst.

THE Telegraph Berlin correspondent learns from St. Petersburg that the nervous prostration of the Czar occasions the most serious apprehensions.

DR. SCHLIEMANN states that he has finished the excavation of Troy, and that there are remnants of several cities clearly discernible underneath the one immortalized in the Iliad.

AN INTERNATIONAL LITERARY CONGRESS is to be held this year in Lisbon on June 1, the three hundredth anniversary of the Portuguese poet, Camoens.

The King of Portugal will act as president of the congress.

THE SUPERIORS of the unauthorized religious confraternities in France have met in conference, and resolved not to comply with the demand of the Government that they should submit their statutes to the civil authorities.

THE SALVATION ARMY were brought before the Portsmouth court for the second time, on Thursday, charged with obstruction. The captain contended that a greater obstruction was caused by the band playing outside the general's house every evening. They were dismissed with a caution.

A UNIVERSAL CONGRESS of Freethinkers will be held at Brussels next August. The congress will include representatives of the National Secular Society, the British Secular Union, the Liberal League of America, the Federation des Sociétés Rationalistes Belges, and the Libre-Pensée of Brussels and of Antwerp.

ON TUESDAY, the ceremony of christening and blessing the yacht "Livadia," which is being built for the Czar, took place at Messrs. Elder & Co.'s ship-building yard, Glasgow. Admiral Popoff and a number of Russian officials and a select company were present. The Rev. Surinoff and assistants of the Russian embassy performed the ceremony.

THERE WAS a heavy snow-fall in the north of Scotland Wednesday and Thursday, April 7 and 8, and the weather was very severe. Thunder and lightning were prevalent. Vessels arrived in the Firth of Tay report the lightning as having been of extreme brilliancy along the coast, and the peals of thunder almost incessant. Snow fell in the north to a depth of three inches, and the air was cold and frosty.

AT THE BANQUET given at the Continental Hotel in Paris, on Sunday, presided over by Prince Oscar of Sweden, M. Nordenskjöld stated that, after a great number of men of experience had declared the enterprise impossible, the north-east passage was at last realized, and that without the death of a single man and without having sustained the least damage. The saving of distance by his new route is equal to one-third of the ordinary route.

THE LONDON Examiner has again changed hands, having passed into the charge of a wealthy Hungarian. His editor is Mr. Charles Williams, a well-known writer on the London press. Within the last eight years, that paper has passed through some remarkable vicissitudes, having been conducted by the following gentlemen: Mr. P. A. Taylor, Mr. McCullagh Torrens, M.P., Mr. H. R. Fox Bourne, Mr. W. Minto, Mr. Robert Williams, Mr. E. D'Aigdor, and Mr. Charles Williams.

A MEDICAL student named John Martin has been charged at the Marlborough Street police court with causing an obstruction in a public thoroughfare. He bought a number of newspapers, and made a bet that he would sell them all in the streets. In endeavoring to do so, he commenced shouting, "Shocking suicide of Mr. Gladstone." A large crowd quickly assembled, and the police finding that he was causing an obstruction locked him up. The magistrate said that as the prisoner had now had his freak out he might go.

A DEMOCRATIC manifesto has been published in Spain, demanding religious liberty, liberty of the press, of public meeting, association, and education, universal suffrage, decentralization, obligatory military service for all, economy in the public service, respect for the rights of individuals, improved control over the finances, the assimilation of Cuba to the mother country, and the irremovability of the judges of the peninsula. The document is signed by two hundred and seventy-nine former deputies and senators and twenty-one journalists.

AT THE MONTHLY meeting of the Christian Knowledge Society, on Tuesday, the society gave the following grants: £1,000 for the endowment of the bishopric of North China; £500 for the endowment of the diocese of Trinidad; £540 for the mission house at Poona, Bombay; and £600 for money prizes to pupil teachers in church training colleges. At the next monthly meeting, the standing committee will propose a grant of £1,000 for the cathedral church which is to be erected at Lahore. Is it to be presumed that all the heathen in England have been converted?

LONDON World: "A certain noble lord, whose name shall be unmentioned, went over to Galway the other day with designs upon the borough. To conciliate the sober-minded, he paraded the town with a monster silver temperance medal assertively displayed on his manly breast. 'God help us!' cried the fishwives of the Claddagh, 'what an abominable gntleman he must be!' But the conducting agent of one of the candidates had in his pocket a report of the appearance of a certain noble lord, for drunkenness and unparliamentary language and conduct, before a Westminster police court, and asked him how he thought it would look in large type as an election poster. His lordship did not offer himself for the borough."

ANOTHER PENTECOST has come upon Newport, in Monmouthshire, where the "Salvationists" have been "winning souls" in shoals. One of their "majors" thus describes what took place at a recent meeting: "The glory came in a marvellous manner. Talk about a baptism of fire, like they had at Pentecost, we were all filled and flooded, and some overwhelmed, with the Divine presence. And then captain and lieutenant lay on the floor, both were filled unutterably full of glory and of God." One poor woman had a real fit, and the excitement was so great that even some of the "Army"—inured though they were to hard fighting—ventured to suggest a general application of cold water. As yet there are no signs of the abatement of this new frenzy, but the reaction must surely come soon.—Secular Review.

THE LONDON correspondent of the Liverpool Weekly Mercury thus refers to the retiring premier: "Lord Beaconsfield no longer pretends to be the jubilant and confident statesman who flirted in the royal drawing-rooms and joked with everybody over his political fate. He is described as quiet and reserved. He feels the final blow to his personal prestige very deeply, and cannot, like younger men, look forward to a reversal of the national verdict at a later day. In fact, his defeat is an utter rout, and he admits it. He has no son in whom to exult, as Mr. Gladstone does. He tried to found a new school of Tory politicians, and would have done so, had his scheme succeeded; but his personal adherents, are now scattered, and his words of wisdom are as folly. The Conservatives generally are determined that the old and quieter system of politics suits them best."

THE FRENCH JESUITS.—Among the rumors afloat in regard to the future habitations of the French Jesuits there is one that several members of the Catholic and Tory nobility in England are preparing to welcome them in that country. Again it is said that a powerful colony will be established at Monaco, and that they will have a magnificent school there. Spain, the native land of Ignatius Loyola, and in whose cause against the French he was wounded at Pampeluna, first getting his notion of founding the Order while on his sick-bed, will open for them some of her ancient castles, and already they have obtained the palace of the Duke of Ossuna in Madrid. Another story is that they have offered $800,000 for the building and land in Cairo, Egypt, which were reserved by Ismail Pacha for a military academy, and that they are bargaining for a palace recently occupied by a Turkish Pacha at Alexandria.

THE ANCIENT city of Bruges, in Flanders, which Longfellow has celebrated in verse, and which in its prosperity reached a population of two hundred thousand, does not now possess one-fourth that number of souls. The old spirit has gone and none of the efforts hitherto made to restore the prosperity of the town have come to any important result. A liberal journal, published in Flanders, attributes the lethargy of the inhabitants to the effects of the numerous convents and richly endowed benevolent institutions, which, in supplying the wants of a large number of the inhabitants without exertion on their part, have helped to take away the energy and spirit essential to commercial success. It is said also that in no other great city of Belgium is education so much neglected as in Bruges, and this notwithstanding the wealth possessed by the religious establishments in the place.

THE MANNER in which the obnoxious church-rate is enforced in Southwark has again been brought before public notice. One victim, Mr. Fielding, having expressed before the magistrate his conscientious objections to this rate, proceeded to detail the very uncourteous manner in which he had been treated. "On the last occasion, not only did the collector go to his place of business when he knew he would be absent," but he—doubtless with a view of making himself as great a nuisance as possible—refrained from distraining upon any other of Mr. Fielding's property except his household furniture at Penge. The magistrate, Mr. Besley, could, of course, only administer the law; but he strongly advised the parochial authorities to fulfil their most unpleasant duty "with the utmost forbearance." It is to be hoped that this lingering relic of the evil past will not be much longer tolerated. It is a disgrace both to Southwark and the Established Church.—Secular Review.

THE LIBERATIONISTS are very happy. Mr. Richard and Mr. Illingworth, their leaders, are in again. Mr. Osborne Morgan, the exponent of the Burials Bill, has been triumphantly returned, and that measure will be carried this year or next; and seventeen members of the Liberation Society's committee are also members of Parliament. They have, it is true, to console themselves with Mr. Bradlaugh for the loss of Mr. John Morley at Westminster: him they particularly desired to see in Parliament. But they have, on the whole, gained a great deal in the elections. They must not be too confident, nevertheless. Nearly all the Liberal leaders have proclaimed that disestablishment is outside the controversies on which the present Parliament was returned, and several of them have pledged themselves that the country shall be again appealed to before disestablishment is dealt with. On the other hand, it is quite possible that, with household suffrage in the counties, the next election will turn upon the Church of Scotland.—London Correspondent Weekly Mercury.

CONFERENCE OF MORMONS.—The half-yearly conference of the Latter Day Saints was held on Sunday, in the Meeting-room, Manchester. The statistical report showed that there were 15 branches, having 1 high priest, 62 elders, 27 priests, 11 teachers, 15 deacons, and 293 church members; and that during the half-year 70 members had been baptized, 3 had been excommunicated, and 6 had died. The expenditure for the half-year ended December 31 amounted to £163, leaving a small balance in hand. The conference decided to sustain Mr. John Taylor as president of the twelve apostles, and as "prophet, seer, and revelator"; that the twelve apostles should also be sustained, with Messrs. J. W. Young and Daniel H. Wells as their councillors. It was also agreed that Mr. William Bridge should continue to be president of the church in the British Isles and adjacent countries; that Messrs. William Barnes and James Reece be reappointed as travelling elders; also, that the "saints should sustain the local priesthood in the several branches of the district." Religious services were held in the afternoon and evening, at which there were large attendances.—Lloyds' Weekly.

Communications.

CHURCH TAXATION.

DEFIANCE, Ohio, April 10, 1880.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Having just read the article on "Church Taxation" in THE INDEX of the 8th inst., I take great pleasure in sending you for publication the enclosed extract, upon the same subject, from an address delivered at the last Annual Fair Association at Hicksville in Defiance County, Ohio, by Hon. A. P. Edgerton of Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Mr. Edgerton is an earnest speaker and thinker, and his address contains so much food for thought that I think it should have a much wider circulation than it has received. The invitation and admonition which it contains, as to the duty of thinking, should entitle it to great consideration.

Permit me to add further that Mr. Edgerton represented the north-western district of Ohio, in Congress, for many years with great credit to himself and fidelity to his principles.

I understand that in religion he is an Episcopalian, or, at least, that he erected a neat church building at Hicksville, Ohio, at his own expense, and donated it to the Episcopal Church.

Yours truly,

A. S. L.

Extract.

Church property of all kinds, personal and real, should be taxed. There should be no exemptions whatever. To the extent that we exempt such property from taxation, we are compelled to support, by the taxation of other property, a church establishment whose ecclesiastical authority we deny, and whose spiritual guidance we reject. Such taxation is clearly in violation of our constitutions and the whole theory of our government. If the vast accumulations of landed wealth made for many ages by bishops, clergy, chapters, and monasteries created the jealousy of sovereigns in former times, how much more should such accumulations of wealth in these days, exempt from taxation, excite the attention and opposition of a free people?

It was an evil day when superstition required that a large portion of the labor of a country should be devoted to the support of a church; and it will be an evil day for us if we submit to have any portion of our property taken by taxation through any of the ingenious ways of indirection, to maintain any church, its appurtenances and properties of any kind.

The value of church property in the United States is stated at $354,483,221. It is probably nearer $500,000,000, all untaxed. The taxes on other property, not exempt, are increased, that this may be relieved. It is not public property in any legal or just sense, but private, and often exclusively private property.

Cathedrals, expensive church edifices, costing millions of dollars each, are erected; and in every city, tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars are put into church buildings, through the vanity, folly, or superstition of the people, and through the influence of the various ecclesiastical powers, each striving to excel the others, and to perpetuate in architectural grandeur and beauty the outward signs of religion and devotion, regardless of the enforced poverty and bankruptcy they too often cause. And now this injustice is echoed and reechoed through "every long drawn aisle and fretted vault," while lowlier worship mourns in silent prayer without. And on these solemn temples, the cunning devil smiles as he draws his interest on the mortgages which folly, not religion, has placed upon them and made security for the loan.

No wonder the cry goes up of religious languor and indifference, for the chief elements of religion have become "money, music, and melancholy," and "doctrines fashioned to the varying hour."

Taxing all these church properties would hereafter prevent the erection of such expensive churches, which are built as architectural ornaments, and not as really required places of worship.

I am in favor of these proposed changes in our manner of taxation, that the labor, the most valuable to the State and the least profitable to the laborer, shall be the most encouraged and the best protected. The reasonable profits of a tiller of the soil should not be taken away either by taxation or through exemptions, and he left powerless to prosper.

You will ask me how can the purposes of relief I have indicated be best accomplished? I answer, Think! There is potency in thought as well as in a plough; and you can use both. It is said that the Hebrew name for plough or ploughing signified "silent thought and attention." So give to this question your silent thought and attention. It is also said that "those who think must govern those who toil." Now if you will think, you can govern. To a certain extent the tillers of the soil permit others to do their thinking, and toil on, not unconcerned or unmindful of their necessities, but in fear that any effort to resist wrong doing in one direction, may increase it in another. By thinking for yourselves, I do not mean fence-corner complaining, or kitchen-fire growling, nor neighborhood grumbling about taxes and the oppressions and large profits of monopolies, of banks, railroads, and other corporations, which usually end in acquiescing in and perpetuating the wrongs you thus condemn, by your voting, again and again, for the very men who disregard your rights and impose these burthens upon you; but I do mean that calm, intent thinking which leads a farmer to know his just rights and his full power, and gives to him the will and the courage at all times boldly to exercise them for his own, and the ultimate good of his country.

FLORENCE.

AN INTERESTING ANNUAL REVIEW OF THE "COSMIANS' WORK.—ANNUAL REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE FREE CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY OF FLORENCE, FOR THE YEAR ENDING APRIL 5, 1880.

The executive committee congratulate the society on the completion of another year of successful work, making in all nearly seventeen years of prosperous existence as a liberal association. Organized, as we believe this society is, in harmony with the laws of man's being and progress, success is to be expected so long as the society is true to its objects and principles, which, as announced at its formation, are the promotion of good morals, general intelligence, and liberal religious sentiments. The society maintains that these objects and principles can be best promoted by upholding entire mental freedom and by referring all questions bearing upon man's welfare to the arbitrament of reason. No book, or creed, or church is so sacred that its doctrines may not be subjected to the test of scientific thought, and none should refuse submission to such a standard. In the fields of physical science, we should deem it the height of folly for an explorer to bind himself not to accept any theory which did not agree with his preconceived opinions. Why, any more, should an explorer in the realms of mental and moral science bind himself to uphold only certain stereotyped dogmas? Recognizing with awe the boundlessness of the universe and the infinitude of truth, this society refuses to limit the range of the human mind within the narrow bounds of a book or creed, preferring the modest bearing of the learner to the haughty attitude of the self-conceited. It rejects no doctrine of the past, simply because it is old; nor denies any theory of the present, merely because it is new. Summoning Reason to come forth from the tomb to which superstition has consigned her, it unlooses her bonds and bids her go free.

This society respects all that is good and true in all systems of religion. Its platform is broad enough for all beliefs; its condition of membership being character, not creed. It has been erroneously called an infidel society. But it is neither infidel nor Christian, neither pagan nor Mohammedan. If to keep an open ear to all sincere utterances; if to be willing to tender hospitality to all worthy and intelligent teachers and candidly weigh all doctrines brought before us; if to respect all who may differ with us in religious opinions; if to give reformers, against whom pulpits are shut and barred, the freedom of our platform to plead for the down-trodden and oppressed; if to grant what churches generally refuse, an opportunity for woman to vindicate the just claims of our wives, daughters, and mothers to equality with man before the law, and their self-evident right to the ballot withheld from them by so-called republican governments,—if to do all these and many other things of like nature make a society an infidel association, then this Free Congregational society of Florence is an infidel organization, and will glory in the name. It claims, however, to be founded for no sectarian belief or unbelief. It is built for fair play; for the study of nature and the seeking for truth; for upholding the rights of man and woman, everywhere and forever.

During the past year the platform has been occupied by the following speakers: L. K. Washburn, Dio Lewis, C. D. B. Mills, Prof. Gunning, Giles B. Stebbins, John W. Chadwick, Theodore D. Weld, George Jacob Holyoake, Loring Moody, Wallace Bruce, D. P. Ames, Miss M. A. Hardeker, Rowland Connor, W. S. Kennedy, and N. A. Haskell, each one Sunday; William Denton, C. B. Ferry, Samuel B. Weston, Ivan Panin, and John Baker, each two Sundays; and Frederick A. Hincley, three Sundays. The meetings on nineteen Sundays were conducted by our own members, as follows: eleven by the choir and Sunday-school, and eight devoted to miscellaneous exercises, including the reading of one sermon of John W. Chadwick, four sermons of M. J. Savage, and two original essays by our own members; one by Miss Emma Townsend, the other by Miss Ella C. Elder. The vacation embraced the five Sundays of August.

The following topics have been handled by our speakers: "Mohammed and his Religion"; "Gospel according to Gossip"; "The Commands of Jesus not kept by Professing Christians"; "The Chinese Question"; "Temperance"; "Lagging Behind"; "Personal Religion"; "Intellect and Emotion, or the Rationality of the Sentiments"; "Science and Progress"; "Evolution of Religion"; "The Rights of Children" (by two speakers); "Industrial Equity"; "Organization"; "Spiritualism the Religion of the Future"; "Rational Religion"; Wm. Lloyd Garrison"; "Some of the Unregarded Aspects of Human Nature"; "The Word of God,—What it is, and What it is Not"; "The New Religion"; "William Cullen Bryant"; "The Elements of Success"; "The True Sphere of Civil Government"; "Russia"; "Nihilism"; "Prison Life in Russia"; "Science and Religion"; "The Kind of Morals required in this Age of the World"; "Theatricality"; "Is Life Worth Living?" The topics of the five sermons which were read were the following: "Is Life Worth Living?" "Religion and Morality"; "Origin of Goodness"; and "The Nature of Goodness." The subjects of the original essays were "Joan of Arc," by Miss Townsend, and "The Stoics," by Miss Elder. The Sunday-school of the society, as will appear from the report of the superintendent, has well maintained its unique and useful plan of work. The committee regret the enforced absence through another year of the excellent superintendent, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Bond; though the school has been wisely managed by Miss Mary W. Bond and Miss E. C. Elder, respectively. Miss Bond continued to act as superintendent pro tem, until the 7th of last September, inclusive, when she resigned, in order to resume her favorite charge, as teacher in the school. Miss Elder was appointed by the committee to succeed Miss Bond, and give her whole time to the duties of the office. She began her work on Sunday, the 14th of last September, and has discharged her trust faithfully and to the general acceptance.

At the last annual meeting, seventeen new members were added to our number. The attendance at our meetings has been well kept up, and a lively interest shown in the exercises. The contributions to the treasury have been larger than during any previous year, so that the treasurer is again able to report the society out of debt, and a balance of $53.50 on hand. Our efficient helpers, the Ladies' Industrial Union, have our cordial thanks for their generous contribution of $308.83 towards defraying the expenses of the society during the past year, besides making a donation to the society of the following useful articles; namely, one street-lamp, one dozen goblets, a lot of table linen, one mirror, one brush, and a porch-lamp (a present to the Union from Mr. Geo. D. Atkins, of Boston), the whole donation valued at $25.76, making the value of the whole contribution to the society by the Ladies' Industrial Union, during the past year, $334.59. We are happy to know that this useful industrial organization is a growing power for good, both pecuniarily and socially. We would gratefully acknowledge the very acceptable services of the choir, the Cosmian quartette and other musicians, in contributing so largely to the interest and enjoyment of our Sunday gatherings.

The charge is often made against liberals that they pull down, but do not build up. This imputation will not apply to this society; for we have not only aimed to break down the bloody altars of superstition, but we have also built up a temple of liberty and virtue. Our work is both destructive and constructive. We mean to keep clear of the folly of which too many liberals seem to be the victims; namely, that of going forth single-handed to contend with the well-drilled and banded hosts of religious despotism, instead of wielding the power of combined forces,—the strength of union for the defence of freedom and the spread of knowledge and goodness. Having ourselves experienced the joys and privileges of rational freedom, we feel it our duty to work for the diffusion of the same blessings among others. We have, therefore, organized this society; and the results, as we see, have been auspicious beyond our most sanguine expectations. In view, therefore, of the glorious success of our experiment, and our great gain therefrom in strength and the means of usefulness, our rallying cry to all liberals is, "Arise and build" on the firm foundations of liberty, science, and virtue.

By order of the Executive Committee.

SETH HUNT, Chairman.

JONATHAN EDWARDS' THEOLOGY.

A PAPER ON EDWARDS BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, AT THE CHESTNUT STREET CLUB.—THE OLD DIVINE AND HIS STRICT THEOLOGY.

At Mrs. John T. Sargent's, on Chestnut Street, April 19, was the regular April meeting of the Chestnut Street Club. Whether it was because of the popularity and brilliancy of the essayist, or of the fame of the subject of the essay, or of the nearness with which the doctrines cited came home to every listener, or of the moulding influence of the old theology upon New England life, or of the keenness of the discussion, that the meeting was one of unusual note, it may not be possible to decide; for all of those elements entered into the success of the day. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was the essayist; Jonathan Edwards was the subject. His theology was outlined in its heavy bearing upon the individual life of each human being; the present New England type of man, in his intimate relation to the theology of his fathers, was so presented as to show the indebtedness of the present to the past; and the debaters were persons well qualified to criticise the old Northampton doctrines. Dr. Holmes' essay was both biographical and critical. Enough was given of the history of Jonathan Edwards to throw light upon his personal character and surroundings; but nearly all the time was devoted to his theology. With Edwards' character, he spoke in sympathy; but the feeling did not extend to his theology, which was spitted upon epithets drawn from its own sulphurous vocabulary, and held up in all its unnatural cruelty and monstrosity. A careful comparison was made by Dr. Holmes of Edwards and Pascal, the great French divine; and they were shown to have much similarity in personal traits, though they held widely diverse theological opinions. Edwards' God was said to be a quaternity,—the fourth person being Justice, to whom the Father was subject, as Jupiter was subject to Fate. Dr. Holmes also reviewed Edwards' theory of the freedom of the will, and traced many of his opinions, and even his language, back to Thomas Boston, of Scotland. That part of Edwards' theology in which he asserts total depravity, infant damnation, and the hate of God for all who have not repented was severely criticised by Dr. Holmes.

The venerable Dr. Bartol began the discussion, and declared his sympathies with the views expressed by Dr. Holmes. Professor Benjamin Pierce said that it was surprising that, from a gospel whose cornerstone is love, there has grown a belief in such a horrible doctrine as this of infant damnation and eternal punishment. It seems as if the devil must have been at Edwards' ear. Dr. Bowditch affirmed that clergymen must take a different position from that they now hold, if they want to preserve anything of the present beliefs in Christianity. Christ was one of the most holy men who ever lived. He propounded noble principles, and died a horrible death because he was true to those principles. Christ is not divine, and in that sense could not have died to save men. Of Jonathan Edwards' doctrine of punishment, Dr.

Bowditch said it was a damnable thing, and he wondered that men ever lived under such teachings.

Wendell Phillips was inclined to take up the defence of Edwards. The old theologian, he said, did not differ radically from the current theology of New England. Fifty years before him, and a hundred years after him, New England was largely inspired by such theology, and it can be traced home to Scotland. We are rather a New Scotland than New England, in that respect. This theology has largely affected our present life. No rich man hardly dares to die until he has left a bequest to some public institution. Where did this feeling come from? A better word is necessary to do justice to Edwards than was contained in Dr. Holmes' estimate of him. He was a great force in New England, and the "gods" of the Connecticut Valley grew up under such preaching as his. In high character, devotion to public interests, and great self-sacrifice they were as good as anything we have to-day.

Next came Mr. D. A. Wasson, who was the most emphatic of all the opponents of the Edwards' theology. At the very outset, he asserted that he did not believe any good ever came out of Edwards' philosophy. The idea of making a church of the community, in all its civil and economic order, was being abandoned, and religion became the concern of each individual. In his diary, Edwards said that he desired so to live as to secure for himself the greatest amount of future happiness. "I don't believe he was a good man," asserted Mr. Wasson. "In that is the key to his character. Edwards had a realizing mind which understood fully the terrible import of eternal punishment and total depravity. Now the man who realizes those things, and rolls them as a sweet morsel under his tongue, and then becomes a father,—that man is a scoundrel." Mr. Wasson thought most men did not thoroughly realize the full, terrible truth of those doctrines; but Edwards did. "He was a cold-hearted, hard man, and his exaltations would have been possible only to a man essentially and at the core bad."

Mr. Phillips here put in a word for the old Puritan doctrine, saying that the men of the time believed about two-thirds of it,—that is, they did not practically follow it to the Edwards extreme. But it is not philosophical to suppose that the clergymen, lawyers, and farmers who made this country did not know what they believed. Mr. Wasson replied that Edwards was not acceptable to his people. Of Whitefield's sneers, Edwards remarked: "The Lord has not thought me worthy to convert my own people." James Freeman Clarke then entered the lists against the old Northampton divine. In every man's mind, he said, there is a living and a dead theology,—the former what he believes and practises in his life, the latter what he has been taught. Mr. Clarke did not regard the Calvinism of New England as real Calvinism. It was only that part which makes justice supreme, not that part which makes love supreme. In the New England people, the sense of right and wrong is preëminent; they trained their children in the distinctions; and thus were produced the great men of whom Mr. Phillips spoke. It made people very serious in their way of thinking. There is no feeling in New England Christianity, and no light-heartedness. But this very character made the backbone, the vertebral column, that supports the rest of the country. Yet this vertebral column is not the whole man. Mr. Clarke spoke of Edwards as logician, metaphysician, and theologian, regarding the latter as the only character in which he has had permanent influence. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and President Warren, of Boston University, also spoke before the company dispersed. The next meeting of the club will be on the third Monday in May.

JEFFERSON'S DESK.

THE DESK ON WHICH THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE WAS WRITTEN MADE A GIFT TO THE GOVERNMENT.

WASHINGTON, April 15.

It will be remembered that the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop in the course of the centennial oration delivered by him on the 4th of July, 1876, in Music Hall, Boston, exhibited to the audience there gathered the writing-desk upon which the Declaration of Independence was written; and the thoughts suggested by this interesting historical relic formed one of the most eloquent passages of his oration. He concluded his allusion to this desk with these words:—

"Long may it find its appropriate and appreciating ownership in the successive generations of a family in which the blood of Virginia and Massachusetts is so auspiciously commingled. Should it, in the lapse of years, ever pass from the hands of those to whom it will be so precious an heirloom, it could only have its fit and final place among the choicest and most cherished treasures of the nation, with the above title deeds of independence it so proudly asserted."

This evening, the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, who is now in Washington, took the occasion of a call at the executive mansion to deliver personally to the President, as a gift to the United States, the little mahogany desk on which Mr. Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. It was presented in the name of the children of the late Mr. Joseph Coolidge of Boston, to whom it was given by Jefferson himself in 1825, whose granddaughter Mr. Coolidge had married, and has an autograph inscription, as follows:—

"Thomas Jefferson gives this writing-desk to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., as a memorial of his affection. It was made from a drawing of his own, by Ben Randall, cabinet-maker of Philadelphia, with whom he first lodged on his arrival in that city in May, 1776, and the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence. Politics as well as religion has its superstitions; these, gaining strength with time, may one day give imaginary value to this relic for its association with the birth of the great charter of our independence."

It is probable that this desk will be deposited in the fire-proof library of the State department, where is kept the original draft of the Declaration, written on this desk.—Advertiser.

JESTINGS.

A SCHOOL-BOY'S essay on "Liberty" concluded with "the rights of the people should be preserved in violet."

SENSIBLE MARRIED men always depend on their better halves when they want to change their quarters.

"ALCOHOL WILL clean silver." Yes, alcohol well stuck to will clean all the silver you have—out of your pocket.

A PAPER HAS this announcement: "Two sisters want washing." Many brothers are in the same predicament.

FROM THE DETROIT Free Press: "It is said that a baby will cry no harder if a pin is stuck into him than he will if the cat won't let him pull her tail."

A BOY OF FOUR, taken to church for the first time, listened to the organ for a few moments, and then said: "When will the organ man let the monkey out?"

A WISCONSIN WOMAN has been married fifty-eight years, and has never missed building her kitchen fire. Her husband is probably the oldest fire-escape on record.

"DON'T BE AFRAID," said a snob to a German laborer: "sit down and make yourself my equal." "I would haff to blow my brains out," was the reply of the Teuton.

THE PRESS and the pulpit may say what they please, but a man in dove-colored pants and patent leather boots is not a fit person to adjust a tub for catching rain-water.

FIVE STUDENTS are said to have been sentenced, in Russia, to exile to Siberia for life. They will thus be enabled to carry on their future studies in the School of Mines.—Fun.

AN IRREVERENT young man at communion-service handed back the wine goblet to the old deacon, and astonished him by whispering in his ear, "That's about the worst port I ever tasted."

AN IRISH DRUMMER, who now and then indulged in a noggin of poteen, was accosted by the reviewing general: "What makes your nose so red?" "Plaze yer Honor," replied Pat, "I always blush when I spake to a general officer."

"WHAT YOU SAY, doctor, about 'poverty being no crime,' is all well enough in the abstract, but, as a matter of fact, a man without means is always devoid of principal." And the banker passed the walnuts to his guest with a self-satisfied air.

LAWYER C. (entering the office of his friend Dr. M., and speaking in a hoarse whisper): "Fred, I've got such a cold this morning that I can't speak the truth." Dr. M.: "Well, I'm glad that it's nothing that will interfere with your business."

IN ST. LOUIS, a newly married lady, of genteel appearance, went into a furniture store, and inquired for "a large family fruit basket." The "interesting" creature was promptly shown a three-dollar cradle, which was just what she wanted she said.

ABSURD QUESTION.—A German lately applied for a situation as a sailor on board a vessel lying in the North River. "Have you ever been to sea?" asked the captain. The German stared a moment, and then said, "Does you s'pose I comed over from Germany in a balloon?"

"HOW MANY GLASSES did the Herr Doctor drink, Gretchen?" asked a German landlord of his daughter, on his guest leaving the cellar. "Eight, father," replied the girl. "The rascal!" exclaimed the irate host. "Why, he gave me strict orders never to drink more than three!"

A DROLL FELLOW up in Connecticut fished a rich old man out of the mill-pond, and received the offer of twenty-five cents from the rescued miser. "Oh, that's too much!" exclaimed he: "taint wuth it!" And he handed back twenty-one cents, saying calmly, as he pocketed four cents, "That's about right!"

THE GENTLEMAN who attracted attention in church one week by crying out, "Holy Moses," had no intention of disturbing the congregation. He had been tacking down carpets the day before, and just as he sat down in his pew he suddenly remembered that he had half a paper of tacks in his coat-skirt pocket.

A BOY CAN IMAGINE almost anything: he can lug an old shot-gun about all day without firing at a living thing, and be under the impression that he's having a howling good time. But all attempts to induce a boy to imagine that he's killing Indians when he is sawing wood have proved futile.—Bristol (Penn.) Observer.

A LAWYER and a clergyman were conversing about the direction of the wind. The former said: "We go by the court-house vane." "And we," remarked the parson, "go by the church vane." "Well," said the disciple of Blackstone, "in the matter of wind, that is the best authority." And the clergyman went home to cogitate.

THIS IS THE way the editor of one of our New England contemporaries gets even with a rival: "A despatch informs us that the latest styles of gentlemen's shirts are of black cambric with small white spots. All, then, that our editor friend will have to do to be in fashion will be simply to take a piece of chalk and make spots on his shirt."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 30 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Gardin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.
 EDITOR
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.
 The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Uncle Consens; or, The Aunt-Bill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins.".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Saints Conquering; or, The Anti-Bill. Illustrations.....	1.50
tennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, The Life and Conception of the Idea and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the World. A Study of the Principles to "Literature and Dogma.".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaac X.....	1.50
French Etou.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher School and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	2.25
London Street.....	1.00
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA O.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol.; Any other sold separately.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Home Circle.....	1.00
Socialism. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD) The Childhood of the World.....	1.25
Childhood of Religions.....	1.50
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthropology.....	1.50
Idols.....	2.00
CORRELATION. A Series of Expositions of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

LIFE; its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....

DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous.....

DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....
Journal of Researches.....
Different Forms of Flowers.....
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....
The Domestication of Animals and Plants under Domestication..... Illustrated.....
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....
Orchids.....
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....
Intellectual Development.....
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede.
Illustrated.....
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....
Romola. Illustrated.....
Scott's Clerical Life and Silas Marner.
Illustrated.....
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....
EMERSON'S (R. W.). Essays. First Series.
Portrait.....
Essays. Second Series.....
Miscellaneous.....
Representative Men.....
The English Church. 2 vols.....
Conduct of Life.....
Poems. With Portrait.....
May-day and Other Pieces.....
Society and Solitude.....
Letters and Social Aims.....
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the Death of Ariadne Coguere to the Younger.....
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy.....
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....
Child's Book of Religion.....
Transcendentalism in New England.....
Life of Gerrit Smith.....
Creative Consciousness.....
Galle of the Church.....
Rising and Setting Faith.....
Visions of the Future.....
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each
1 vol.....
Sermons. New Series.....
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....
Stories of the Patriarchs.....
Spirit of the New Faith.....
Safest Creed.....
Knowledge and Religion.....
FROTHINGHAM'S (MARGARET) Complete Works,
including Memoirs by Emerson, O. B. F.,
and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius.....
An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English
Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.
Elektive Affinitäten.....
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas
Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....
Literary and Social Judgments.....
Creed of Christendom.....
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents,
Private Memoranda, and Original
Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portraiture.....
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp.
Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.
Book III. In France.....
Thought about Thought.....
The Intellectual Life.....
Chapters on Animals.....
Round my House.....
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River.
The two in one volume.....
Wendell and I. A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....
The Life of J. M. W. Turner. R.A. With nine Illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and nine Woodcuts.....
Ernest and Eberhard.....
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....
Gala Days.....
Woman's Wrongs.....
Summer Rest.....
Winter Amusements.....
Stumbling Blocks.....
Wool-Gathering.....
Sermons to the Clergy.....
Sketches and Sketches.....
First Love is Best.....
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....
I. On the History of the Human Mind.....
2. Logical Lectures.....
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers
Bits of Travel.....
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado
Life. Illustrated.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....
Atlantic Essays.....
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....
On the History of Species.....
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate
Animals.....
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....
On and Addresses.....
American Addresses.....
Phylogeny, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....

Other Lectures.....
The Ghosts, etc.....
The Mistakes of Moses.....
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain,
Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Science. By W. L. G.

V. Food, By EDWARD SPAULDING.
 IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations, By ALEX. BAIRD.
 V. The Study of Sociology. By HERBERT SPENCER, Esq.
 VI. New Chemistry. By JOSIAH P. COOKE, Jr.
 VII. The Conservation of Energy. By BALFOUR STEWART, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.
 VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying. By J. BELLETTRE, with an Introduction on Aeronautics, By J. BELLETTRE.
 IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By HENRY MAUDSLEY, M.D.
 X. Science of Law. By PROF. S. AMOS.
 XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. MAREY.
 XII. The History of the Controversy between Religion and Science. By J. W. DRAPER, M.D., LL.D.
 XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.
 XIV. Chemistry of Light and Photography. By PROF. VOGEL.
 XV. Fungi. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D.
 XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. WHITNEY.
 XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By GEORGE B. SARGENT.
 XVIII. The Nature of Light. By DR. ERNEST LOMMEL.
 XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesmates. By MONS. VAN BENEDEK.
 XX. On Fermentations. By F. SCHÜTZENBERGER.
 XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By JULIUS BERNSTEIN.
 XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By PROF. PIETRO BLASERNA.
 XXIII. The Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. LOCKYER.
 JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions and their Relation to Universal Religion. India. China.
 JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS, the Jewish Historian.
 JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek, University of Cambridge.
 KNAPPET (J.) The Religion of Israel. A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.
 LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.
 History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.
 LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. Confucius and Chinese Classics.
 LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by ELLEN FROTHINGHAM.
 LEWES (G. R.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II.
 The Physical Basis of Mind.
 The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.
 LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.
 LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.
 The Biglow Papers. First Series.
 The Biglow Papers. Second Series.
 Among my Books.
 A Fable for Critics.
 Under the Willows and other Poems.
 The Vision of Sir Launfal.
 Three Memorial Poems.
 Fireside Travels.
 LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization. A Comparative Condition of Man. Prehistoric Times.
 LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.
 MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.
 MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Political. 2 vols. For vol.
 MERIAUX'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.
 Conversion of the Northern Nations.
 MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.
 The Examination of the Philosophy of SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON. 2 vols., each.
 The Positive Philosophy of AUGUSTE COMTE.
 Political Economy. New and revised edition.
 The Subjection of Women—Essays on Liberty—both in one vol.
 Representative Government.
 Autobiography.
 Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.
 Three Essays. Second Edition.
 MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land.
 The Ship in the Desert.
 Songs of Italy.
 MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.
 Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin.
 Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.
 Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.
 MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.
 Rousseau, 2 vols.
 MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.
 MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.
 The Same. Second Series.
 Chippendale's German Words.
 Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.
 Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Zoology, etc., etc., completing the work.
 Four vols. First volume.
 Lectures on the Science of Religion.
 On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.
 Lectures on the Science of Religion.
 On Science as Illustrated by the Religions of India.
 NEWMAN (FRANÇOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.
 Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.
 The Social Order.
 PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.
 Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.

Occasional Sermons, . . . vols. . . .
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings . . .
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson, With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.
The two Christmas Celebrations, . . . A. D. I,
and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story . . .
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite. . . .
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....

The Topsy Book.....

Men, Women, and Ghosts.....

Hedged In.....

The Silent Partner.....

What to Wear?.....

Poetic Studies.....

The Story of the Isles.....

Trotty's Wedding.....

Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....

Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Experiments on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....

Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....

The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....

The Expanses of Heaven.....

ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....

SCHLELL (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....

SCIENCE PRIMERS:

1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....

2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....

3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....

4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....

5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....

6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....

7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.A.S.....

8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....

9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....

10. Inventional Geometry. By Spencer.....

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....

SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....

SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical.....

First Principles.....

Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....

Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....

Social Studies; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....

The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....

The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....

Philosophy of Style.....

Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....

Sociology.....

Descriptive Sociology. Parts I. II., and III., each.....

Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....

Universal Progress.....

Do's of Ethics.....

STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tom's Cabin.....

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....

New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 2 vols.....

TAIN'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....

TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....

THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....

Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Woe in Woods.....

Cape Cod.....

Letters.....

A Yankee in Canada.....

A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....

TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....

Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....

TYNDALL (JOHN.) Faraday as a Discoverer.....

Fragments of Science for Uneducated People.....

Light and Electricity.....

Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....

Heat as a Mode of Motion.....

On Sound.....

Radiant Heat.....

Forms of Water.....

Lectures on Light.....

Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....

Lecture in the British Association held at Oxford.....

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....

Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....

Saunterings.....

Back-Log Studies.....

WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....

Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....

West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....

Essays and Reviews.....

Character and Characteristic Men.....

The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....

Success and its Conditions.....

Washington and the Revolution.....

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....

A Boy's Story.....

Real Folks.....

The Other Girls.....

Pansies. A volume of Poems.....

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....

Child Life.....

ADDRESS:

T H E I N D E X

231 Washington St., Boston.

ADDRESS

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.
"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.
"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.
"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.
"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.
"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.
"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.
"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . The work is strongly written, and discuses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.
"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.
"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.
"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.
"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK, THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . When we consider their quality, we marvel for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S DINING ROOMS.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion. 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 285 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigma of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 324 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N.Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 542

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE Catholic World has been reading the writings of the Father of his Country to small purpose: "In all the voluminous writings of General Washington, the holy name of Jesus Christ is never once written."

PROFESSOR HUXLEY, in a lecture at the Royal Institution, April 8, declared again, with emphasis, that the doctrine of evolution is "no longer a matter of speculation," but "simply the only way of coherently and rationally explaining the facts of paleontology."

PRINCE NAPOLEON, according to a French newspaper, now confesses to having eaten a pork sausage on a Good Friday, an achievement repeatedly denied by too zealous partisans. His excuse is that his wife, the Princess Clotilde, being very pious and scrupulously observing all the Church fast-days, he, who dislikes meagre fare, habitually dined out with friends every Friday. He did not even know that it was Good Friday when he partook of the much-vituperated repast with Sainte-Beuve, and had no thought of bravado.

THE LONDON Secular Review, by far the most respectable journal of the secularists of England, said in its issue of April 17: "The Boston Investigator says that the Secular Review 'seems to manifest considerable interest in the Liberal Leagues of this country, yet its zeal is not always according to knowledge.' We have no desire to enter as a contestant into the strife which has evidently begun between THE INDEX and the Investigator. That the former is no longer a representative of the National Liberal League is, we think, the League's misfortune. We can assure the editor and proprietor of the Boston Investigator that we have long been carefully noting the progress of the American Secular movement,—a movement which has nothing to gain from the support of the dishonest and the immoral, and which, like Cæsar's wife, should be above suspicion." It is proper to state that the case of Paine Hall is already transferred from the newspapers to the courts, and will doubtless be settled there, where efforts at concealment are likely to be quite unsuccessful.

THE ALBANY Liberal Bulletin of April 24 says: "The section providing for the taxation of churches has been struck from the bill now before the Senate. The Albany Journal, in commenting upon this action, remarks that 'it is in clear harmony with public sentiment.' The New York Evening Post on the contrary, with fewer prejudices, and, consequently, wider and truer observation, remarks: 'Although we are told that the State Senate "is being flooded with remonstrances" against it, public opinion is strongly in favor of it. The principle underlying it is that religion is a private and individual matter, and not a public one.' 'Logically, exemption from taxation should go out with establishment, because, when church property is relieved from tax to the amount of a dollar, the public is, in effect, charged a dollar for the support of the church; and to that extent religion and the State are united.' 'Nobody would dream of granting tax exemption to a person because he professed religion. Why grant it to a number of persons professing religion and united in a church?'"

A TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCH to the Associated Press, dated St. Louis, May 7, says: "General B. A. Morton, President of the National Liberal League, has been arrested here, charged with forging the name of ex-Governor John M. Palmer, of Illinois, to a check for $2,000 on a bank in Joplin, Mo., about a year ago, upon which he got the money. Several hundred dollars in money, jewelry of great value, said to belong to his wife, railroad passes on a large number of roads, dies, stamps, different kinds of pens, etc., were found on his person or among his effects. Morton was arrested at the instance of John B. Sargent, cashier of the bank upon which the forged check was drawn, who recognized him in a railroad office here. Morton claims that it is a case of mistaken identity." General Morton is not President of the National Liberal League, but of the "National Liberal Party," into which the Cincinnati Congress of the League last September resolved itself. By and by the public will discover that the seceding minority at Syracuse had abundant cause for withdrawal. How long will American liberalism consent to be so shamefully misrepresented, and to give its confidence to leaders of degraded personal characters?

THERE IS small cause for wonder that the Bennett reception (reported by the New York Times in another column of this issue) should call forth such scathing comments as the following, quoted from the Syracuse Evening Herald of May 3: "The reception tendered to D. M. Bennett, the discharged convict, in New York city last evening, would have been all right in its way, if it had been distinctly understood as a private affair. The effrontery of giving it a public character, however, is to be matched only by the impudence of the beneficiary in accepting such a testimonial. Bennett, proved by his own handwriting to be a dirty hound, set himself up as a martyr to the cause of a free press; and Elizur Wright, Stephen Pearl Andrews, and the rest of the crew who are laboring to bring disgrace upon liberal thought, bowed down and worshipped at his shrine! As compared with the poor painted wretches who thronged the streets outside of the reception hall, plying the lowest of vocations, the women who sat on the platform within made but a feeble showing of respectability; for the drabs at least deserve credit for being ashamed of their trade and prosecuting it under cover of the darkness, while the so-called 'female agitators' make a boast of theirs."

THE MAIN FACTS in the disgraceful persecution of Mr. Underwood appear to have been as follows: In January, 1879, B. F. Underwood was engaged by the Liberal League of Irwin Station, Pa., to deliver a course of lectures before that society. The school-house in the town had always been used for such purposes, and the League contracted with the President of the School Board for the use of the house on this occasion. The lectures were duly advertised, and the churches as usual took the matter up and made the lectures their pulpit subject on the previous Sunday. They denounced the lecturer as an infidel, and brought their influences to bear upon the School Board, until they obtained a resolution forbidding the use of the house for the delivery of the lectures. The President of the Board gave the League an order on the janitor for the key, but the janitor gave the same to the constable of the village, and the latter refused to give it up when requested by the League. At the hour advertised, fully five hundred people assembled at the school-house, when two prominent citizens, members of the League, appeared and opened the door of the school-house with a crow-bar. The lecture was begun; but, owing to the disturbances raised by some person present, the lecturer was obliged to stop, and the meeting broke up amid the greatest excitement. The next day Messrs. Brewster, Crockston, and Underwood were arrested on a charge of forcible entry and detainer and blasphemy. The parties gave bail to appear for trial, and on April 15 the case was called for trial at Greensburg. The prosecution claimed damages for injury done to the school-house by breaking into it, and for the "immoral and blasphemous" use to which it had been put. The amount of damages claimed was $500. The injury done to the building had been repaired for the sum of twenty-five cents. The jury considered the case for half an hour, and returned a verdict against the defendants, and awarded damages to the amount of $150. The case may be carried to the Supreme Court. A more outrageous conviction was never made in this country.

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. F. SELSANTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. B. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenaft, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH MCDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT. C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN AHRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wiltonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

As created by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUEDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N.Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y. wauket, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.J. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. C. GAGE, Payetteville, N.Y. HOPE WHIFFLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N.Y. JOHN W. TRUEDELL, Syra-bany, N.Y.
 EBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. JOSEPH MCDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWTLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Government Machinery.

BY COL. ALBERT STICKNEY.

The publication of Mr. Eaton's volume on Civil Service Reform in Great Britain, with the introduction by Mr. George William Curtis, is a fresh evidence of the interest now taken by thoughtful men in our methods of public administration. Mr. Eaton does not make his book, in form, an examination of the evils of our own political system, or of the remedies for those evils. It purports to be, in the main, a recital of certain historical facts connected with civil administration in England. Yet the book is meant as an argument; and Mr. Eaton's belief apparently is that an adoption of the system of competitive examination, as it is used in the British Civil Service, will give us complete relief from our present political troubles, and will make pure and efficient our whole public administration.

It is important, on these points, that we make no mistakes. It would be a misfortune if the people were to labor for years to procure the adoption of some particular reform, and were then to find that they had not so much as touched the real disease. Such a disappointment would be a greater evil than all our existing abuses. The abuses themselves act as so many blisters, which will sooner or later excite a healthy national life.

This proposed remedy of competitive examination is, therefore, a subject full of interest for the American people. It is the most important practical question of the day. What, then, is this system? What practical results does it promise, supposing it were adopted in its full length and breadth? And what practical measures must we take to procure its adoption, or the adoption of any modification of our government machinery, which will give us substantial improvement in the management of our public affairs?

In its distinguishing feature, it is a system which provides only for the selection of subordinate officials, by an examination, at the time they enter the service, as to certain branches of knowledge. It does not test their capacities for doing the work they are to do; it does not test them after they are in the service; it does not test superior officers; nor does it provide any security for enforcing efficient work.

To determine its value in its own province, let us take an example from our actual government service as it now is. An applicant for an appointment in our Railway Postal Service, before he receives his permanent appointment, undergoes several examinations. His work, be it remembered, is to carry and distribute the mails. He is first examined as to his knowledge of the location of post-offices by counties. He is given a tray of cards, containing (in the instance of Pennsylvania) the names of 3,000 post-offices. A frame of pigeon-holes, labelled with the names of the sixty odd counties in the State, is placed before him, and he is required to distribute under the different county heads the cards bearing the names of the post-offices belonging to each county. Few men, even after six months of study and practice, are able to do this correctly at one sitting. After the applicant has made himself familiar with this task, he has to fit himself for a "scheme examination" on a division of post-offices by railway routes. Before he is permanently appointed, he must show on his examinations a record of at least fifty per cent. In other words, he must know the location of half the post-offices in a State, by counties and railway routes. It is said that the head clerk and principal examiner in the New York Office, who has been in the service since 1869, passed examinations on twelve different States, and on seven of them reached a record of 100 per cent. His lowest percentage on any State was 98.73. During the year 1879, on examinations as to over 2,000 post-offices, 131 clerks made an examination record of over 90 per cent. The number of questions asked on these examinations, in regard to the postal laws and regulations, was 21,432, of which 20,352 were correctly answered. To show the efficiency which results from examinations of this kind, it is enough to state that, in the distributions on our railway postal cars, during the same year, of over 200,000,000 letters, there occurred only one error in each 3,540, and out of over 1,000,000 registered letters only one was mis-sent.

Now for the purpose of getting men who can do work like this, of what value is an examination only in arithmetic and geography? No doubt, it is wise to have no employé in our public service who does not know arithmetic and geography. But is that enough? Is that going to purify our whole political system? What we must have for our public officials, even as a mere means of selecting them, is an examination in the special work which each one is to do. We must put them to the tests of actual service, and we must keep them under those tests. For it does not follow that a man who is once fit for his work will be so forever. As a mere means for selecting men, then, this plan of competitive examination is entirely insufficient. We must have a machinery for selecting men who will be able to do their own special work.

But is that all we need? Suppose we secure, for subordinate positions, men who are fit to do the work of subordinates. Do we need fit men only at the bottom of the service? Can we have ignorance only at the top? That is the doctrine soberly held and promulgated by some of the theorists who discuss this matter of Civil Service. It is a peculiarly English idea. The present theory in the present stage of the search of the English people after a government is this: that, through the whole executive administration, each man must know the duties of his place, until you come to the heads of departments; but that the head of an executive department is to be a man selected solely because he, with some other men, has been able to carry a vote in the House of Commons on Roman Catholic Emancipation, or water-works bill. He may have great skill in manipulating a parliamentary majority, but he knows nothing about administration. He is not selected with a view to that point. Now it may be that the public affairs of a great people can be managed in flat defiance of all the laws of human experience and common-sense. But we all know that work of every other kind in the world requires the most experienced men at the top of the machinery, instead of at the bottom. It may be that the management of the postal work, the armies, the navies, and the finances of a great nation is the one thing in the world which can be done best by having the most ignorant men in the places of power. But that is a point which has not yet been demonstrated. When it shall be clearly established by some ingenious theorist, then we can be satisfied with a machinery which will give us skilled and experienced workmen only in subordinate offices. But until then—?

But there is a question which lies back of all this. What is the real practical difficulty which stands in the way of our adopting competitive examination, or any other plan for the solid improvement of our Civil Service? Most men will agree that our greatest obstacle in this direction is the opposition of our public servants themselves, the very men who ought to be making the improvement. And the reason is that by the very system under which we put our public officials we compel them, whether they wish it or not, to sacrifice our interests. Our government system is one continued series of elections. Every year we have one. Once in four years, or in two years, or in one year, we offer the control of every public office, and the keys of every public treasury throughout the land,—those of our national, state, county, city, and town governments,—as a prize to be awarded to that combination of men who can succeed in carrying these elections. The prize is an immense one. It means employment for many hundred thousand men, and the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars.

This immense mass of election work, with its immense rewards, develops a regular class of professionals, who give to this work their whole time and labor. In this calling they gain great skill. What is more, they perfect a vast and powerful organization, by means of which and of their skill they are enabled substantially to take the control of our elections completely out of our hands. We keep the form of an election. But, in substance, these professionals appoint every official in the country, from the President of the United States down to a street-sweeper. The great body of the people are compelled to give their time and thought to their ordinary daily pursuits. The control of our many elections calls for the expenditure of more time and money than men who have other occupations can possibly afford to give. And a contest over the choice of our public servants between the people and this body of professionals is a contest between an organized army and an undisciplined mob. Its result never can be in doubt.

Not only, too, do we develop this class of politicians, but we drive all our public officials to become members of it. For it is on carrying the next election that each one of them depends for keeping his place, for rising in the service, for earning his bread, and for his whole future career.

The system is a false one. We have not a government for doing the people's work, but an election machine for capturing their offices.

The evils which result are many and costly. In the first place, the mere direct money-expense of the elections themselves is something enormous; and, in one form or another, it is all paid out of the people's purse. Official returns in Great Britain give as the cost of a single general election for the House of Commons the amount of over five millions of dollars. That is the amount of acknowledged payments. The real expenditure must go far beyond that figure.* These official returns show, too, that the cost of an election in the English counties is seldom less than at the rate of one pound sterling for each voter. In several of the counties at the last election it was more than two pounds, and in two counties it was more than three pounds, for each voter. Probably this rate is no greater than that of elections in this country. In our last presidential election the number of votes cast was nearly eight and a half millions. An expenditure at the rate of five dollars for each voter—the lowest average computed in English counties—would make the cost of one presidential election forty millions of dollars. If we consider what must be the expense of all our state, county, city, and town elections, it must be admitted that we pay heavily for our proprietary privilege of owning an election machine.

But the mere money-cost is the least evil. It is this powerful election machinery which has driven our best men out of the public service. The leaders who control this machinery will not have in our public offices men who will not submit to their decrees. They drive out of public life the men who are independent and honest; and the men whom they retain they hinder from doing even as good work as they know how to do.

The result is something which we need to think of. Our finest harbor is being ruined; our largest and richest city is each year exposed to the danger of a pestilence; we have a navy without a ship, and an army without a gun; and our whole sea-coast is at the mercy of any third or fourth rate power which can buy an iron-clad on the river Clyde. In our one great war our rulers threw away upwards of twenty-five hundred millions of dollars, and one hundred and fifty thousand lives.† And while brave and honest men were fighting on the field of battle for mere national life, they found their most dangerous foes behind their backs in the men who were at the head of our own government. And all this has come from the fact that we make our public servants the slaves of this election machine.

But what are we to do? We must cut out the roots of the disease, and not play with a symptom. Men say, "Reform the election machine by work within it." That cannot be done. When we can find a novice who can beat Mr. Edward Hanlon in a boat-race, when we can so remodel human nature that every man can do every thing without learning how, and skill and experience count for nothing, then it will be time to think of our attempting to compete with these professionals in their own profession. No doubt they are highly pleased at such a proposition. They are delighted to have honest gentlemen go to their political conventions, make eloquent speeches about platforms and principles, and serve as political bell-wethers to lead the flock to the shearing, while the professional managers quietly select the shears, and dispose of the fleeces even before the sheep are shorn. So long as we keep this profession of election-carriers, and compel all our public servants to join it and do its work, any attempts at reform will bring no lasting results.

We never can abolish popular elections. Nor do we wish to. Popular elections,—elections by the whole people,—so they be real, and not a mere form, are the beatings of the nation's heart, which send the life-blood through its frame. We must have elections. But it does not follow that we must elect every official, or that we should elect our officials once in every year, or once in four years, any more than that we should elect them every month or every four months.

We have been using this machinery of election for a purpose foreign to its nature. Its true purpose is the mere selection of the few men who are to be at the head of our affairs. We have been trying to use it to enforce their responsibility. We might as well try to turn a plough into a dredging-machine. What we must have, in order to compel men to do their work after they are in office, is a machinery for putting men out, not for putting men in. Instead of continually using the process of election, we should simply hold in suspense the process of removal. The preamble of the Constitution of the United States, to be a true recital, should read, "We the people of the United States . . . do ordain and establish—a Choosing Machine."

To correct our mistake we must do three things: First, we must reduce the amount of this election work; we must use the process of election only for its proper purpose. Second, we must make the machinery of election as simple as possible, so as to place all men, as nearly as may be, on an equal footing in its use. Third, and chiefly, we must take our public servants out of this profession into which we have driven them. This is the point especially to be considered here. To discuss the uses of the process of election, and the nature of its machinery, is beyond the lines of this present inquiry.

We can take our public servants out of this profession of election-carriers only in one way,—by putting them above the need of doing its work. That is, we must abolish these term elections, and, instead of a system for removing and electing public officers once in two or four years, we must have a system for removing public officers when the people's interests demand it, and electing new officers only when old ones are removed.

This change would not only take our public servants out of the election profession, but it would destroy the profession itself. It would take away the possibility of gain by following it. So long as the profession pays, and no longer, will men do its work. If our public officers were secure of their tenure, and were placed above the need of doing election work, they would soon cease to do it. They would abandon this profession of election-carriers. On the other hand, if there were to be no vacancies at the end of any fixed period, if no one could tell when vacancies would exist, then this mass of men who are out of office, but who do election work on the hope of getting in, would be compelled to betake themselves to some other employment to earn their bread. They, too, would be driven to abandon the profession; and nothing would be left of it. In short, if we were to abolish this system of term elections, and were to put our officials on the tenure of good behavior, whatever other results might come, we should at least destroy this trade of election-mongers.

Let us go a step farther. What are the absolutely essential points in any plan which is to secure that our public work shall be well done?

It is very clear that, if we are to have anything like a complete system of administration, we must have something more than a plan for examining subordinates at the time of their entrance into the service. And it is easily seen that any system which will answer our needs must have these main points: it must,—

1. Draw good working men to the service.
2. Select the best men for the service.
3. Give these men training in the service.
4. Get from them their best work after they are trained.

To secure the first point,—to draw good working men to the service,—we must offer in our government service the same inducements which are offered elsewhere. Now, every other trade, occupation, and profession insures to faithful men a certainty of permanent employment. We must give our public servants this same certainty.

To secure the second point,—to select the best men for the service,—we must test men in the service itself; test them till we find what they can do; drop them so soon as we find they are unfit to do the work, but keep them if the work is well done.

To secure the third point,—to give these men training in the service,—we must give them the same opportunities for learning their profession which men have elsewhere. They must have the experience of a lifetime.

To secure the fourth point,—to get from these men their best work after they are trained,—we must put them under the same pressure which they are under elsewhere. They must have,—

1. A certainty of permanent employment, and of advancement in the service, if they do their work well.
2. A certainty of dismissal from the service if they do their work ill.

In short, to secure either of these four points, our public servants must hold their places for no fixed term of years. Any term, for one year or ten, is too long for a bad servant, and too short for a good one. But our public officials should hold their places "during good behavior,"—the only system under which efficient work of any kind has ever been secured.

Before we entered on this last branch of our inquiry, we found that to root out this trade of election-mongers, which destroys free government, which takes from the people the choice of their servants, and from their servants free action, we must abolish this system of term elections.

Now, this removing officials for a failure to do their work well is all that constitutes "responsible government." We must have "responsible government," and we must have it throughout the service. The one distinctive point which is good and sound in what men term "parliamentary government" is that ministers are removable at any time, and have no tenure of office for a fixed term of years. But all our officers should be "responsible." The machinery should provide for the removal of every official throughout the service. No official should be "irresponsible," even for a day.

But that is not all. We must have, throughout the executive administration, the one-man system. In the first place, it is the only way in which we can secure organization; and, in the second place, it is the only way in which we can enforce responsibility. If we are to have any responsibility at all, we must have the responsibility of one man. Each officer must be held responsible for all the work which is to be done under him; but in that case he must have the power of appointing and removing all the men under him who are to do that work. For he is the only man who can know anything of the real capacities of his subordinates. He has their work under his eyes day after day. Moreover, this power of appointment and removal should be absolute, without any concurrent action of a council, a legislature, or a court. If we expect good work, we must not tie men's hands.

But it may be asked, Is it intended to give to the President of the United States, to one man, the absolute power of appointing and removing upwards of one hundred thousand officials? Precisely that. It is intended to take the power of appointing those officials out of the hands of the irresponsible heads of an election machine, and to put it in the hands of a responsible head of the government whom we can punish for its misuse. It is intended, in the State of New York, to take the same power out of the irresponsible hands of Mr. —, and to put it in the responsible hands of the Governor of the State. It is intended, in the city of New York, to take the same power out of the irresponsible hands of Mr. —, and to put it in the responsible hands of the Mayor of the city. Make these chief executive officers something more than puppets. Give them power, and then hold them responsible for their use of it.

But that is centralization! So it is; and wherever affairs are vast there will be centralization. That is the order of Nature. We have now, and we always shall have, in our government affairs centralization of power. And we must have the corresponding safeguard,—centralization of responsibility.

What is here proposed is that we should have a "responsible" chief executive. And every point in our argument applies with more force to the head of the executive administration than to any subordinate. He, above all others, must have the opportunity to gain experience and training for his official work. But, above all things, he must be free from this dependence on an election machine. Placing him alone under the term system simply puts him, with every official in our executive administration, in the power of the managers of this election machinery. Our security must consist, not in having an election for President once in four years, but in having the power of removing him at any time.

Here we need make no rash experiment, nor ramble in the realms of speculation. We need not go beyond the teachings of experience. All we need to do is to adapt a piece of machinery from that crooked, misconceived abortion which men term parliamentary government, which is only a practice (it cannot be called a system) of removing, indirectly, the wrong man, for the wrong thing. The English people remove, not the chief executive, but all his heads of departments, not (in the large majority of cases) for anything that concerns executive administration, but for some blunder in the legislature. Let us not have this humorous scheme of government by town meeting, admirable though it may be for towns. But instead of having our chief administrative officers always in a turmoil, perpetually busy in manipulating votes in a legislature, and then having a wholesale revolution in all the departments whenever these men fail to secure their legislative majority, let them attend to the work of administration, the putting into execution the measures which the legislature decides, and then let us hold them responsible for doing work. Let the chief executive hold each head of department responsible for his department, and let the legislature hold the chief executive responsible for all departments. Have a simple machinery for the removal of the man who ought to be removed, on the proper ground; that is, remove the chief executive, by a direct vote, for a failure to give us good administration. Give him the selection of his men, and then hold him responsible for results. For the sake of greater security, require for this removal a two-thirds vote. But leave this removal in the discretion of the legislature. Let them remove without notice and without a hearing, if the needs of the people demand it. It is the interests of the people, and not of the officer, which we must protect.

*The expense of the coming general election for the House of Commons is estimated at ten million dollars.
† See Note at end.

But it might be feared that the absence of the term system in the legislature would be a source of danger; that this legislature might, in some way, attempt the overthrow of the people's liberties. That, however, is a danger which does not exist. A body of a reasonably large number of men, not appointed by election managers, but chosen by the people, living with the people, and having the same interests with them, cannot, in these days, be persuaded to attempt the overthrow of the people's liberties.

But, if such a thing can be, if the people, when these powerful organizations are destroyed, cannot be trusted to find and choose honest men who will not betray their interests,—then we must give up free government; or, rather, we must give up government of any kind, and submit either to a despotism or to anarchy. When that state of things comes, it will be because the people deserve no better fate. We must trust men, and we can do so. We never yet have had so bad a set of men in our national legislature that we could not trust our affairs in their hands, if we would only leave them free.

But there is no difficulty as to men. The men we have in public office at this very day are good enough, if we place them under a decent system. They are our neighbors at home. They will never make the attempt to overthrow our liberties. If they should, the country would in an instant be too hot to hold them. The only difficulty we now have is that we compel them to manage primaries and conventions. We drive them to sell our offices instead of using them for our service. Even these men whom we now have would prefer to do for us good work, if we would only allow them. Take our prominent public men of this day,—Mr. Sherman, Mr. Blaine, and Mr. Conkling. No one can question their very great ability. They have, indeed, been selected on false tests. But take them as they are, put either of them at the head of our public affairs, release them from this grinding slavery to the election machine, leave them free to learn how to do our work, and to do it as well as they know how, and within five years we should have (I say it in all sincerity) the "finest Civil Service on the face of the earth." I do not admire the methods of these gentlemen. I have always voted against them. But we can trust power in their hands with entire safety, if we will only make them free.

For the mere purpose of selecting men, I would rather have our present election machine than all the plans for competitive examination in all the known sciences. We need men of knowledge, no doubt; but we need, more especially in our government service, men of affairs, and men of special experience in administration. Now these men are not the best men we have. But they are selected by Nature's own process,—the survival of the fittest in a struggle for existence. The struggle is of the wrong kind. But we do get men of power, and men of administrative power. They would learn how to do our work with wonderful quickness, if we would only give them the opportunity. Mr. John Sherman, four years since, knew no more about finance than he did about Sanskrit. He is now, in my humble opinion, better fitted to manage our Treasury affairs than any other man in the country. Mr. Blaine and Mr. Conkling, in these long years of their life at Washington, have gained great experience in the management of the public business. If they could only give us the benefit of it!

But, of course, we cannot hope for that. These gentlemen are now engaged in the process of appointing our next President. They have been so engaged ever since they appointed the last one. And on the fourth day of March, 1881, they will begin the process again. And we, the people of the United States, are to be converted into a football, and are to pay millions of dollars for the proud privilege of owning, but not operating, a Choosing Machine, and for the possible luxury of substituting for the practices of Mr. Don Cameron and Mr. Roscoe Conkling the metropolitan methods of Tammany Hall. Now then let us prepare to witness that grand quadrennial spectacular drama, "The Battle for the Treasury Keys." The managers will announce the caste at an early date.

Political reforms have, in this country, usually consisted in a plan for placing a new set of men in charge of the people's money-boxes. What is here proposed is that we should keep the men that we now have, and put them under a new system. If we would only give our public servants a permanent tenure of office, the mere necessities of the service would soon purify it. A man who has under him a hundred thousand men is compelled, in simple self-defence, to select for his subordinates the best men he can find. If he should do otherwise, he would soon find his whole machinery blocked. His work could not go on. The evil consequences resulting would soon work their own cure. Let us use in our government service the same old process of natural selection, but change the nature of the struggle for existence,—make it a struggle at doing the people's work. And let us remember that this process of natural selection, in order to work out its lawful results, takes time. We cannot have a geological upheaval of the whole fabric once in four years. That stops the working of Nature's forces until we have a new readjustment of atoms.

But it may be said that such a system, as is here proposed, would not be a democracy. That depends on what democracy is. We certainly do not have it now. If democracy consists in our going through the form of an election once a year for the purpose of registering the decrees of the professional politicians, then we should not, under the plan here proposed, have a democracy. I venture to doubt if that is the true meaning of the word. We cannot all govern, or take turns at governing. All that we—the people—can do is to select the men who are to take charge of our public work, and let them select and control the men who are to do the work. Democracy consists in giving the people a voice, but not a hand, in the government machinery. And they need nothing more than a voice. It is a perfectly possible thing for us to have a government, a body of trained, responsible public servants, a few of them directly chosen, and all of them indirectly controlled, by the people. That will be a democracy,—a system where the people have a power, but do not go through the idle form of pretending to use it once a year,—the only wise, strong, and stable government which can be formed, the one which we are now in the process of forming. But our first experiment has not been a thorough success. Let us try a second—and watch the results. That, too, may fail. And then we will try a third. We have thousands of years before us, and a superb laboratory.

NOTE.—The official figures from the War Department give the losses, in the Union Army alone, in the War of the Rebellion as follows:—

Killed in action.....	44,238
Died of wounds.....	33,993
Died in hospitals.....	190,017
Died in Confederate prisons.....	26,168

Total..... 294,416

It is estimated, by the authorities in the Census Bureau, that these figures are 12 per cent. (those of men dying in prison 20 per cent.) less than the actual number. Adding a correction on that basis would make the above total 327,184.

General Schofield has written that it is "capable of demonstration" that the war might have been finished in half the time and at half the expenditure in life and money, had the control of our military operations been given to any one soldier of fair ability. The cost in life and money resulting from the interference of the politicians with army operations cannot reasonably be put at a lower estimate than is given in the text.

—International Review for May.

GREETING AN EX-CONVICT.

D. M. BENNETT'S FRIENDS IN CHICKERING HALL.—A QUEER SUNDAY NIGHT MEETING.—LISTENING FOR TWO HOURS TO SOME PLAUSIBLE TALK AND MORE BLASPHEMY AND FILTH.—DENOUNCING ANTHONY COMSTOCK AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

There was not an inch of room to spare, either sitting room or standing room, in Chickering Hall at eight o'clock last evening, when Elizur Wright, of Boston, sat down in a big arm-chair on the stage. The meeting was a gathering of sympathizers with D. M. Bennett, editor of a publication called the Truth Seeker, who has just been released from the Albany Penitentiary, where he was imprisoned for one year for sending through the mails an indecent pamphlet entitled Cupid's Yokes. There were on the stage, besides the President, Elizur Wright, and D. M. Bennett, and Heywood, the author of the pamphlet, a number of members of and sympathizers with an association called the Liberal League, and others, among them being Stephen P. Andrews, Moses Hull, Amelia Colby, Mrs. D. M. Bennett, and Eugene McDonald. The meeting lasted for more than three hours, and during that time the speakers exhausted the deepest corners of the unabridged Dictionary in throwing epithets at the Creator, the ministry, the Christian religion, and the Republican Party. In that brief time, Chickering Hall made, perhaps, its first acquaintance with the indecent matter that is not sent through the mails, but comes out of men's mouths. Bennett, the hero of the evening, bore his honors modestly, and was comparatively moderate in his remarks, going no further than to boast of his infidelity; but Heywood, the author of the pamphlet called Cupid's Yokes, said that he was lately out of Dedham Jail, and proved his title to a full convict suit by making as dirty a speech as ever a filthy-minded man was allowed to do before an audience of New York women.

Elizur Wright having been introduced, a long list of Vice-Presidents was read, among the names being those of Charles Bradlaugh, James Parton, Parker Pillsbury, and Cortland Palmer. A quartet sang a song to the tune of "John Brown's Body," and Mr. Wright stepped to the front and said: "We meet in the name of common-sense and common humanity. We meet as the friends of law, to protest against the law's perversion, and to express sympathy with a man, and to advocate free thought and free speech. What is law worth without liberty? What is religion worth which exacts faith by a penalty? What is enforced morality worth? Since the Dred Scott decision there has been nothing so disgraceful to the United States as the persecutions of Mr. Heywood and Mr. Bennett. The Bible cannot object to Cupid's Yokes going through the mails, without staying out itself. Congress cannot abridge the freedom of the mails: this would murder freedom of thought, on which the happiness of the nation depends. Paper and ink have no moral character of their own, and can do no harm, while in the hands of the Government, in the mails. Under what is well known as the Comstock law, a man who is accused of mailing obscene literature is in effect tried before an ecclesiastical court. It would be treachery to the law itself not to stand by the victims of such injustice. If the Doctors of Divinity do not like Brother Bennett's blows, let them discard their barbarous old creeds."

Letters of regret were then read from Cortland Palmer, Charles Bradlaugh, and James Parton, and the quartet sang another song. Thaddeus B. Wakeman was then introduced. "The danger," he said, "arises from Calvinism,—an attempt of a few who imagine themselves elect to manage the morals of the many. This is an effort to substitute Calvinism and an ecclesiastical vigilance committee in the place of law. That would be an end of civil liberty. Comstock legislation is a confusion of the temporal and spiritual powers. It is the attempt of a few to control ordinary justice. We want to be responsible to the proper tribunal, not to a church committee. This legislation might do in the Old World, where they have a State Church; but it will not do here. As the powers come up from the people, they must be administered impartially by and for the people. The Calvinists are merely the Protestant Jesuits. Mr. Bennett has also stood his martyrdom in Massachusetts, where he was imprisoned. I hoped to introduce Mr. Bennett to you clad in his prison suit, but it was not to be obtained for love or money. Uncle Sam has so many applicants for prison clothes they are all in use." Mr. Bennett was then introduced, and three cheers and a bouquet were immediately given him. He is almost an old man, certainly on the shady side of sixty; and, as he stepped forward, his feelings overcame him, his lips trembled, and his eyes filled with tears.

"My dear friends," Mr. Bennett said, "language is too feeble to express the feelings of my heart. This is the proudest moment of my life. I feel repaid almost now for what I endured in the lonely cell, four feet by eight, and in the hospital of the prison. I am thankful to be able to unite with you in demanding freedom of the mails and the liberty of the press. I do not want to be rash, or to violate justice or right; but, if it is necessary for me again to enter a prison cell, although advanced in years, I will do it. [Applause.] I feel that, though this is called the freest government in the world, we have some things to fear. George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Thomas Paine [applause], and others, founded this government. There was then no room for ecclesiastical tyranny. It was announced then that this was not a Christian government, but free to all; and it is saddening to see that we are deteriorating. The power of the Church seems to be intensifying. I was sent to prison upon a mere pretext. The book is not obscene. President Hayes said that I had committed no crime. I was tried before a Christian jury by a Christian District Attorney, because I was the editor of the Truth Seeker, and because of a pamphlet I once wrote, entitled An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. The Rev. Howard Crosby, D.D., LL.D. [hissses], declared in a speech before the Young Men's Christian Association [hissses] that my conviction was one of the greatest things ever done in New York; that it was worth 100,000 times more to Christianity than all the money that has ever been given to Comstock's society. There has been $50,000 given to Comstock's society; and, as I had a good deal of spare time up in Albany, I figured it up that I had done fifteen billion dollars' worth of good to Christianity. I didn't think I could do so much good all in one year. I don't believe that one person has ever been hurt by reading that pamphlet. It was a foregone conclusion that I should be convicted, for I am an infidel. The foreman of the jury was a Sabbath-school Superintendent, a man of very narrow views, and they thought I was a very bad man; but I never killed anybody or robbed anybody. I might say a little about prison life, but I will not occupy more of your time. [Cries, "Give us the prison life!"] Our prisons are terrible places. There is far more injustice in our courts than justice. There are many innocent men there for life. A poor man, without friends or money, stands a very poor chance of getting justice in our courts. The discipline is very severe. I worked for two months at shoe-making. In the shop, we could not talk or look up from our work. The food is not calculated to sustain a man for hard labor. Superintendent McEwen is a gentleman, and I am grateful to him and his family. The officers at first spoke to me like as if I was a dog, and made me feel bad, but after a while their manner softened toward me. I am resolved to be a good citizen, but I will write and speak the truth. [Great applause.]

The following resolutions were then read:—

1. Resolved, That in the assault upon D. M. Bennett the liberties of every citizen of the land have been assailed.

2. Resolved, That we do hereby protest against the corruption in office, the hypocrisy in the pulpit, and the dishonesty on the bench, which have combined to perpetrate this outrage upon Mr. Bennett.

3. Resolved, That in D. M. Bennett we recognize that highest and noblest type of a true citizen,—a patriot; for while the loyal obey, the patient endure, and tyrants execute bad laws, none but the patriot risks life and liberty to defy and break them. It was his defiance of unjust laws that made Washington a traitor to his King and Government, and gave us liberty.

4. Resolved, That the principle of freedom is never so adequately and absolutely vindicated as when it is rigorously applied in a sense running counter to our own prejudices; as in a case, for example, where we do not sympathize with the act done, and where, even, we strenuously disapprove of it; but when we intelligently and firmly stand for the equal rights of all others to judge for themselves, and for their civil right to do precisely that which we most vehemently disapprove and condemn, short of actual and obvious encroachment; that this idea of freedom for what we cannot approve, because we approve of freedom, is Americanism pure and simple, and the most difficult lesson which the devotees of arbitrary authority, ecclesiastical, political, or social, have ever to learn, but one which must be learned, and laboriously inculcated at all hazards.

5. Resolved, That any other doctrine than this incurs the necessity, and entails the curse on our people, of a censorship of the press; of an organized and perpetual body of Government spies, and of the whole machinery of religious, political, and social repression, which we in the past have been happily rid of, and the reintroduction of which will be the rapid and complete subversion of the most advanced and benign system of institutions which the world has ever seen, and with the continuance of which the well-being of humanity is most closely united.

6. Resolved, That we deliberately denounce the Comstock legislation,—as to its hidden and real animus, which is the suppression of free thought and the freedom of the press,—and the rulings of Judge Benedict in the case of Bennett, and the refusal of President Hayes to interfere, as a legislative, a judicial, and administrative outrage, and that we pledge ourselves to continue to do whatsoever true men and true women may rightly do to reverse this whole current of procedure.

7. Resolved, That, if it were not too melancholy and dangerous, it would be comically ludicrous to behold the gigantic machinery of the United States Government invoked to punish by ten years' imprisonment and $5,000 fine some thoughtless or angry boy or man who has said a naughty word, on paper, through the post-office, to some one who, to protect himself, has only to decline to read what is sent him, or throw it into the waste-basket; and that this great country is now afflicted and disgraced, through the activity of a few over-zealous bigots, by a new edition of the Connecticut Blue-laws, so ridiculous that the people almost refuse as yet to believe in their existence.

8. Resolved, That amending "God" into the Constitution openly urged, and the Comstock law secretly enacted, originate in one and the same source, and are parts of one and the same policy of the ecclesiastical party, namely to reestablish the union of Church and State, and to regain the priestly power so vigorously denounced by the fathers of the Revolution, and so determinedly rejected by the framers of the Constitution.

9. Resolved, That though, religiously, Anthony Comstock is the creature of the Church, politically he is the product of the Republican Party, and that his law is the work of a Republican Congress; and that as the "God-in-the-Constitution" proposition came within two votes of receiving a two-thirds majority of the Senate in a late Congress (1876), twenty-eight votes, all Republican, being cast for it, and sixteen, all Democratic, against it, these measures and this action of the respective parties should be taken into careful consideration by every voting liberal, and unless the party dismiss Comstock,

10. Resolved, That all other questions now agitated by the great political parties are not worth a moment's consideration in comparison with the new questions of human freedom lately and so suddenly sprung upon the people, and that all other questions should be adjourned till this one of freedom of the press and personal liberty be fought out over again, and finally settled so that it will stay settled.

The resolutions were all applauded; but, on the reading of the ninth one, some hisses were mingled with the applause.

Stephen Pearl Andrews was the next speaker. He pointed out Mr. Heywood on the platform, asked him to rise, which he did, and said that Heywood had been convicted in Massachusetts and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but that President Hayes had pardoned him after he had served seven months.

The resolutions were then put to a vote, and were, of course, unanimously adopted, with the exception of the ninth, on which there were some dissenting votes, and cries of "Strike out the political clause." Telegrams of congratulation from all over the country were read. One from Charleston, S.C., graciously urged that we "should not nurse a monarchical censor in our Republic." A despatch from a person named Jamieson, in Chicago, said that, as Bennett had worked at shoe-making, "let us hope that he will pound the bottom out of the Orthodox Church. Let man be true, though every God be a liar."

Amelia Colby, the next speaker, began her address, "Mr. Bennett, Mr. Chairman, women, and men." "If I should wind up once," Mrs. Colby said, "it would take me a long time to run down." "When you put God into the Constitution," she concluded, "you put every American citizen out," and at this startling proposition the audience clapped its hands for nearly five minutes. James McClellan, who was next introduced, characterized Comstock as "the moral leper of our country [cheers], a man who will find no hell too hot, no pit too deep." [A voice, "We want a word from that terrible fellow, Bob Ingersoll."] Lucy Coleman was then introduced. "I have the reputation," she said, "of being a very daring woman. I know nothing of law, and very little of logic, but I know something of common-sense. I want to ask the mothers in this audience what kind of a feeling would come over you were you the mother of Anthony Comstock?" [Cheers and applause.]

Heywood, the author of the pamphlet that sent Bennett to prison, was then introduced. His address abounded in filth and blasphemy, and a large part of it is entirely unfit for publication. He began with indecent references to the woman who produced Bennett's letters, and went on to say that the Republican party came into power through the ruin of a United States law that they had trampled under foot. "A woman said to me," he continued, "if we haven't a hell for anything else, we ought to have one large enough to hold the Young Men's Christian Association." [Laughter and applause.]

He then repeated some indecent remarks he said he had made at a public meeting in Boston, and a still more indecent reply that he said a lady made to him after the meeting. The filth grew so deep here that there were some hisses, and a number of women left the hall. Heywood went on to say something about "from Stephen Pearl Andrews back to Plato and Jesus." "My little book," said he, "is only four years old, and it has already sent three men to prison, and been pronounced obscene by five United States Judges. Never, for a single day, has Cupid's Yokes ceased to go through the United States mail. The first mail package I got after they put me in jail was a copy of Cupid's Yokes sent to me by my daughter."

Moses Hull then made a speech in which obscenity wrestled with blasphemy for the first place. He concluded with a story of a preacher who, before going to church, was giving a calf some milk out of a tin pan. The calf jumped up, and spilled the milk all over the preacher's clothes. He seized the animal by the ears and shouted, "— you, if it wasn't for the love of — in my heart, I'd wring your neck!"

A young man named Flower, from Philadelphia, made the next speech, and a good part of the audience went out while he was speaking. His address was composed entirely of indecency and vituperation; but he drew too largely from what he said he had read in mythology to interest his hearers, and they went on to the next speaker, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, of Boston. It was then eleven o'clock, and the announcement was made that there were still "many more speakers, both men and women."—N.Y. Times, May 3.

FETE DAY OF ST. THOMAS AQUINAS IN ROME.

BOSTONIANS AT THE VATICAN.—THE DUCAL HALL.—THE HOLY FATHER AND THE YOUNG PRIESTS.—A BRILLIANT AUDIENCE.—IMPRESSIVE CEREMONIES.—THE PICTURE AN INTERESTING STUDY.

ROME, March, 1880.

Last evening, by the thoughtful kindness of a fellow-American high in the ranks of the Church, I received a permesso to a general audience of His Holiness to be held at eleven o'clock to-day—the fête day of St. Thomas Aquinas, who was born on the 7th of March, 1274. Leo XIII. has always been a great admirer of his writings, and quoted from them at length, and commended them in the encyclical letter of August 4, 1879, and it was to receive the address from the bishops and clergy of the Church in reply to that letter that the audience was arranged.

So we drove, the president of one of your Boston banks and I, to the Vatican at ten o'clock this morning. Two young countrymen, now pursuing their studies in the American College of the Propaganda, were kind enough to accompany us as guides and interpreters. More than that they proved to be, and we enjoyed their society as well as their kind offices. So we presented ourselves, and were admitted through the ranks of the Swiss guard to the hall of audience. Taking advantage of their information, let me add that the papal guard of Pius IX. in no corps served more faithfully or valiantly than the Swiss section, and the corps was made permanent, and is now recruited in Switzerland alone, wearing still the picturesque uniform of black and yellow and red of a hundred years ago. The "dual" hall is a double one, being divided by a large arch about midway of its length, measuring, perhaps, 50 feet by 200. The walls, to the height of fifteen feet, a vandyke brown, and the vaulted ceiling, fifty feet above the square red tiles of the floor, is covered with classic figures, such as one sees in Pompeii, with here and there a landscape. Along one side, a half-dozen large windows reaching to the floor let in the warm sun, while the white curtains mitigate its force. At the opposite end of the hall a dais, and, under the crimson and gold canopy, the gilded chair for the successor of St. Peter. A doorway on each side of the chair was half concealed by drapery, but a soldier stood by each with polished halberd glittering in the sunlight. Forming a broad aisle from the entrance door through the hall was a double row of benches, crossed by another row perhaps one-third of the length from the dais, forming together four compartments of unequal size. In the two rear ones stood the students of the various priestly schools, gathered from all the earth, the leaders of the Church of the future. "Multe tenebris lingue," say we as we listen to the greetings,—on our right, the red-habited students from Fatherland chatting in German, Italians everywhere, and on our left, the youth of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and in their cassocks, trimmed with white, red, and blue, about fifty of our own young countrymen. The enthusiasm of youth was as marked in the young priests as among the students of Harvard or of Yale or of Dartmouth. Up and down the centre aisle paced the solemn Swiss guard, interspersed with the scions of the Roman nobility holding honorable place at the court of St. Peter, adorned with many a star and wearing the gold chains with miniature keys and tiaras. Between them entered a procession of the wisest and the meekest. The teacher, the poet, the orator, and the antiquarian of to-day in old Rome were each pointed out as they sought places in the two front compartments. With them came friars and priests, bishops and cardinals, Franciscan, Dominican, Jesuit and Capuchin, in their varied garbs; while the aged cardinals one by one came tottering through the hall, but disappeared under the drapery to attend the Holy Father. The number increases, and it is soon apparent that the forward compartments must be enlarged, when the good-natured priest in black busies himself with a continual "Piu giu" until the cross benches can be moved back a few feet. Every true American then by this gets a better place; for is "Stand back, please," ever a word for us—particularly when spoken in Italian?

So we find ourselves at the forefront, and watch for the supreme moment. Soon the Camerlengo appears at one of the draped doors and raises his hand. "Hush-sh-sh" is heard all over the hall. Conversation ceases, the drapery at the right of the chair is drawn aside, a dozen officers of the guard enter, and then the Pope, attended by some dozens of his cardinals. He seats himself on the throne, and the cardinals range themselves about him, not noiselessly, for all welcome him with loud huzzas. I fancied I could detect the national differences from the various quarters of the hall, but—whether fancy or not—I am sure the American youth were not the most silent. But he sits quietly, and with dignity responds to the welcome with a gracious bow. Then he rises to pronounce the papal benediction. Every head is bowed, and the gracious, quiet, kindly, feeble gentleman of seventy years, with graceful gesture and sonorous voice, utters those sacred words. Clad in white, with a gold chain about his neck, the purple ring glistens in the sun as he invokes the blessing of the Almighty and of his Son and of the Holy Spirit, as his predecessors have been wont to do in the centuries gone by. The picture is a study, and the sight is a picture. The head of the Catholic world, the successor of St. Peter as bishop of Rome, stands before us,—come to encourage the Catholic world to seek an intellectual, philosophical religion in place of one of superstition. Next followed an address of congratulation upon the occasion, and then Leo XIII. rises to speak. In fluent Latin, with the Continental pronunciation of the words, he holds us spell-bound for twenty minutes, speaking without notes, and with a clearness and earnestness that evidenced perfect sincerity. Once from fatigue he rested a moment in his chair, and then, rising again, he finished. The days of Phillips Academy have long passed, and good "Uncle Sam Taylor" has been at rest these many years; but there was enough left of the old stone academy to enable me to follow him for the most part. But I confess that I would have liked a "pony," and indeed need one, if compelled to give the exact meaning of the address.

Then came a Latin poem, and then the reception of the replies to the encyclical of 1879. In double file the bearers walked from the front compartments to the dais and handed their responses to the Holy Father. One each from the arch dioceses of Boston, of New York, and of Philadelphia, were presented by three students of the American College, with numbers from Europe, from Asia, from Africa, and from South America, richly bound or engrossed on parchment, or written upon paper. Each as it came was received with kindly words, until at last, all having been safely delivered, he bestowed his parting blessing and the audience was finished.—Advertiser, April 24.

Poetry.

"DE PROFUNDIS."

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

Out of the deep, my child, out of the deep,
Where all that was to be in all that was Whirled for a million æons through the vast Waste, dawn of multitudinous eddying light.
Out of the deep, my child, out of the deep;
Through all this changing world of changeless law.
And every phase of ever-heightening life,
And nine long months of ante-natal gloom
With this last moon, this crescent, her dark orb
Touched with earth's light. Thou comest, darling boy,
Our own, a babe in lineament and limb
Perfect, and prophet of the perfect man
Whose face and form are hers and mine in one,—
Indissolubly married, like our love.
Live and be happy in thyself, and serve
This mortal race, thy kin, so well that men
May bless thee, as we bless thee. Oh, young life,
Breaking with laughter from the dark; and may
The fated channel where thy motion lives
Be prosperously shaped, and sway thy course
Along the years of haste and random youth
Unshattered. Then full current thro' full man;
And last in kindly curves with gentles fall,
By quiet fields, a slowly dying power,
To that last deep where we and thou are still.

—Nineteenth Century for May.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 8.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Dr. Charles Darwin, London, England, $24.00; J. C. Moore, $3.20; D. B. Hale, $2; A. Williams & Co., $3.54; C. H. Dearborn, $2.35; New England News Co., $5.12; W. P. Thornton, $6.40; A. Trounstein, $3.20; J. R. Foster, $3; Cash, $1.50; Benj. Cobb, Jr., $5; Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, $3; Dr. H. B. Clarke, $66.00; H. C. Southworth, $4; Mrs. M. A. Yerrington, $3.20; Geo. J. Adams, $6.40; E. P. Clark, $3.20; J. S. Wolcott, $3.20; Mrs. O. M. Rotch, $2; F. V. Balch, $3.20; E. T. Billings, $3.20; Jos. Trounstein, $3.20; American News Co., $3.76; W. A. Clarke, 20 cents; Mrs. L. P. Langley, $5; D. B. Tripp, $3.20; Wm. H. Faer, $1; J. Whitson, $3.20; W. W. Tucker, $1.50; Chas. H. Pierce, $23.20; Richard Russell, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 13, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State), but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged May 6.....	$2,165.00
ARTHUR H. CUTLER, New York	1.00
Dr. J. GOLDMARK, " ".....	10.00
WM. PAULSEN, " ".....	5.00
ADAM JACOB, " ".....	5.00
FRANK L. POPE, " ".....	1.00
Dr. J. M. MEMMINGER, " ".....	1.00
WM. BOYER, " ".....	1.00
CLARENCE COOK, " ".....	5.00
H. W. JOHNSON, " ".....	5.00
Mrs. LEWIS STINE, " ".....	1.00
HERMAN BEHER, " ".....	5.00
G. OBERMEYER, " ".....	1.00
WM. KURTZ, " ".....	5.00
Mrs. J. E. SUITTEBLIN, " ".....	2.00
THEODORE P. JENKINS, " ".....	1.00
Dr. D. C. WHITE, " ".....	1.00
Total.....	$2,215.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F. R. A.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Ninth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 5, 1880, at 2.30 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows: Business session, for election of officers, hearing and discussion of reports, etc., Thursday, May 27, 7.45 P.M., at the Parker Fraternity Hall in the Parker Memorial Building, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets.

Convention, Friday, May 28, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M. in the Parker Memorial Hall. Arrangements are in progress that promise interesting discussions, of which the details will be given hereafter.

Social Festival, Friday evening, in the same place, using both upper and lower halls. There will be music, brief addresses, refreshments, and opportunity for social greetings and conversation.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

APPROACHING SEPARATION.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE SUBSCRIBERS OF THE INDEX.

BOSTON, May 9, 1880.

MY DEAR FRIENDS:—

For more than ten years, with the exception of about three months in 1873, I have been editor of THE INDEX. I shall cease to be its editor on the first of July next.

The reason for my retirement will be best expressed in the language of a circular which I submitted to the Directors of the Index Association, and which with a little modification was unanimously adopted by them, at a meeting of the Board on April 5. Part of this circular is as follows:—

"At the Eighth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of this Association, held at Toledo, Ohio, June 7, 1879, it was—

"Voted, That we renew and readopt the following resolution, adopted at the Annual Meeting of last year: to wit, 'That the Board of Directors are hereby authorized and empowered to close up the affairs of the Index Association, and to take all the steps necessary to effect its legal dissolution, if and whenever they shall judge such a step to be, on the whole, a wise one, the interests of all parties concerned being duly considered; and, in case there shall be any cash or other property remaining, after paying all the just and equitable debts of the Association, they are furthermore authorized and empowered to make such disposition of the same as shall, in their judgment, best subserve the purposes for which the Association was originally formed.'"

"At a meeting of this Board, on February 9, 1880, it was voted, in virtue of the authority and power above conferred, to wind up the Association's affairs on the first of July next, and to donate and transfer THE INDEX, together with whatever property shall remain after paying all just and equitable debts, to the Free Religious Association, provided that the latter would assume all obligations to THE INDEX subscribers and advertisers whose terms shall not have expired at that date. This offer was formally accepted by vote of the Executive Committee of the Free Religious Association, communicated by the Secretary to this Board to-day. The transfer thus arranged is, in the judgment of this Board, a step rendered necessary in some form by the fact that about $50,000 of regularly levied annual assessments on the Association's capital stock remain still due and unpaid; and also, under these circumstances, the best practicable mode of 'subservicing the purposes for which the Association was originally formed.' THE INDEX was founded to promote the cause of Free Religion; and now that, from want of funds, it can no longer be published as heretofore by the Index Association, the Directors consider that this original purpose will still be subserved in the best way now possible, if the Free Religious Association itself shall continue to publish the paper in the same cause. It is, in fact, a reason for sincerely congratulating the faithful friends of this cause that the forced abandonment of the Index Association, resulting from the delinquency of many of its own stockholders, will not involve the abandonment of THE INDEX itself; and that this widely respected journal, the fruit of so much generosity, self-denial, and devotion, in many quarters, will not be lost to the beneficent movement in which it has faithfully labored for the past ten years."

This announcement has been delayed simply to enable the Free Religious Association to mature their plans to some extent for the future management of THE INDEX, and to accompany the announcement with a positive statement of their own on that point. This I hope to receive in season for the present issue; but, as it has not yet come to hand, I will venture to anticipate it so far as to say that THE INDEX will be edited for the ensuing year by Mr. William J. Potter, the Secretary of the Free Religious Association, with improvements of various kinds which I have long desired in vain to make. With the increased assistance which I doubt not he will receive, and above all with the great ability and beautiful spirit which are his own, THE INDEX cannot fail to be far better than it has ever yet been. It is with the sincerest and deepest joy that I announce Mr. Potter as my own successor; and I should be false to every impulse of friendship, to every unselfish instinct of humanity, and to every consideration of loyalty to the cause for which I have toiled during many years just as well as I know how, if I now suppressed the desire to offer him here the right hand of fellowship, to bid him the heartiest and honestest goodspeed, and to bespeak for him from you every conceivable form of aid, encouragement, and good-will. Stand by him faithfully and well—for never did any man deserve it better than he. You know him but little as yet; but, before the year is over, you will discover something of that great mental and moral power which has been the life-giving centre of the Free Religious movement from its inception—or you will be blind indeed.

One thing should be distinctly understood: my retirement is the result, simply and solely, of the non-payment of their annual stock assessments by stockholders of the Index Association to the amount of about fifty thousand dollars—more than half of the amount due. The capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars was originally all subscribed for, payable ten per cent. annually for ten years. Some of the subscribers have proved unable, and others indisposed, to redeem these pledges; but if all who are able to pay were willing to pay, the Index Association would now be on a sound financial basis. With no little hesitation I embarked in the enterprise at the outset, postponing plans of most important philosophical work for an indefinite period, because I saw the great immediate necessity to the Free Religious movement of a first-class journal equal to the best English periodicals in all respects, and because I reposed implicit confidence in the honesty and honor of the stock-subscribers. This confidence has not been fully justified, but the necessity still remains. The Index Association has at last proved to be a failure; but THE INDEX has not been a failure. On the contrary, if you and the public choose to make it so, it may yet become a great and permanent success, even in the financial sense. I earnestly desire that you and they will declare emphatically that it shall be a success.

Never before has the paramount need of a great and strong journal, conducted on the highest intellectual and moral plane, been so apparent to me as it is at this very moment, when professedly liberal journalism has sunk to almost unimaginable depths of degradation. If THE INDEX is now suffered to go down, an ineffaceable stigma of shame will rest permanently on the liberalism of this generation in America, and the cause of thoroughly free, scientific, earnest, high-toned, and cultured religious thought will suffer an eclipse both disgraceful and disastrous in the last degree. It is time for all who love that cause to become imbued with a noble public spirit, and to unite their utmost energies in the resolute determination that, come what may, the flag of high and pure radicalism in religion shall be kept floating on the gusty gales of this critical time. If any subscriber of THE INDEX should now, merely from personal attachment to its old editor, lose sight of all these grand considerations, forget the crying wants of the precious truths at stake, and pettishly stop his paper, I should be utterly ashamed of my own work, and conclude that, in his case at least, my ten years of painful toil had all been wasted. Never for one instant have I desired to attract any personal regard which could possibly obscure devotion to the impersonal truth I have striven to keep ever uppermost in all minds. Dearly have I loved to receive your letters of warm and tender sympathy; again and again have they cheered my soul and filled my eyes with tears; long will they be cherished among my few treasures, to revive in future years loving recollections of the numberless true hearts, scattered all over three continents, which have throbbed in unison with mine, and given fresh life to me by their felt pulsations. Seldom, it is true, have I been able to write in return; but I am quick to feel and strong to remember such things as these. Yet if now, because you love me too well, you withhold your aid from the great-souled friend who is to take my place, it will be to me the saddest possible issue of my labors and the chief bitterness in the memories of our parting. No such "lame and impotent conclusion," surely, shall cloud the close of my connection with you.

There is no grievance, or quarrel, or want of cordial understanding, carefully concealed from public view, in my going. The Directors of the Index Association are all tried, faithful, and generous friends of mine, who have unstintingly helped me to carry on the work, some of them at great and wholly unremunerated sacrifice of precious time; and they reluctantly acquiesced when I told them the time to go had at last come of necessity. I do not abandon my post of my own free will; I would have sooner dropped dead in my tracks; I go only because I must. Yet I am glad to be honorably released. Wearied in head and heart, most of all by the mortifying apathy and indifference to the highest interests of their own cause shown by thousands of intelligent liberals, who ought to have bravely flocked to my side these past two years to uphold the standard of liberty and morality combined, one and inseparable, I cannot but experience a sense of relief in now turning from all "movements," and devoting myself, so far as leisure permits, to purely intellectual labors in the common cause. When liberal "movements" shall be clear-sighted enough and bold enough to take up the now neglected duties of the cause they profess to promote, clean their foully tarnished scutcheons, and plant themselves on ground that enlightened friends of mankind can thoroughly respect, I trust I shall then be able to rejoin them; but I stoop not to follow the libertinism, greed, and fraud that are now guiding organized liberalism to perdition, nor yet to acquiesce in any mistaken ignoring of mischiefs so obvious and fatal. These mischiefs must be unitedly, publicly, and relentlessly confronted and fought down in liberalism itself, or there is no future for any organized liberal movement at all. The public conscience will yet grind them to powder; but woe to liberalism if it takes no part in that righteous and terrible grist! What I could do in this cause, I have done, utterly indifferent to the fact that I thereby made myself a target for calumnies and curses innumerable; and it speaks ill for liberalism that there have been so few to go and do likewise. Nevertheless, necessary and inexorable as my duty has been in this direction, I find myself very willing to be relieved of a duty so little to my taste, and very willing to retire now to private life.

For a few weeks longer, dear friends, I shall continue to address you in these columns; after that time, I am not in circumstances which permit me now to make any promises. But I shall retain the liveliest interest in the success of THE INDEX, for which I have worked harder and more unremittingly than for any other object of my life. Would you not like to give me some proof that you are not wholly indifferent to my departure? If so, I have a favor to ask: Join all together in one strong, simultaneous effort to double the subscription list of the dear old paper. Give me the great pride and pleasure of turning over to Mr. Potter, when I go, a noble list of new subscribers, with the money paid in advance. To meet you half-way in this endeavor, I will cause all new subscriptions accompanied by two dollars and twenty cents (for postage) to be credited for a full year in advance, thus discounting one third of the price. This offer, of course, can only hold good till July 1. If you will at once persuade as many of your friends as you can to subscribe now, and thereby give me the luxury of offering a substantial welcome to Mr. Potter as my successor, it shall be accepted as the expression of a cordial farewell to me from you, and as a proof that you understand, sympathize with, and share my own deep desire for the spread of "liberty and light" among mankind. So shall you render my last days with THE INDEX, notwithstanding the inevitable sorrow of parting forever from it and you, soft and mellow with the light of love for Your faithful friend, F. E. ABBOT.

TO THE PUBLIC.

As announced above, the Index Association has made the Free Religious Association its heir; and after the first of July next THE INDEX, with probably some modification of form and name, will be published under the auspices of the latter Association. By the persuasion of friends in both Associations,—I trust they have not in this case proved too partial friends,—I have consented to take, under the new arrangement, the editorial charge. With my other public duties, I cannot promise such exclusive devotion to the interests of the paper as has been given by its present editor, who for ten years has spent, with self-sacrificing zeal, his best life upon it. I shall, however, assume the complete editorial management and responsibility,—having an efficient assistant in the office for the practical details of the work, while the financial management will be shared by others.

High as has been the standard, intellectual and moral, which THE INDEX has set for a liberal journal, efforts will be made strenuously to hold the publication, under the new departure, to the same mark in both respects. And it may reasonably be expected, too, that the paper will gain somewhat in breadth and variety of view, by the fact that, when it really becomes the organ of the Free Religious Association, prominent officers and members of the Association will feel a greater obligation than they have hitherto done to make it the vehicle of their ideas. Already it can be announced as a special feature of the paper, that Dr. Felix Adler, the President of the Association, will have one of his discourses before the Society for Ethical Culture, New York, reported for publication in it each month. Several discourses by the editor before his society at New Bedford will also be printed within the year. The present list of editorial contributors, so far as it is an active one, will be gladly retained, and several new regular co-workers will join the ranks. Among the latter it may here be said that we expect valuable aid from Messrs. M. J. Savage, J. W. Chadwick, Rowland Connor, and John Albee.

More complete details are reserved for future announcement. Suffice it now to say that, in order to make this new enterprise all that it ought to be,—in order to carry into practical operation the idea of the paper as it has been theoretically conceived, and make it a worthy representative of the Free Religious Association,—not only will the help of brains, but the help of purses, be needed; and, for the latter, in order to get all the needed help of brains, an appeal will be made in due time, especially for a large increase in the subscription list.

WILLIAM J. POTTER,

Secretary Free Religious Association.

May 10, 1880.

MARRIAGE A CIVIL CONTRACT.

The action of the Rhode Island Legislature, as reported in THE INDEX of April 29, is interesting in many points. In the first place, it shows how hard old abuses die, and how much of the spirit which drove Roger Williams out of Massachusetts lingers in the State he founded. Of course, if a legislature can define what is a religious society according to its ideas, the privilege of performing the marriage service may gradually be limited to Evangelicals, then to Catholics, and finally to any creed, however narrow. But it is astonishing that a law, so at variance with the secular character of our institutions, should continue in any of our States. Why should the blessing of a minister of a religious society make a marriage legal? He is in no other sense a legal officer; and, as is clearly proved by this action, it is a very indefinite qualification. Our Puritan fathers were so opposed to this blending of Church and Society that they did not approve of any religious service at a wedding. In many of the countries of Europe,—in Germany, for one,—the civil service is always required. This is as it should be. Marriage is a relation which must be publicly acknowledged and recorded, for the safety of society and of individuals. So far, the State is concerned in it, and should designate in what manner the contract shall be ratified.

I attended a service of this kind in Nuremberg, Germany, about nine o'clock in the morning. The bridal couple, accompanied by a few friends, went to the Town House. The bride usually wears a black silk dress. There are no festivities or religious services whatever. The public functionary (I do not know his official title) asks the name, residence, age, and such other particulars as are valuable for identifying the parties, or as statistics, and records the answers in a book; and I think he gives to each some certificate of the register. Afterward, in the church or the home, are held such religious services or social festivities as suit the feelings of the parties; but the legal marriage has been already fulfilled.

That an expression of religious feeling should accompany the formation of this holy and tender tie is becoming and natural. But has it not worked harm that the sacredness of the relation has been supposed to come from the sanctity of the priest who performed the rites, not from the truth and fidelity of those who entered into it? Where parties are of differing faiths, Catholic and Protestant, two religious services are often held at different times. There is no objection to this, or to any other customs which are gratifying to the feelings or consciences of the parties; but the law should not recognize them. It should require in all cases a legal recognition of the intended union, so that it can be binding in all civil matters, and then leave all other ceremonies to the taste and conscience of the parties themselves.

In Massachusetts, where any justice of the peace could legally perform the ceremony, Mr. Hinckley could easily qualify himself to serve his people in that capacity; but in Rhode Island only a few justices have this power. It has always been found that hinderances in the way of legal marriage have been helps to vice and snares to virtue. This matter is therefore more important in its bearing than it may at first seem.

We hope the members of Mr. Hinckley's congregation will adhere to their principles and their minister, and that, when any of them are so happy as to find congenial mates, they will be married according to civil law, and then invite him to the wedding, listen to all the good advice he may give them, join in his prayers, accept his benediction, and give him as much wedding cake and as large a fee as if he were recognized by the Senate as a regularly ordained minister.

E. D. C.

ABOUT "STOLEN MAIL-LISTS."

In his last letter from the Albany Penitentiary, printed in the Truth Seeker of May 1, D. M. Bennett signals his release by indiscriminate attacks upon President Hayes and his wife, Mr. Anthony Comstock, Judge Benedict, District Attorney Woodford, Assistant District Attorney Fiero, Mr. Samuel Colgate, Chancellor Crosby, Col. J. C. Bundy, Mr. Charles Ellis, the editor of THE INDEX, etc. These attacks are so malignantly ferocious and recklessly slanderous, yet so comically extravagant and silly, that the most charitable supposition is that their author is suffering from softening of the brain.

One illustration will suffice. He first says: "I will forfeit another thousand dollars if he [we] will point out a single falsehood I printed intentionally or knowingly." Without annoying our readers by stirring the foul and festering mass of former calumnies, we will simply point out a "single falsehood" which Bennett "prints intentionally and knowingly" in this very letter. Referring to the names of subscribers to the Truth Seeker to whom copies of THE INDEX of October 30, 1879, were sent, he makes this grotesquely and humorously false charge: "I'll tell you how he [we] got them. He used the names of a stolen list of mine, which was feloniously abstracted from my office in the middle of the night. . . . Abbot knew that list was stolen property. I advertised the theft widely and proved it. He knew it was a stolen list when it came into his possession. It is a truthful old adage, 'The partaker is as bad as the thief,'" etc.

The fathomless folly of printing such a charge as this, prompted by a malignity which verges on madness, and made on the warrant of a mere groundless suspicion without a particle of proof, almost passes belief. We never saw the mail-list of the Truth Seeker, never had the slightest knowledge of any names it may contain, and neither directly or indirectly have ever made any use of it. Of the names and addresses to which this poor half-crazy calumniator refers, some were found printed in the Truth Seeker itself, as sent in exchange to THE INDEX Office, and others were found in lists sent by various friends from different places. But, if we have made no use of his mail-list, it has not been from want of opportunity, as the following letter shows:—

14th Jan. [1880].

MR. FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I have lists of about 10,000 leading liberals in the land. A great many of them you probably have. But I have lately received some 2,000 new names, furnished me by my correspondents, which I think would be particularly advantageous to you for the purpose of sending specimen copies, book lists, circulars, etc. We got our Physiologist list (about 800) by no other means than mailing sample copies to Bennett's Truth Seeker patrons, a list of which I have. Will send you a list of 1,000 good reliable liberals, probably all new to you, at least not on any other list I have, for five dollars.

Yours truly,

S. H. PRESTON.

209 West 34th Street, NEW YORK.

This letter, if we remember aright, we treated with silent contempt. If Mr. Preston has any reply of ours, he has full liberty to print it in the next Truth Seeker. He has been an employé in the Truth Seeker office; and if any theft has ever been committed there, Bennett is welcome to any clew to it which he may find in the above letter.

But this outraged and outrageous innocent, in spite of all his indignation against the surreptitious use of another editor's mail-list, has used THE INDEX mail-list himself, by his own written confession. This is shown by the following letter:—

OFFICE OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, ETC.,
PARIS, Ill., Dec. 3, 1873.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—... As to the names you mentioned, I have a few sheets of names which I presume are a part of THE INDEX list. I cannot tell you where they came from, for I do not know; for no writing or explanation accompanied them. I can say, however, they were not sent by Mr. Butts, nor did they come from New York. I have made some use of them, and hope I have not done wrong by so doing. Fraternally yours, D. M. BENNETT.

P.S.—The sheets alluded to came by mail. I cannot recollect the post-office from whence they came, but am certain it was not New York. B.

On the whole, we think that Bennett can well afford to drop this subject of mail-lists; he will not make much by preposterously charging us with using his stolen list, when, by his own confession, he did not scruple to use a manifestly stolen list of THE INDEX.

MR. UNDERWOOD sends us additional details of his trial, quoted from the letter of a correspondent at Irwin Station: "Our case has been tried and decided against us, with damages to the extent of one hundred and twenty-five dollars. As no correct account of the case has been published, I may state that, by every rule of justice and right, we had won the case until the judge charged the jury. We proved by the President of the School Board, Mr. McCormick, that it was customary for that officer to rent the hall, and that he had exercised that authority frequently, and they never objected. We called former Presidents of the School Board, and they all swore that such had been the custom in making it binding upon the board; but, in the face of all this, the Judge charged that Christianity was part of the common law of the State of Pennsylvania. He then read from some old laws, passed a century ago, which confirmed his statement. He told the jury that, if they believed that the lectures were anti-Christian, and that they ridiculed the Christian religion and held the Bible up to contempt, they were clearly illegal, and the school directors were justifiable in refusing the use of the hall for such purposes, even after the President had granted its use. The attorney for the prosecution was a devotee of the Church, one of the worst in the country; and he made a speech of about two hours. This entire speech was a bitter attack on atheists, infidels, etc.; and he appealed to the jury to know if they would allow them to inculcate their damnable doctrines to their children. Our case was fully defended by ex-Senator Cowan, who made an eloquent appeal for justice and fair play; but with what effect the verdict tells. . . . The costs with the amount of damages found will amount to about $500."

PERSONAL ITEMS.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH refuses to swear. A very commendable example.

MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON is reported seriously ill at Big Rapids, Mich.

M. RENAN, while in England, expressed to M. D. Conway a great desire to visit America.

THE BODY OF Charles Gustav Poetz, of New York, recently deceased, is to be cremated at Washington, Penn.

"JOSEPH COOK," says a Western journal, "has again opened his wide mouth and put his big foot into it."

IT IS SAID THAT Secretary Carl Schurz is to be married to Miss Irish, of Washington, an accomplished pianist.

MR. OLE BULL has subscribed $2,000 toward the price of Mr. Ward's statue of Leif, the Scandinavian discoverer of America.

ABOUT ONE HUNDRED and fifty students of Cornell University have signed a paper, asking Colonel Robert C. Ingersoll to lecture before them.

SAMUEL M. JANNEY, a prominent Quaker and member of the Indian Peace Commission, has just died at his home in Loudoun County, Va.

DR. S. F. SMITH, the author of "My Country, 'tis of Thee," has been engaged to deliver the poem at the coming anniversary of the alumni of Brown University.

THE FRENCH ACADEMY of Sciences has awarded to Dr. C. H. F. Peters, of Hamilton College, the Lalande prize, for the discovery of forty-three asteroids, eight of them in 1879.

WENDELL PHILLIPS has been talking very severely of the liberal clergy of Boston, for their remissness in the cause of temperance. It is probable those referred to will consider the charge a case of intemperate speaking.

A CLERGYMAN named Hoyle was so indiscreet as to register his name at a hotel in Omaha. Within half an hour, no fewer than fourteen persons sent their cards to his room to ascertain if a flush royal couldn't beat four aces.

PROFESSOR SILLIMAN, of Yale College, has been on an exploring trip to New Mexico. He says that there is no reason in the world why those great plains, heretofore considered uninhabitable, should not be converted into fertile farms.

COUNT WILLIAM BISMARCK, son of the great Chancellor, has just made his maiden speech in the German Parliament. He resembles his father in appearance, and also in his manner of speaking,—his rather hoarse voice, his pauses in the midst of his sentences, and his energetic but unvaried gestures.

A CENTENNIAL memorial of Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday-schools, has just been celebrated in New York, under the auspices of the Foreign Sunday-school Association. There was very little correspondence between the Sunday-school founded by Robert Raikes and the modern Orthodox one, either in character or aims. To make it seem otherwise is to confound things essentially dissimilar, but—pious chicanery.

GENERAL EDWARD W. HINCKES, who lately resigned the position of commandant of the Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, after several years' service, has been badly riddled in battles. He was shot through both legs, one of his arms was broken by a rifle-ball, a piece of shell fractured his skull, a musket-ball passed through his body, and he received other wounds. He was left among the dead at Antietam, and citizens of his native town sent a coffin to bring home his body.

PROFESSOR ADAM SEDGWICK, the late distinguished Cambridge geologist, was extremely proud of the mathematics of his University, though he knew but little about them. He was once heard to say, at one of the meetings of the Cambridge Philosophical Society which he helped to found: "I rejoice in the progress of mathematical science. I measure it in this way: I am a stationary kind of being in regard to mathematics. The progress of the science may be measured by the small amount of that which I am able to understand; and I give you my word of honor that I have not been able to understand a single paper that has been read before this society during the last twenty years."

THE KALLOCH FAMILY is a curiosity. The other day, the father expressed the hope that the Baptist Church, although it might be obliged to inquire into the recent conduct of his son, would not find it necessary to interrupt the work of that bright and shining light of San Francisco as a minister of the gospel. Yesterday, the son himself published a "card" in a newspaper, protesting, in behalf of the public, against the improper conduct of certain public officers who are concerned in the prosecution of the case against him. To the case itself he professes comparative indifference. His sole solicitude, as well as his father's, is for the public. The self-abnegation and the ostentatious public spirit of the family are alike astounding in their effrontery. Next in interest to the question how such a man as Kalloch could be elected Mayor of a large city is the question how he could so far impose upon the Baptist denomination as to secure scandalous countenance from it in four States,—Massachusetts, New York, Kansas, and California.—N. Y. Evening Post.

I WENT OFTEN to look at the collection of curiosities in Heidelberg Castle, and one day surprised the keeper of it with my German. I spoke entirely in that language. He was greatly interested, and, after I had talked awhile, he said my German was very rare, possibly a "unique," and wanted to add it to his museum. If he had known what it cost me to acquire my art, he would also have known that it would break any collector to buy it. Surely there is not another language that is so slipshod and systemless, and so slippery and elusive to the grasp. One is washed about in it, hither and thither, in the most helpless way; and when, at last, he thinks he has captured a rule which offers firm ground to take a rest on amid the general rage and turmoil of the parts of speech, he turns over the page and reads, "Let the pupil make careful note of the following exceptions." He runs his eye down, and finds that there are more exceptions to the rule than instances of it. So overboard he goes again to hunt for another Ararat, and to find another quicksand. German books are easy enough to read when you hold them before the looking-glass or stand on your head,—so as to reverse the construction,—but I think that to learn to read and understand a German newspaper is a thing which must always remain an impossibility to a foreigner.

THE D. M. BENNETTITES, since their capture of the Liberal League by their raid at Syracuse, have been persistently trying, in the same unscrupulous spirit, to render their odious and dilapidated cause respectable by the capture of distinguished names and reputations. Among the excellent people who have been subjected to this grievous annoyance is that estimable woman, Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, whose good deeds, it might have been supposed, would have shielded her from such distressing impertinence. Twice has she been compelled to disclaim her association with these people, from whom her good sense and pure instincts lead her unhesitatingly to recoil. In the first instance, on account of the wholly unauthorized use of her name as one of the officers of the Liberal League at the Congress at Cincinnati last fall, which she expressly ordered to be stricken out of that list on leaving the fact. And now it becomes necessary to contradict the report, artfully set afloat, that she was on the platform at the recent "Reception," by informing the public that she was not even one of the audience. But this is only a solitary example, though a conspicuously notable one, of the tactics in practice by these unique reformers, who appear to have adopted, without qualification, the church motto, "The end justifies the means," the end being, in this case, the glorification of humbug, imposture, and license.

THE PLATFORM of Chickering Hall, New York, Sunday before last, by its floral wreath upon the desk, presenting the words "In Memoriam," its festooned and tasteful drapery of mourning, sadly suggested to those who entered the hall the melancholy event which had befallen the society. Prof. Adler prefaced his lecture, which was upon the "Highest Good," with these words: "I had thought of speaking words of consolation and support to-day. I knew not that we ourselves would stand in need of consolation and support. We have sustained a heavy loss as individuals and as a society. A warm-hearted and enthusiastic supporter of the liberal cause, Joseph Seligman, is gone from us. It is not here the place nor the time to anticipate words of memorial that will be pronounced elsewhere. But I would not refrain from giving one brief utterance to the grief we feel that we have lost so true a friend, so fatherly and brotherly a coworker in the dear cause of religious emancipation. But we rise from this particular theme to the general question of how to find strength in time of need." The funeral was very largely attended, numerous representatives being present, of the business circles and various institutions and interests with which he was associated, especially of the Society for Ethical Culture, of which he was the president, the trusted counsellor, the generous and earnest supporter. The remarks of Prof. Adler, over the body of his beloved friend, were replete with tender sympathy and sense of loss. Appropriate addresses were also delivered at the grave by Dr. Lillenthal of Cincinnati, and Dr. Gottheil of New York, with whom Mr. Seligman had long sustained intimate and friendly relations.

FOREIGN.

THE REV. HORACE STONE WILCOCKS, M.A., Cambridge, of Plymouth, has recently joined the Church of Rome. So, too, have the wife and several members of the family of the Rev. Leonard Fish, a city clergyman. Mr. H. Chevalier Cobbold and his wife and family—of a well-known Suffolk race—have likewise taken a similar step.

ON SATURDAY last took place the marriage of the Viscount Alexandre d'Orsetti (Catholic) with Mlle. Rose Marie de Kroenberg (Protestant). To avoid all difficulties, and to ensure the blessing of heaven beyond a doubt, the couple were first wedded in the temple of the Holy Ghost, Rue Roquépine, and then in the church Saint-Philippe de Roule.

BEFORE LEAVING Paris, Prince Oscar of Sweden, accompanied by M. Andrieux, Prefect of Police, and M. Macé, visited those sites of Paris which the casual visitor generally overlooks, the dens of robbers, the houses of prostitution, the low drinking saloons, the dirty and narrow streets of the capital. This was a study that would have delighted Dickens.

AN IMPRISONED SPIRITUALIST.—Petitions are being extensively signed throughout Northumberland, Durham, Yorkshire, and Lancashire by the Spiritualists, asking for the immediate release of Mr. Frank Owen Matthews, an ex-Episcopalian clergyman, who, for practising clairvoyant tests, and charging for the same, was on the 2d inst. sent to prison for three months by the Keighley magistrates.

A VERY ANCIENT custom was observed on Good Friday at St. Bartholomew the Great, Smithfield, London, where at the conclusion of the service an old tomb in the churchyard was visited, and the Rev. J. Morgan laid twenty-one sixpences on the tomb, which were picked up by twenty-one elderly females of the parish. It is said that an old lady left this gift, and that she lies buried in the churchyard, but the exact spot cannot be pointed out.

PROFESSOR ROBERTSON SMITH, whose scientific criticisms of the Bible have created so great a commotion in the Free Church of Scotland, will have articles in the next or the eleventh volume of the Encyclopedia Britannica, on the Prophet Haggai, the Hebrew language, and the Epistle to the Hebrews. His antagonists in the Free Church have begun the publication of a series of "Scottish Tracts for the Times," partly to answer his criticisms. The first one of the series deals with his article on the Bible, in no tender spirit.

CHILDREN ARE children even in a Turcoman tent, on the steppes of Asia. A correspondent recites how, while writing a letter there, "unhappy children seize my ink-bottle and playfully empty its contents on my head, and, if I leave the paper on which I am writing out of my hands but for an instant, it is seized upon by the nearest member of the company and handed round the dirty, if picturesque, circle of visitors. Each individual in turn thumbs it thoroughly, gets as much as possible of his palms and fingers in contact with its surface, crushes and crumples it, and seems intensely desirous of assimilating and identifying himself to the greatest degree with the unusual document. I am often in terror lest it be torn in shreds between them."

BERLIN, MAY 5.—In the debate on the Anti-Socialist Bill in the Reichstag yesterday, Herr Hasselmann (socialist) made a declaration of his political creed which caused considerable commotion. He said that in Russia the Nihilists had risen against despotism, in France the Commune had done so, and he hoped the German workmen would follow their example. He said he identified himself with the energetic revolutionary feeling of the people, and regretted that once before in the Reichstag it was denied on the part of the socialists that they had any connection with the Russian anarchists. He declared that he accepted this connection, but that he spoke of course only for himself, not knowing how far his colleagues agreed with him. He was, he said, convinced that the belief was gaining ground among the people that the days of parliamentary palaver were over. For these utterances, Herr Hasselman was called to order.

MR. DAVID MARTINEAU presided at a soirée held in St. James's Hall, London, on Wednesday night, to celebrate the centenary of the birth of Dr. William Ellery Channing. M. Renan wrote: "Channing was a true prophet. He heard with a rare justice the first warning sounds of the clock of the future gospel. You have reason to honor as columns of the eternal Christianity the saints of the nineteenth century, the grandest of all that Rome will not canonize. The doctrine of Channing was entirely a doctrine of peace and love, and will remain true, whatever be the evolutions of science and of the free spirit." Mr. W. Rathbone had telegraphed his sympathy, and the Protestant Union of Germany had written, eulogizing Channing as "the defender of the rights of man against slavery in Church and State." Papers were read by the Rev. Baldwin Brown, Mr. Allen (secretary of the Anti-Slavery Society), Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., and the Dean of Westminster; and addresses were delivered by Dr. Carpenter, F.R.S., and the Rev. Dr. Collier, of the United States.

THE CORRESPONDENT of the Secular Review writes of liberalism in Belgium as follows: "I may mention the name of M. Frère Orban, the Liberal Minister, who, gifted with a remarkable power of oratory, and a shrewdness that detects and exposes the shams and machinations of clericalism, has gathered around him a body of followers devoted to the cause of liberty and progress. L'Etoile Belge, published in Brussels, stoutly champions the Liberal cause, and holds its own against holy priests, such as the Courrier de Bruxelles. Opposed to M. Frère Orban is the Archbishop of Malines, who, from his well-furnished apartments, directs, though without publicity, the action of his myrmidons. These are perpetually complaining in Parliament of injustice, or persecutions, though it is certain, as has been frequently demonstrated, that each time these phrases are uttered, so often is the falsehood contained in them repeated. Freethought and the liberal cause are making progress in Belgium; and I, who love the Belgians, shall be glad when I hear of the total and irrevocable defeat of their clerical misleaders."

AT SAINT-DENIS is the Maison d'Education of the Legion of Honor. This national institution was founded by Napoleon in 1805, for the education of the orphan daughters of the military members of the order. As we enter this ancient Benedictine monastery, over whose portal now gleam the words, "Honneur et Patrie," we are met by a very respectable lady of sixty, the superintendent, Mme. l'Amirale Leray. She is a good conversationalist, aristocratic in her mien, and affable in manners, a lady of the ancien régime. She is decorated with the ribbon of the Legion of Honor, and the superior teachers also wear insignia of this kind. The daughters of decorated officers living here are under military, not cloisteral, discipline. Instead of the drum, however, you hear the bell. The number of these girls in their black dresses, their floating corsages, and their honorary decorations, is now four hundred and fifty. Of these, four hundred are free scholars, the rest pay the whole or part of their tuition. Only the daughters of military men above the rank of captain are admitted into this institution, which they enter at ten and leave at eighteen. On leaving, they are sent forth with a working woman's outfit, amounting to about one hundred francs. They must then and with that seek their living.

AFTER EXCITING hopes and enthusiasms of the warmest sort, the new Indian creed called the Brahmo Somaj is manifestly withering. A great number of the less educated converts have quietly dropped off, while many of the cultured class have travelled much further than the tenets of the Brahmo Somaj go. The faith which was said to be grounded on common-sense, tempered by a lofty reverence for the Supreme Being, has been developing unexpected features of late. Mr. Chunder Sen has himself reviewed the evidence upon which he might be credited with a direct revelation, and has decided that it is inconclusive. But he took a very long time to resolve the question, and so much was admitted on the other side that no one could be much astonished if reconsideration induced him to reverse his judgment. The movement "to promote communion with departed saints among the more advanced brethren" has obtained official sanction. The Indian Mirror, which represents Brahmo Somaj, announces that "ancient prophets and saints will be taken one after another on special occasions, and made the subject of close study, meditation, and prayer." First to be invoked is Moses, and the form of supplication will be a "spiritual pilgrimage." Those who take part therein will try "for hours together to draw inspiration" from the Hebrew lawgiver. The same paper delivers a "New Dispensation" for the faithful. In the form of a vision, it describes the birth of a male child, whose "upper limb was like unto a lion, and the lower one resembled a man." As soon as born he roared, and then fell prostrate. Then the sons of God descended upon earth. One of them was so great that the children of men could not measure his height in eighteen hundred years; another was always inebriated as with new wine; a third was firm as a rock; and a fourth swayed mighty kingdoms with his eyebrows. Much there is of this sort of thing, the effect of which will certainly not be to arrest the disintegration of the Brahmo Somaj.—Lloyd's Weekly.

"CÆSAR," said a good-natured gentleman to his colored man, "I did not know till to-day that you had been whipped last week." "Didn't you, massa?" replied Cæsar. "I know'd it at the time."

Communications.

"THE LIGHT OF ASIA."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

A copy of your paper fell into my hands, for the first time, a few days ago. It was the issue of April 22. I was attracted by your article on the Light of Asia; and, as I have read and appreciated that beautiful and wonderful poem, will you allow me to say a few words in answer to your query, "What really constitutes the superiority of Christianity over Buddhism?"

Here let me preface what I have to say with the remark that I look upon the matter from no Orthodox stand-point. I am a Unitarian, not by birth or education, but from conviction. My early religious life was passed in the Presbyterian Church, and I emerged from its gloomy shadows into the brighter light I now enjoy, led by your own infallible Deity, —Individual Reason. But to the subject of your article, now that I have made my claim to impartiality of judgment.

The superiority of Christianity over Buddhism lies: 1. In the hope of a future life. The "sinless, stirless rest," the "Nirvana" of the Buddhist, will content no healthy mind. It is no question of rewards and punishments: I deprecate the debit and credit system with God, as much as you do; but the hope of a sphere of active usefulness, where, as I once heard Freeman Clarke say, "there will be plenty to do, plenty to learn, plenty to love," with wider, higher aims than here, and the drawbacks and hindrances of mortality removed, is the incentive and mainspring of action of the great body of conscientious workers for Humanity in this dear, beautiful world of ours. The souls who have the kingdom of heaven within them here are those who look for more than dreamless sleep hereafter. I turn from Buddha's "sinless, stirless rest" to Paul's fifteenth chapter to the Corinthians, to my great Teacher's last words to his disciples, and say, "Here is my soul's food."

2. (I acknowledge it is a natural impossibility for me to be unprejudiced.) The position in which Buddhism places woman. I have not the book by me at this moment, and so may make some misquotations for which I ask your indulgence; but in one of the most beautiful passages, where Buddha meets the true and devoted wife, does she not tell him her life is limited entirely to her husband's, that to throw herself upon his funeral-pile is her loftiest ideal? We rail nowadays at that unfortunate bachelor, Paul, for advising women to keep silence in the churches, cover their heads in public, and all the long list of submissive graces he recommends; but surely this is but a trifling assertion of their inferiority, compared to the horrible picture suggested by this most beautiful interview between Buddha and the wife in the Light of Asia.

3. In what seems the practical working of the two faiths, i.e., the condition and advancement of the people in countries where they respectively dominate, does not Christianity justly claim superiority? I am astonished to hear you suggest, in this connection, "the claims of the latter [Buddha] are acquiesced in by a much larger body of believers." If this have any weight, what may be said of the class of thinkers to which you and I belong? I fancied our boast was that we weighed, and not numbered our audiences, that others might proudly show a long line of ciphers with here and there a unit, but we count nothing for ciphers. If this be your rule, what would be the result of a census in Buddhist and Christian nations? To which would you go to find your men of science, your promoters of schemes for the elevation of humanity? Imagine a great convention of scientists and philanthropists, inventors, explorers: whence would come your largest delegation? I know you may say, "Difference of climate," but will that account for all? If, as Darwin says, we all started on the same plane, can climate alone be responsible for so much?

One word more. You do well to exalt Reason: it is the salt of life; and those who attempt to live a religious life without the free use of it, intellectually, starve. But it is a seasoning, not food itself. Faith without Reason is food without salt, utterly insipid and lacking nourishment; but Reason without Faith is like salt alone, and where shall we go to quench the intolerable thirst produced by such a diet? I speak of what I know. I have tried to satisfy my longing with each separately, and not until I combined the two did I find aught to allay my hunger.

H. C. A.

NEW YORK, April 29, 1880.

THE CELTS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Your Catholic Celtic Irish-American correspondent, John J. Bodkin, in his contribution to THE INDEX of April 29, on the Irish question, reminds one of the fact that the three hundred Spartans, who fought at Thermopylæ, were in reality three hundred O'Gradys, and not Spartans at all. Herodotus was, of course, a base slanderer of the Celtic race, and maliciously attributed the exploit in question to a lot of pitiful Greeks. Mooney, one of the numerous historians of Ireland, calls the poet Collins severely to account for the opening lines of his famous Ode on the Passions. According to Mooney, it was in "early" Ireland, and not "in early Greece," that "Music, heavenly maid," was cradled and sang her first notes. Collins was aware of this fact, but, being a hireling of the British government, he endeavored to rob Catholic Celtic Ireland of her laurels. Doubtless the true name of the discoverer of New York's storied river was Hendrick MacHudson. The ordinarily accepted historic notion that the Empire State was originally colonized by Hollanders is, in the terse language of the Celtic Bodkin, "a baseless assumption." Any intelligent American of the old stock, who is fifty years of age and upwards, knows that in his boyhood "Catholic Celtic Irish" were chiefly known in this country by their absence. As some historian of Ireland, in his chapter on snakes in that remarkable island, briefly says that "there are none," so fifty years ago in most sections of the United States there were no Celtic Catholic Irish. There were streaks of North Ireland colonization in New England, and, in fact, in most sections of the country. These settlers were known as Scotch Irish, and they were an intelligent, sturdy people. They believed in common schools, in free government, in thrift, cleanliness, law, and order; and they did not believe in Italian priests, the holy virgin, corner grogeries, mobs, and rowdism. Calhoun, Jackson, Greeley, are among the illustrious American Scotch Irishmen, who sprang out of this North Ireland colonization. Maryland was originally pretty largely a case of Celtic Catholic Irish colonization, but the English element soon predominated in that State. The Catholic Celtic Irish are comparatively recent comers to the United States, whose government and most characteristic institutions, such as the common school, for instance, were fortunately thoroughly established in the interests of popular freedom and popular intelligence before a priest-led rabble began to be dumped ashore here in numbers numberless, to cast their votes on the side of Southern slave-holders and bull-dozers of the black man, and to hang negroes to lamp-posts in New York, and to crowd almshouses and penitentiaries to repletion. But enough of Bodkin.

JUNIUS.

JESTINGS.

HIS ANSWER.—A gentleman, recently travelling in the country, called out to a boy, "Where does this road go to, my lad?" "Well, I don't know where it goes, but it's always been here when I come along."

AN URCHIN, who had begged a penny of an old toper in vain, rewarded him with this advice: "Don't yer carry that nose of your'n near to no powder fact'ry, or they might play the hose onto yer."

A YOUNG WOMAN living near Niagara Falls made a trip to Lockport the other day, had twelve teeth extracted, a temporary plate fitted to her mouth, returned home in the afternoon, and attended a ball in the evening.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGES.—Lady: "You can have one night a week; but I shall expect you in every other Sunday." Cook: "No, mem: I could not agree to that. I must have every other Sunday out."—Funny Folks.

A SCHOOL-TEACHER who had just been telling the story of David ended with, "And all this happened over three thousand years ago." A little cherub, its blue eyes opening wide with wonder, said, after a moment's thought, "Oh dear, marm, what a memory you have got!"

EPITAPH in a French cemetery:—

Here Lies
Mme. Bertrand,
Wife of
M. Bertrand, marble cutter.
This monument is a specimen of his work.
Cost, 1,500 francs.

A CLERGYMAN in Massachusetts who exchanged pulpits with a brother clergyman last Sunday was congratulated at the close of the service by a friend on the good attention given by his hearers. "Yes," was the reply, "there were only four asleep in the congregation."

"VERY INTELLECTUAL boy that of yours, Mr. Goggles. I should like to examine his head." Proud father: "Johnny, what bumps have you got?" "I've got the bump of eating, father, and the bump that Billy Hopkins gave me on the nose; but I'm layin' for him."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

SOME ADMIRING poet said of his best girl: "Upon her face a thousand dimples smile for me." Which only adds more emphasis to the adage, "Love is blind." How like the mischief a girl would look with a thousand dimples on her face! The poet must have meant freckles.—New Haven Register.

OUT IN NEVADA, a school trustee had just got everything fixed to run away with the school fund, when, to his indignation, he found that the other trustee had squandered every dollar of it. He says now the world is too full of thieves and scoundrels for an honest man to have any kind of a chance.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A LITTLE FELLOW of five, going along the street with a dinner-pail, is stopped by a kind-hearted gentleman, who says: "Where are you going, my little man?" "To school." "And what do you do at school? You learn to read?" "No." "To write?" "No." "To count?" "No." "What do you do?" "I wait for school to let out."—Buffalo Express.

"YOU MUST not play with that little girl, my dear," said an injudicious parent. "But, ma, I like her. She is a good little girl, and I am sure she dresses as pretty as ever I do, and she has lots of toys." "I cannot help that, my dear," replied the foolish mother: "her father is a shoemaker." "But I don't play with her father, I play with her. She ain't a shoemaker."

THE FORT GAINES (Ga.) Tribune has an old colored man among its subscribers who missed his paper one week recently, and called at the office to inquire the reason. He was assured that the paper had been mailed to him as usual. After studying awhile, he said: "When I excubed for de paper, I didn't make my mark, and I thought dat mought have something to do wid it. Good evening, boss."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " " 6 " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 fly, N.Y.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
 Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE OF THE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 fly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike
 Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISE M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrations.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	2.00
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Readings for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Liberalism and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (RAY. O. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Decisions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (WM. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. The Religious Demands of the Age.....	3.00
COONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; its Ideals and Requirements: A Series of Addresses, by T. F. Hulley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.90
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part, "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Domestication of Animals and Plants under the Influence of Man.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede. Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Mademoiselle Mathilde.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.). Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Collect of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Death of Jesus.....	1.50
Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Childs Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Tracts for Schools.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers.....	5.50
10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each.....	.10
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Speeches of the New Faith.....	1.00
Spiced Creed.....	1.00
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. B.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wanderings of J. A. Dale of Koxvold and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Engraving.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in Blount's Life of Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Sailing Boats.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Skirmishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters. Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
Carlyle's History of England. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-time Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with the portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S DAVID. A Poem.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiology, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Tyndall Lectures.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Modern Science.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, and a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Ames.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Sunday Church Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fungi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lumme.....	1.50
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesomites. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPERT (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I and II. Per vol.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Riviera Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte, Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women.....	2.50
erty--both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in Italy.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.50
Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on the Science of Psychology, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion. On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	.60
The two Christmas Celebrations, A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
Happy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.50
The Story of Avila.....	1.50
Trout's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELEEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.A.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Social Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence, and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Fidelity. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	3.60
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Manhood.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Thoreau in England.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Bling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHITFIELD'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Eight Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address, THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK, THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address, THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY or WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The first Edition sells at $15.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 543.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

COLERIDGE wrote few things so boldly true as this: "He who begins by loving Christianity better than truth will proceed by loving his own sect or church better than Christianity, and end in loving his own opinion best of all."

THE DESK on which Jefferson himself testified that he wrote the Declaration of Independence has been presented to the United States by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop. It is to be hoped that the silly people who declare that Thomas Paine wrote the Declaration will now subside.

A WESTERN paper prints this Hibernicism among its standing notices: "To prevent the occurrence of errors, please write legibly on one side only." Are we to infer that illegibility is preferred on the other side? We modestly conjecture that perhaps the editor desires his contributors to "write legibly and on one side only."

AT THE annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, Rev. Wm. Henry Channing is to speak of Dr. Channing's place and services in the movement for inaugurating mental liberty in religion. Geo. W. Curtis has been invited to speak of the same aspect of the work of Theodore Parker, and it is hoped may accept the invitation.

THE PORTLAND Press remarks with considerable point: "It is well to remember that B. A. Morton, just arrested for forgery, is president of the National Liberal League [Party]. Had he been a church member, half the newspapers in the country would have before now had articles on the hypocrisy of professing Christians." It is too true that professedly liberal journals show even a greater eagerness to defend fellow-believers proved to be morally corrupt than do the church papers themselves.

A LOUISVILLE, Ky., despatch of April 25 was to this effect: "To-day, for the first time in ten years, the Sunday law prohibiting labor of any kind was enforced. Between twelve and two o'clock this morning, the police visited all places open, including newspaper offices, and took the name of every person doing work for presentment to the grand jury. The list includes all classes,—editors, compositors, pressmen, newsboys, saloon-keepers, and hackmen. The law is very stringent, allowing no work or business to be done except household duties."

A CURIOUS ENVELOPE, addressed "To some Publisher of a Celebrated Religious Journal, published in Boston, Mass.," was sent to the office of THE INDEX, a few days ago, by the Post-office authorities in this city. They evidently consider THE INDEX as the most "celebrated religious journal" of the Hub of the Universe! The envelope proved to contain printed verses, entitled "Farewell to the Ocean," by "R. Rice, the American Poet, Cambridge, N. Y.," of the most ridiculous description. Our acknowledgments are none the less due, and none the less tendered to the United States Post-office Department for its flattering opinion of THE INDEX!

A LETTER from Dr. Charles Darwin, the world-famous author of the Origin of Species, dated April 15 and just received, contains a passage which we venture to quote, as showing the estimation in which THE INDEX is held by those whose opinion is most valuable abroad: "I always read a large part of your excellent journal, and should certainly read every word, had I time and strength sufficient. But reading much more than the papers, etc., which are necessary for my scientific work nowadays tires me greatly. Most heartily wishing you success in your admirable endeavors in the good cause of truth, and wishing you prosperity in all ways, I remain," etc.

THE Independent says: "We wonder if Unitarians sufficiently note the fact that their persistence as a denomination of any strength depends very much on the vitality of a few men no longer young. Unitarianism has no strength except in a few cities, and already in those cities Episcopacy is sapping their church-walls. What were Unitarianism in Boston without James Freeman Clarke, now seventy years old, and Edward Everett Hale, aged fifty-eight, and C. A. Bartol, aged sixty-seven? What were Unitarianism in New York without Dr. Bellows, aged sixty-six, and Dr. Collyer, aged fifty-seven? And who is there to take their places?" The Independent might make a similar remark of other denominations, in all of which the greatest reputations belong to men well advanced in years. We could name many young Unitarian ministers who, twenty years hence, will probably be no less distinguished than those above named; but they are already so radically inclined that a question may well be raised whether their "Unitarianism" will not be "Free Religion" then.

THE VINELAND, N.J., Independent of May 6 thus comments on the late scandalous "Reception" in New York: "D. M. Bennett, who was confined in the Albany penitentiary for circulating a pamphlet through the mails, entitled Cupid's Yokes, has been released, his term of sentence having expired. A reception was held at Chickering Hall on Sunday evening, to welcome the editor of the Truth-Seeker back to liberty. The enthusiasm was tremendous, the radicals glorying overmuch about their 'martyr,' claiming that he was shut up because he was a free-thinker, and not because Cupid's Yokes was obscene. The call for the meeting asserted that the pamphlet is a 'perfectly decent and philosophical treatise on marriage,' which is either a wilful or ignorant stretch of the imagination. There is not a vulgar word in the pamphlet per se, but the inferences and implications are on a par with the morality of the brothel. As for being 'philosophical,' there is no more philosophy about it than in the shallow babblings of a street-corner loafer, who attempts to solve great social and political questions. The pamphlet contains no positive information of a beneficial character, while its general tendency to demoralization would lead a respectable man to curtail rather than increase its circulation."

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican of May 1 said: "Rev. George Chainey, of the Church of the Unity at Evansville, Ind., tendered his resignation last Sunday in somewhat remarkable language. At the conclusion of the sermon, in which he declared that all the answer he could make to the question, 'What is God?' was, 'I don't know,' and took other ground beyond the bounds of Christianity, and disapproved Unitarian societies that did not do so, he read his letter of resignation, which was even more startling than the sermon. He said that, having heard that his radicalism had been disapproved by members, and desiring to have a fair understanding with the congregation, he offered his resignation. When he came to the church, the understanding was that he should be at liberty to preach his latest thoughts. At that time, he had no idea that he should completely abandon supernaturalism in religion, but his later studies and meditations had led him to do so, and it was but right that the church should have an opportunity of passing upon his fitness to remain. If he did remain, there were conditions he should require, as the church declared itself Christian and that it labored for the kingdom of God. He could not continue as the pastor of a Christian Church, for, said he, 'I am not a Christian'; and about the kingdom of God he expressed his disbelief in the usual interpretation. He had felt for some time that prayer by him was a mockery, and hence he had offered no supplications, but had instead made vocal meditations and would never pray again. Another thing he would never do was to invoke a benediction, and as for the hymns sung in the church they would better sell the books to a rag-man to be made over into honest white paper."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Tenaft, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT. C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. RUSSELL, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Chartered by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y. waucke, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. J. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-cuse, N. Y.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N. Y.
 BEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass. D. E. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Renan on Marcus Aurelius.

Last night, at the weekly evening meeting of the Royal Institution, held in its theatre, Albemarle Street, M. Renan delivered, in his own language before a crowded audience, a lecture on "Marcus Aurelius," in anticipation of the publication of his eagerly-looked-for monograph on that great Roman emperor. He was warmly greeted on making his appearance, and was repeatedly applauded throughout. He said he had accepted with great joy the invitation to visit this country, and exchange ideas with us. He also was a Briton, but from French Brittany; and, of all the races in France, the Bretons were, perhaps, the most seriously religious. Even when, on reflection, we find we have to make changes in articles of belief at first held certain, we never break with the symbol under which we have first tasted of the ideal. For faith is the work of the logic of the heart. Shunning, therefore, subtleties which divide and looking out for a subject dear to the soul, he wished to speak to them about the book, sparkling with divine thought, which he held in his hand—the manual of a life of resignation left us by the most pious of men, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. There had been men exerting a more profound and lasting influence, but none had been so perfect as he. It is the glory of sovereigns that the most blameless model of virtue should be found in their ranks.

The hereditary descent of wisdom upon the throne is ever very rare. I see, said M. Renan, but a couple of striking examples: in India, the succession of the three Mongol emperors, Baber, Humaioun, and Akbar; at Rome, the two admirable reigns of Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius. Of these last two, he thought Antoninus the greater. His goodness did not make him commit faults. He was untormented by the inward sore ever gnawing at the heart of his adopted son, who was the victim of unreasonable scrupulosity and feverish self-inspection. The finest thoughts are those left unwritten; and, on this score, Antoninus had the better of Marcus Aurelius, but it ought to be added that we should know nothing of Antoninus but for the exquisite portrait painted by his adopted son, as if his humility urged him to depict one better than himself. In the first book of his Thoughts, we find the pure and noble figures of his father, of his mother, of his grandfather, of his masters. Thus we get an insight into those old Roman families, which had lived under the bad emperors, but had kept their republican virtues. They were admirers of Cato, Brutus, Thrasea, and the great Stoics whose souls had not bent under tyranny. Domitian's reign was hated in those circles. The sages who had passed through it without yielding were honored as heroes.

The accession of the Antonines was, at bottom, only the gaining of power by the league of indignant sages, described by Tacitus, whom the despotism of the first Cæsars had revolted. M. Renan observed that the wholesome principle of adoption had made the Imperial Court of the second century a nursery of virtue. The noble and able Nerva, by this device of his, gave mankind a hundred years of the greatest happiness and progress known to history. The working of the system was illustrated by the instance of Marcus Aurelius himself. The throne was reached without canvassing, but also without appeal to birth or to any kind of right divine; not, however, without the most elaborate and painful preparation. The Empire was a civil burden to be accepted when the hour struck, and without dreaming of hastening that hour. Marcus Aurelius was destined for it at so early an age that the idea of reigning had hardly any beginning with him, so as to lead him astray for a moment. He was but eight, though already præsul of the Sallian priesthood, when Hadrian noticed this sweet child of sad mien, and loved him for his inborn goodness, his docility, his incapacity for lying. At eighteen, the Empire was assured to him. He waited patiently for it twenty-two years. The evening on which Antoninus, when he felt he was dying, after having given to the tribune on guard the watchword, Æquanimitas, caused to be carried into his adopted son's room the golden statue of Fortune, whose proper place was always the emperor's apartment, the new ruler was neither surprised nor rejoiced. He had long been surfeited with all delights without having tasted them, his profound philosophy had shown him their absolute vanity.

The great drawback which makes practical life unbearable to the man of high principle is that, if he brings to it his ideals, his best qualities are changed into such glaring defects that the egoist or the man of routine often succeeds better in that line. Three or four times the virtue of Marcus Aurelius was on the point of ruining him. It led him to make a first false step by persuading him to take as his partner in the Empire Lucius Verus, to whom he was under no obligation. Verus was a worthless friable. Prodigies of kindness and address were needed to hinder him from committing disastrous acts of folly. The wise Emperor, serious and diligent himself, used to drag with him into his cell the doltish colleague he had chosen. He always persisted in treating the man as serious; he did not once mutiny against this tormenting partnership. Like people who have been very well brought up, Marcus Aurelius felt everlastingly listless; his manners were the result of a determination to be polite and dignified. Souls of this kind, whether for fear of paining others or through their respect for human nature, are not willing to own that they see the evil. Their life is a perpetual course of dissimulation. According to some, he was himself the victim of his own dissimulation, since, in his intimate converse with the gods on the banks of the Gran, speaking of a spouse unworthy of him, he thanked them for having given him "a wife so compliant, so affectionate, so simple." M. Renan believed he had shown that the weakness of Marcus Aurelius as to Faustina had been somewhat exaggerated. He sketched the line of argument which had led him to this conclusion. Historians, more or less imbued with that sort of statesmanship which plumes itself on its superiority because it is not suspected of any philosophical tinge, have naturally sought to prove that a man so accomplished was a bad administrator and a middling sovereign. It seems, in fact, that Marcus Aurelius sinned more than once by being too indulgent.

But never was reign more fruitful in reforms and in progress. The scheme of public succor founded by Nerva and Trajan he admirably developed. New colleges for gratuitous education were established; the alimentary procurators became functionaries of the first rank, and were chosen with the utmost care; provision was made for the education of poor women by an institution named after Faustina. The principle that the State has duties of a somewhat paternal kind towards its members was proclaimed for the first time by the Antonines. Neither the childish pomp of the Oriental monarchies nor the pedantic pride of the mediæval kingdoms could give us any idea of the quite republican sovereignty of Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus, Marcus Aurelius. Nothing of the prince by birth or by divine right, nothing of the military chief, it was a kind of grand civil magistracy, without anything which resembled a court, or which stripped the Emperor of his private character. This was shown in detail to hold good of Marcus Aurelius especially, who was, in no usual sense of the word, a king; but whose fortune was industrial, consisting in brickfields, and whose aversion for "the Cæsars," whom he regards as debauchees of the Sardanapalus order, is always flaming forth. It was when encamped on the banks of the Gran, in the middle of the monotonous plains of Hungary, that he wrote the "finest pages of the exquisite book which has revealed to us his whole soul. He seems to have kept, when still very young, a diary of his thoughts. He wrote down in it the maxims to which he had recourse to fortify his mind, reminiscences of his favorite authors, passages from the moralists who spoke most to his heart, the principles which had sustained him during the day, sometimes the self-reproaches prompted by his scrupulous conscience. M. Renan quoted numerous instances.

One evening, all the images of his pious youth came back again to his memory, and he passed some delicious hours in recounting what he owed to each of the good beings who had envied him. "Examples set by my grandfather Verus,—sweetness of manners, immutable patience." "Qualities found in my father, reminiscences which he has left me,—modesty, manly disposition." "To imitate my mother's piety, her kindness; to refrain as she did, not only from doing evil, but even from thinking it; to lead her frugal life, which was so unlike the habitual luxury of the rich." Afterwards appeared to him, in turn, Diognetus, who inspired him with a taste for philosophy, and rendered agreeable in his eyes the truckle-bed, the coverlid formed of a simple skin, and all the apparatus of the Hellenic discipline; Junius Rusticus, who taught him to avoid all affectation of elegance in style, and lent him the volume of Epictetus; Apollonius of Chalcis, who realized the Stoic ideal of extreme firmness and of perfect gentleness; Sextus of Chersonese, so grave and so good; Alexander, the grammarian, who reproved with such refined politeness.

As a prince, he learnt from Fronto "what envy, duplicity, hypocrisy can be found in a tyrant, and how hard can be the heart of a patrician"; from his brother Severus, "who made him acquainted with Thrasea, Helvidius, Cato, Brutus, who gave him the idea of what a free State is, whose rule is the natural equality of the citizens and the equality of their rights, and that of a realm which puts before everything else respect for the liberty of the citizen." Towering above the rest, by reason of his immaculate grandeur, was Antoninus, the father who had adopted him, whose image he traces with redoubled gratitude and love. He thanks the gods for these blessings and confesses his own shortcomings. This divine candor breathes in every page.

Never did any man write with more simplicity of himself, with the single aim of unburdening his heart, with no other witness than God. There is not a shadow of any system. Properly speaking, Marcus Aurelius knows no philosophy; though he owed well-nigh everything to Stoicism, transformed by the Roman spirit, he is of no school. For our taste, he has too little curiosity, for he does not know all a contemporary of Ptolemy and Galen ought to know; he holds certain opinions as to the system of the world which did not rise to the highest science of his time. But his moral thinking, so emancipated from every fetter of system, thereby rises to a singular sublimity. Even the author of the Imitation of Christ, although keeping very much aloof from the janglings of the schools, does not climb so high; for his manner of feeling is essentially Christian. Take away the Christian dogmas, and his book retains but a part of its charm.

The book of Marcus Aurelius, having no dogmatic base, will keep its freshness forever. All men, from the atheist, or the man who fancies himself such, to the man most entangled in the particular beliefs of each mode of worship, may find in it fruits for edification. It is the most purely human book there is. It decides no controverted question. In theology, Marcus Aurelius floats between pure deism, polytheism interpreted physically in the Stoic manner, and a sort of cosmical pantheism. He does not adhere much more to one of these hypotheses than to the other, and he avails himself indifferently of the three appellations,—deist, polytheist, pantheist. His thoughts have always two faces, according as God and the soul are real or not. It is the way we reason every hour; for if it be the most thorough-going materialism which is in the right, we, who shall count among believers in truth and goodness, shall be no more dupes than other folks. If idealism should turn out right, we shall be proved to have been the truly wise, and we shall be seen to have been so in the only way becoming us,—that is, without being in the least biased by interest in the result, without having reckoned on any fee.

We here touch on the great secret of moral philosophy and religion. Marcus Aurelius had no speculative philosophy: his theology was altogether made up of contradictions; he had no fixed idea as to the soul and immortality. How was it that he was a profoundly moral man without those beliefs which are now regarded as the foundations of morality? How came it that he was eminently religious without having professed any of the dogmas known as natural religion? That is the question we have to study. The doubts which, from the point of view of speculative reason, hover over the truths of natural religion are not, as Kant has admirably shown, accidental, susceptible of removal, incident, as is sometimes imagined, to certain moods of the human mind. These doubts are inherent in the very nature of these truths, and it might be said without paradox that if these doubts were removed the truths themselves which they attack would vanish by the same stroke of the pen. Let us suppose, in fact, future punishment and rewards to be proved directly, positively, in a manner evident to all; where would be the merit of well-doing? None but madmen would lightly heartily hurry on to their damnation. A crowd of ignoble souls would win their salvation with the cards on the table; they would force, in a manner, the hand of the Deity. Who does not see that on such a system there is no longer any morality or religion? In the moral and religious order of things it is indispensable to believe without demonstration: there is no longer a question of certainty, but of faith. This, you see, is what deism forgets with its way of rash affirmation. It forgets that too precise beliefs as to the destiny of man would sweep away all moral merit. As for ourselves, the moment anybody should tell us of a peremptory argument of this kind we should do as St. Louis did when somebody spoke to him about the miraculous wafer. We should refuse to go and see it. What need have we of these brutish proofs, which have no application save in the grosser order of facts, and which would cramp our freedom? We should be afraid of becoming like those speculators in the virtues or those vulgar weighers of scruples who carry into the affairs of the soul the coarse egoism of practical life.

In the first days which followed the beginnings of faith in the resurrection of Jesus, this came to light in the most touching manner. His true friends at heart, the tender souls, loved belief without proof better than sight. "Blessed are they who have not seen and yet have believed," was the watchword of the situation. Charming watchword! Eternal symbol of tender and generous idealism, which feels a horror of touching with the hands what should be seen with the heart only! Our good Marcus Aurelius, in this as in all else, was in advance of the centuries. Never did he care to put himself in harmony with himself as to God and the soul. As though he had read Kant's Criticism of Practical Reason, he saw right well that when the Infinite is in question no formula is absolute, and that in matter of that kind we can only get a chance of having seen the truth once in one's life, if one is much exposed to contradiction. He took the high ground of loosening the bond between moral beauty and all fixed theology; he did not grant the dependence of duty upon any metaphysical opinion as to the First Cause. Never was inmost union with the hidden God pushed to more unheard-of depths of tenderness. "Pay as tribute to the government of the god within thee a manly being, ripened by age, a friend of the public good, a Roman, an emperor, a soldier at his post awaiting the trumpet's signal, a man ready to quit life without regret." "There are many grains of incense destined for the same altar; one falls into the fire sooner, the other later, but the difference is nothing." "Man is bound to live according to nature the few days given him on earth, and, when the moment for withdrawal is come, to render sweet submission, like the olive, which as it falls blesses the tree that has borne it, and gives thanks to the branch which has carried it." "O man! thou hast been a citizen in the great city; what matters it whether thou hast been so five or three years? What is according to law is unequal for no man. What, then, is there to grieve over in being banished from the city, not by a tyrant, not by an inequitable judge, but by Nature herself, who enrolled you therein? It is but the lot of a comedian, who is dismissed from the theatre by the same prætor who engaged him. But you will say, 'I have not played the five acts; I have played but three.' You say well, but in life three acts are enough to make the piece a whole. . . . Depart content, then, since He who dismisses thee is content."

Is it to be said, then, that he did not sometimes revolt against the strange destiny which was pleased to leave alone face to face with one another man with his eternal needs of devotion, of sacrifice, of heroism, and Nature with her transcendent immorality, her supreme disdain for virtue? No. Once, at least, the absurdity, the colossal unfairness of death strikes him. But soon his completely chastened and mortified temperament gets the upper hand, and he becomes calmer. "How happens it that the gods, who have ordered all things so well and with so much love for men, have neglected one single point: to wit, that men of approved virtue, who throughout life have held a kind of converse with the divinity, who have rendered themselves beloved by their pious deeds and their sacrifices, do not live again after death, but are extinguished forever? Since the thing is so, know well that if it ought to have been otherwise they would not have failed so to order it; for had it been right it would have been possible; if such a thing had been conformable to Nature, Nature would have allowed it. Consequently, by the fact that it is not so, strengthen thyself in the view that there was no need it should be so. Thou thyself seest that to push speculation so far is to dispute with God about His right. But we should not thus dispute against the gods did we not hold them to be sovereignly good and sovereignly just; if they are that they have allowed nothing in the ordering of the world which is contrary to justice and reason." Ah! that is carrying resignation too far, dear master. Were it in truth so, we have a right to complain. To say that if this world has no counterpart, the man who sacrifices himself for goodness and truth ought to leave it contentedly and to absolve the gods is too naïve. No, he has a right to blaspheme them! For, why so cruelly abuse his credulity? Why implant within him deceptive instincts of which he has been the honest dupe? Why this premium granted to the fribble or the scoundrel? It is he, then, who is not cheated, who is the wise man. . . . But, in that case, cursed be the gods who choose their favorites so ill! I want the future world to remain a riddle; but if there be no world to come, this world is a frightful ambushade. Remark, in fact, that our wish is not that of the coarse crowd. What we want is not to gloat over the chastisement of the culprit nor to draw the dividends on our virtue. What we want has nothing egoistical about it: it is simply to be and to stay connected with God, to carry on our thinking as we have begun, to get more knowledge out of it, to be rejoiced one day with the sight of that truth we are seeking with so much travail, the triumph of the goodness we have loved. Surely nothing could be more legitimate. The worthy Emperor, moreover, keenly felt so. "What! the light of a lamp shines brightly down to the moment when it is quenched and loses nothing of its brilliancy; and the truth, justice, temperance, which are within thee are to be quenched along with thee!"

All his life he passed in this noble hesitation. If he sinned it was through too much piety. Less resigned, he would have been more just; for surely to ask to have a friendly and sympathizing spectator of the battles we fight for goodness and truth is not to ask too much. It is also possible that if his philosophy had been less exclusively ethical, if it had comprised a more inquisitive study of history and of the universe, it would have avoided certain excesses on the side of rigor. Like the Christian ascetics, Marcus Aurelius now and then pushes self-denial to the extreme of dryness and subtlety. One feels that the calm which never fails to come at last is obtained by an immense effort. Assuredly evil never had any attraction for him; he had not to wrestle with any passion: "Whatever men do or whatever men say, I must be a good man, just as the emerald may say, 'Whatever men do or whatever men say, I must be an emerald and keep my color well.'"

But to keep his footing always on the icy peak of Stoicism he was forced to inflict cruel acts of violence on his nature, and to cut away more than one of its nobler elements. This perpetual repetition of the same reasonings, these images by the thousand under which he seeks to represent to himself the vanity of all things, these proofs, often naïve enough, of universal frivolity, bear witness of the battles he had to fight to extinguish in himself all desire. Sometimes we are a little soured and saddened by this. The reading of Marcus Aurelius is bracing, but not consolatory; it leaves in the soul a void which is at the same time delicious and cruel, which one would not give in exchange for complete satisfaction. Humility, abnegation, severe self-judgment, have never been pushed further. Glory, that last illusion of great souls, is annihilated. He must do good without troubling himself whether anybody will know of it. He sees clearly that history will speak of him; he sometimes dreams of men of the past with whom the future will associate him. "If," he says, "they have played the part of tragic actors only, nobody has condemned me to imitate them."

The absolute mortification to which he had attained had extinguished self-love in him to the last fibre. The result of this austere philosophy might have been rigidity and hardness. It is here that the rare kindness of the nature of Marcus Aurelius breaks forth in all its lustre. His harshness is for himself only. The fruit of this great tension of soul is a boundless benevolence. All his life was a study how to return good for evil. After some sad experience of human perversity, all he finds to write in the evening is what follows: "If thou canst do so, correct these people; in the contrary case, remember that it is for the purpose of exercising it towards them that benevolence has been given thee. The gods themselves are benevolent towards these beings; they help them, such is their kindness towards them, to acquire health, riches, and glory. It is permitted thee to do like the gods." On another day, men were very perverse; for this is what he wrote in his tablets: "Such is Nature's order; people of this kind are impelled by necessity to act thus. To wish it were otherwise is the same thing as to wish that the fig-tree did not produce figs. Be mindful, in a word, of this: in a very short time thou and he will die; soon afterwards your very names will no longer survive."

These reflections on universal pardon incessantly recur. Now and then an imperceptible smile hardly blends with this ravishing kindness: "The best way of avenging ourselves upon the bad is by not making ourselves like them"; or there is a slight accent of pride: "It is something kingly when we do good to hear ourselves spoken ill of." One day he has to reproach himself thus: "Thou hast forgotten what a sacred kindred unites every man with the human race; kindred not by blood and birth, but by sharing the same intelligence. Thou hast forgotten that the reasonable soul is a god, an emanation from the Supreme Being." In the intercourse of life he was wont to be refined, though a little simple, as very good men commonly are. The nine motives for indulgence which he impresses upon himself (Book xi., Art. 18) show us his charming bonhomie in presence of family difficulties which, perhaps, were chargeable to his unworthy son: "If, under the circumstances," he says to himself, "thou wert to exhort him peaceably and to give him without anger, when he is working himself up to do thee harm, lessons like this: 'No, my child, we are born for something else. It is not I who shall feel the evil, it is thou who art inflicting it on thyself.' Show him skillfully by a general consideration that such is the rule, that neither the bees act as he does, nor any of the animals whose nature it is to live banded together. Do not put into the lesson either mockery or insult, but let it breathe a true affection, springing from a heart stung by anger; do not speak like a pedant to invite the admiration of the bystanders, but keep in view him alone."

Commodus (if it is he who is in question) was doubtless very little moved by this good, fatherly rhetoric. It was one of the maxims of the excellent Emperor that the bad are unfortunate, that nobody is bad save in spite of himself and from ignorance. He pitied those who were not like himself; he did not think he had the right to thrust himself upon them. He saw clearly men's baseness, but he did not own it to himself. This habit of blinding themselves voluntarily is the defect of choice souls. The world not being all they could wish, they lie to their own hearts in order to see it otherwise than it is. Thence comes the slight conventionalism in their judgments. In the instance of Marcus Aurelius, this conventionalism now and then sets our teeth a little on edge. If we chose to believe it, his teachers, several of whom were men of sufficiently middling abilities, must without exception have been superior men. One would have to say that everybody about him was virtuous. This sort of thing goes to such lengths that it might be asked whether the brother on whom he pronounces such a grand eulogium, in his thanksgiving to the gods, was not his brother by adoption, Lucius Verus. That is not very likely. But it is certain that the good Emperor was capable of great illusions when it was a question of lending another his own virtues. This quality, according to some criticisms written by the ancients, especially by the pen of the Emperor Julian, caused Marcus Aurelius to commit an enormous fault—that of not having disinherited Commodus. We see there are things which it is easy to speak of at a distance, when the hindrances are no longer there, and to reason far away from the facts. In the first place, it is forgotten that the emperors, from Nerva downwards, who made adoption into so fruitful a political system, had no sons. Adoption, with disinheritance of the son or grandson, is seen in the first century of the Empire, but has no good results.

Marcus Aurelius was, on principle, evidently in favor of hereditary descent, in which he saw the advantage of preventing rivalries. From the birth of Commodus, in 161, he presented him alone to the legions, although he had a twin brother. Often he took the little one in his arms and renewed the act, which was a kind of proclamation. In 166, it is Lucius Verus himself who demands that the two sons of Marcus, Commodus and Aonius Verus, shall be made Cæsars. In 172, Commodus shares with his father the title Germanicus; in 178, after the repression of the revolt of Avidius, the Senate, in order to recognize in some way the disinterestedness as to his family shown by Marcus Aurelius, demands by acclamation the Empire and the tribunitial power for Commodus. Already the bad natural disposition of the latter had been betrayed by more than one sign known to his tutors, but how could the future of a child of twelve be fairly prejudged on the strength of some bad marks? In 176 and 177, his father makes him emperor, consul, Augustus. This was certainly an imprudent course; but one was bound by anterior acts; besides, Commodus kept himself still under restraint. In the last years, the evil quite threw off the cloak; on each page of the last books of the Thoughts we trace the inward martyrdom of the excellent father, of the accomplished emperor, who sees a monster growing up at his side, ready to succeed him, and resolved to take in everything, by antipathy, the opposite course to that which he had seen followed by good men. The thought of disinheriting Commodus must then have occurred more than once to Marcus Aurelius. But it was too late. After having associated him with himself in the Empire, after having so many times proclaimed him perfect and accomplished before the legions, to go the length of declaring him unworthy in the face of the world would have been a scandal. Marcus was taken in the snare of his own phrases, caught in the formulas of a conventional benevolence but too habitual to him. At first, Commodus evinced the intention of following the counsels of persons of merit, with whom his father had surrounded him.

The reproach, then, chargeable on Marcus Aurelius is not that of not having disinherited his son; it is that of having had a son. It was not his fault if the age was not capable of bearing so much wisdom. In philosophy the great Emperor had lifted so high the ideal of virtue that nobody felt bound to trouble himself about following it; in regard to policy, his benevolent optimism had enfeebled the public services, especially the army. In religion, through having been too much attached to a State religion whose weak points he was well aware of, he paved the way for the violent triumph of a worship not officially sanctioned, and he allowed a reproach to settle upon his memory, unjust it is true, but the shadow of which ought not to have been met with in a life so pure. We here touch on one of the most delicate points in the biography of Marcus Aurelius. It is, unhappily, certain that death-sentences against Christians were pronounced and executed during his reign. The policy of the Antonines was uniform in this respect. They saw in Christianity a secret, anti-social sect, which dreamt of the overthrow of the Empire; like all men attached to the old Roman principles, they believed it necessary to put it down. No special edicts were needed for this; the laws against the cætus illiciti, the illicita collegia, were numerous. The Christians fell in the most formal manner under the stroke of these laws. No doubt it would have been worthy of the wise Emperor, who introduced so many reforms inspired by humanity, to suppress the edicts which inflicted cruel and unrighteous penalties.

But it must be remarked at the outset that the true spirit of liberty, as we understand it, was then comprehended by nobody, and that Christianity, when it got the upper hand, did not reduce it to practice better than the pagan emperors. In the second place, the abrogation of the law against illicit societies would have been the ruin of the Empire, which was essentially based on the principle that the State ought not to receive into its bosom any heterogeneous society. The principle was a bad one, according to our ideas, but it is none the less certain that it was the corner-stone of the Roman Constitution.

Marcus Aurelius, far from exaggerating it, softened it down to the best of his ability; and one of the glories of his reign is the extension which he gave to the right of association. Meanwhile, he did not go down to the root; he did not completely abolish the laws against the collegia illicita; and the result in the provinces was some applications of that law which are infinitely to be regretted. The reproach which can be brought against him is the same which might be addressed to the sovereigns of our days, who do not suppress with a stroke of the pen all the laws restrictive of the right of public meetings, of association, of the press. At this distance of time, we see clearly that Marcus Aurelius would have been wiser had he been more thoroughly liberal. Perhaps Christianity, if left free, would have developed in a less disastrous fashion the theocratic and absolute principle inherent in it. But one ought not to reproach a statesman for not having evoked a radical revolution with a view to events which were not to happen until many centuries after his days. Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus, Marcus Aurelius could not know the principles of general history and political economy which have not been perceived until our own times, and which our latest revolutions could alone have brought to light. In any case, the good Emperor's mildness was in this matter above all reproach. One has no right in this matter to be more morose than Tertullian. "Consult your annals," said he to the Roman magistrates, "you will see in them that the princes who have waged against us are those whom one holds it an honor to have had as persecutors. On the other hand, of all the princes who have been acquainted with the laws divine and human, let a single one be named who has persecuted the Christians. We can even cite one of them who declared himself their protector, the wise Marcus Aurelius. If he did not openly repeal the edicts invoked against our brethren, he destroyed the effect of them by the establishment of severe penalties against their accusers." It must be remembered that the Roman Empire was ten or twelve times as large as France, and that the Emperor's responsibility for the judgments passed in the provinces was greatly attenuated. Above all, it must be remembered that Christianity did not simply claim freedom for the various forms of worship; all forms of worship which were tolerant towards others were left quite at their ease within the Empire; that which placed Christianity and Judaism in an altogether exceptional position was their intolerance, their exclusive spirit. Liberty of thought was absolute. From Nerva to Constantine, not a thinker, not a scholar, was disturbed. Men whom the Middle Ages would have burnt, such as Galen, Lucian, Plotinus, lived in peace, protected by the law.

Behold the reason why we all lay to heart the mourning for Marcus Aurelius! In his person philosophy reigned. For a moment, thanks to him, the world was governed by the best and greatest man of his age. Frightful periods of decay followed, but the little casket which enclosed the thoughts which passed through his mind on the banks of the Gran and his philosophy were saved. There came forth from that casket this incomparable book, in which Epictetus has been surpassed, this gospel of those who do not believe in the supernatural, which has not been understood save in our days. Veritably an everlasting gospel, the book of the Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius will never grow old, for it affirms no dogma. The virtue of Marcus Aurelius, like our own, rests on reason, on nature. St. Louis was a very virtuous man because he was a Christian; Marcus Aurelius was the most pious of men, not because he was a pagan, but because he was a perfected man. He was the honor of human kind, and not of any determinate religion. Science would come to destroy seemingly God and the immortal soul, which the book of the Thoughts would give us back still young in life and truth. The religion of Marcus Aurelius is the absolute religion, that which results from the simple fact of a lofty moral conscience confronting the universe. It is of no race, of no country either. No revolution, no change, no discovery can alter it.—London Times, April 17.

A MAN WITHOUT enemies is like bread without yeast: he never rises.

"THE LIGHT OF ASIA."

A SERMON AT KING'S CHAPEL, BOSTON, APRIL 11, 1880.

BY REV. F. H. HEDGE, D.D.

It has been well said that to know one religion, like the knowledge of one language, is to know none. What has been learned of religions by recent explorers has taught us to respect the Gentile faiths. We have learned to reconsider the once prevailing opinion that our own is the only God-given religion, and consequently the only perfect one, and all others are monstrous abortions or impostures. We have learned that the Holy Spirit can speak in other tongues than Hebrew or Greek, that it has command of Sanscrit, Arabic, or Zend. We have learned that every religion was at the start a power for good. This is a great advance from the opinion which we used to find in the old school-books. Then Mohammed was spoken of as an impostor in the same tone in which the boundaries of States were given. Of the ethnic religions the most important in its bearing on human history, except Mohammedanism, is Buddhism. It exceeds Christianity and Mohammedanism in the number of its adherents. Between four and five hundred million worshippers acknowledge its sway. Considering its wide dominion, that it is five hundred years older than Christianity, and the date of the British conquest of India, it is remarkable that nothing was known to the Western world of the doctrines of its founder till near the middle of the present century. Between 1824 and 1839 an Englishman in Nepal, India, obtained possession of a mass of Sanscrit manuscripts. Neither in India nor England was there a scholar who could undertake the enormous task of explaining these writings. But a young man in Paris addressed himself to the work, and after seven years of patient toil was able, in 1844, to give to the public his introduction to the history of Buddhism. Other translations of other parts of the work followed, and the doctrines of Buddha became known to Western scholars. Chief of these doctrines were these: That life is a curse, and that final individual extinction is the greatest good. So much of these works has now become known that the literature of Buddhism is more extensive in the Christian world than that of any other ancient faith. Of the recent poem, The Light of Asia, Dr. Hedge remarked that it has undeniable merits, and is likely to maintain its rank among the narrative poems of modern times, and has brought Buddhism to a larger circle of readers than it has hitherto reached.

From the translations which have been made an impartial judgment can be formed of the Buddhist faith. In studying it, however, allowance must be made for the myths which have gathered about its origin. In the old Hindoo mind the imagination was developed more in proportion to the reasoning faculties than it is among modern people. They were like children with their fables, and delighted with numerical exaggeration. Some of the stories narrated of Buddha are undoubtedly fictitious, and the critical mind rejects the greater part of them. But, after all deductions and criticisms have been made, there remains the great and marvellous fact, which must be accepted as historic, that an Indian prince, a king's son, heir to the throne, cradled in luxury, wooed with all blandishments, fed with all sweets, forsook home, father, wife, and devoted friends, and made himself of no reputation, put on a beggar's garb, took the alms-bowl in his hand, subsisted upon whatever scanty pity might fling into it, and gave himself to the search for means for relieving the universal woe, if haply he might save the overburdened world from the curse of being. The fact is without parallel in the history of mankind, and was the work of a sublime soul. Like works which are inspired by a lofty purpose, it proved of immense good. It was not then a mark of disgrace for one to wear the beggar's garb in a religious life, and Gautama Sakya Muni took up first that mode of living. Failing to secure his object in this way, he retired to a forest and practised austerities, by which he hoped to mortify the flesh. But austerities dulled and enfeebled the body, and he abandoned them for the practice of silent meditations, in which he hoped to reach the solution of the problem of life. As he believed he found it, and became Buddha. Then, as has been said, the fate of millions trembled in the balance. He was in doubt whether to reveal it to men, but his pity prevailed, and he became the founder of a religion which still holds sway over four hundred and fifty-five millions of human beings. His life was thenceforth devoted to the extension of his religion. He preached with great effect, and his father and wife both became converts. He finally died of fatigue at the age of fourscore and ten, while resting under a tree when he was on a journey. The date is given at 540 and also at 477 B.C. He had three qualities which peculiarly fitted him for his work. He was endowed with a penetrating mind, indomitable will, and a loving, self-sacrificing spirit. He was a seer, a hero, and a philanthropist. To say that he planted a religion which filled the continent of Asia would be a very imperfect statement of his claims to the gratitude and respect of mankind. Buddhism exerted a civilizing influence wherever it extended its sway. It changed habits of life in civilized countries, and in barbarous lands it tamed the rude populations with its pure and peaceful notes. It abolished caste in India; it emancipated the people from the yoke of the priesthood. Afterward India relapsed into Brahminism, and caste was restored; but its absolute power no longer controlled all classes of people as before.

All who know Buddha's system of morality speak of it with high praise. All the Christian virtues are inculcated. He gave five commandments, which were of general application: "Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not lie. Thou shalt not get drunk." Five others he gave which were of special application to those who embraced his religion: "Abstain from unseasonable meals. Abstain from witnessing dances and theatrical representations, and from songs and musical instruments. Abstain from ornaments and perfumes. Abstain from having a large bed. Abstain from taking gold or silver." The commandment not to kill included brute creatures as well as men, including even the noxious kinds. Many deeds of kindness to men and animals were done under the influence of his teachings. When these ministrations of pity are contrasted with the reckless cruelties of Christian civilization, said Dr. Hedge, I must say that on this side the Buddhist who knows no God is kinder-hearted than the Christian who names him. Hospitals for sick and maimed animals have existed time out of mind in Buddhist lands. Again, Buddhism stands preëminent in tolerance. It stands alone among the religions of the world. The sons of Buddha, the clergy, have never, even when they had power, used the sword as an instrument for conversion. They never instituted inquisitorial tribunals, or acts of faith, or burning of witches. Their wide missionary efforts and their peaceful methods settle the question as to their tolerance. Were religions to be judged by their morality, then Buddhism would stand second to none. There is no virtue inculcated in the Christian code which is not anticipated in Buddhism; and some of the virtues are pushed beyond the scope of the gospel—such as cutting off an offending hand, which is taken literally in Buddhism. It teaches to hide good deeds and to expose one's own faults. In loving your enemies, it includes beasts of prey. But morality is not a test of religion. The real test is the vigor and joy it inspires and the lift it gives to the soul. This depends not on its morality, but on its view of the future. Here is the great difference between Christianity and Buddhism. Here we acknowledge a superiority on the side of Christianity which defies comparison. Christianity is a religion of boundless promise: Buddhism is a religion of despair. The only alleviation which it promises is the prospect of some time becoming extinct. The end of Christ's mission was life: the end of Buddha's mission was the extinction of life. Buddhism is absolute pessimism. Its fundamental position is that life is a curse. Nothing of this sort is found in Christ, yet some Christians are much given to saying that this life is a vale of tears. The sermon closed with mention of the current popular doctrine in Buddha's time and taught by him, that there is no God, but that everything is ruled by inexorable law, and with discussion of the meaning of the Buddhist's nirvana, a word which practically means annihilation, whatever shade be attached to it. In closing he said there need be no hesitation in drawing a parallel between him who is called the light of Asia and Him who declared himself to be the light of the world.—Advertiser.

NO LONGER A CHRISTIAN.

It must surprise people to hear of a minister's resigning his pastorate and giving up the preaching of the gospel because he has come to the conclusion that he is not a Christian. But that was the reason the Rev. George Chainey, a Unitarian minister, recently gave for resigning the charge of a church in Evansville. He startled his congregation a week ago last Sunday by announcing that he was not a Christian, and that, inasmuch as his church declared itself Christian, it was plainly his duty to hand in his resignation as its pastor.

Ministers frequently resign for other reasons, but the case of the Rev. Mr. Chainey is peculiar. They may get calls to more desirable churches, that pay their pastors better salaries. They may not like the climate of the region in which they are settled, and therefore may gladly seize the opportunity for a change. They may find their congregations growing tired of their style of preaching and disposed to criticize it unfavorably. They may have collected a barrel of sermons, which will be as good as new to a fresh church, and so long as it holds out they can get rid of sermon-writing. Their families may not enjoy the society of the places where they are. It may not be fine enough to suit their tastes. The elders or deacons and the old maids of the congregation may worry them with doctrinal questions and religious gossip. They may be tired of living in the country, and want to try the city. The novelty of any sort of change may have fascinations for them. They may think that elsewhere their talents will be as highly appreciated by others as they are by themselves. The cost of living in the new place may be less, or the schools for the children better, or the chances of getting a desirable house greater.

There are a thousand and one reasons why ministers resign their parishes, besides one we have not mentioned; and that is the refusal of their congregations to longer endure their preaching. We mean the real reasons. The assigned reason, however, is always, of course, that the finger of Providence points to some other field. They may, too, give up preaching because they want to go in to some more congenial or profitable business; but a century may pass and not one minister resign because he discovers he is in truth not a Christian.

And yet probably, if only those who are Christians after the New Testament model were left in Christian pulpits, the number of pulpits found vacant would be great. If only those remained who have a genuine, undoubting, and vital belief in the doctrines they preach, and who regulate their lives in accordance with them, how many churches would now be hunting for pastors?

Moreover, if all those of their congregations who profess and call themselves Christians were Christians in truth instead of in name only, what a change would come over the face of society, what a revolution would take place in business!

The Rev. Mr. Chainey shows that he is an honest man in giving up the charge of a Christian church when he finds he is no longer a Christian. He also shows that he is, what few men are, an honest critic of himself. If everybody tested his religious belief and his religious practice by the Christian standards as they are laid down in the New Testament, and accepted the result with equal candor, perhaps instead of being a remarkable exception, the Rev. Mr. Chainey would find he was lost to sight in the crowded ranks of the majority.—N. Y. Sun, April 25.

MAY FAITH AND FREEDOM MARRY?

It is wonderful,—the significance we all attach to circumstances that make in the line of our wishes. Thus, when that diffusively amiable philosopher, Mr. Alcott,—a mild pleiad in the firmament of which Emerson is the Jupiter,—beamed from an Andover platform upon an Orthodox assembly and talked a transcendental Trinitarianism, the watchmen on the walls of Zion had a vision of the lost Unitarian tribes returning to the true Jerusalem, with Joseph Cook standing at the gate like St. Peter or a celestial custom-house officer. And now Dr. Bartol, known hitherto as freest of free lances, sharply criticises his ministerial brethren for asking F. E. Abbot to talk to them at their Providence meeting; and again a cry of jubilation and hope goes up, that the Unitarians begin to see that they must "draw a line," and advance backward in their theological freedom.

The truth is, it would be hard to say whether the conservative Episcopal Church or the Unitarians have made the larger progress in liberty of opinion within the last dozen years, and neither body shows any signs of retreating. The Episcopal authorities have almost ceased to attack ritualism, leaving it to quietly work out its own salvation or perdition. On the other or Broad Church wing, they have equally extended their lines. Men as honored among them as Dr. Hall and Dr. Henry attack sharply the doctrine of eternal punishment; and Phillips Brooks, their foremost preacher, holds Orthodoxy of almost as large and free a pattern as Dean Stanley's. Among the Unitarians, it was virtually decided at the Saratoga conferences of six or eight years ago that no limitations of creed should be imposed upon their members or ministry. This, which seemed to the Orthodox world an audacious and ruinous experiment, has worked to the general and growing satisfaction of the Unitarian body; and there is no more prospect of their retreat from it than that Phillips Brooks and David Swing will unite on the platform of the Westminster Confession. Nor has there followed any ruinous consequence either of internal discord or of loss of spiritual life. Just as among the Episcopalians the cessation of the crusade against the ritualists was followed by a lull of polemical bitterness and a harmony fruitful of growth, so has it been with the Unitarians since the attempt to put radical opinions under the ban was given up. At the same time, these opinions have rapidly and surely gained ground.

The strong tendency among the Unitarians as a body is to study the Bible under the same canons as all other literature, to regard its miraculous elements as unhistorical, and to consider Jesus as purely human. So radical a book as The Bible for Learners, gets warm commendation in the Christian Register, and undoubtedly represents the prevailing tendency in the denomination. Equally apparent with the radicalizing of opinion is the deepening of the religious spirit. Unitarianism was always humane, but it has been accused of deficiency in spirituality. It has always had men of spiritual leadership, but its ministry as a whole has at some periods tended to a dry intellectualism. That is ceasing to be true of the present. There is a marked growth in the spirit of trust and worship and communion. The change has come, not as a recoil from radical opinions, but as an onward step following the establishment of those opinions. There is no reverting to the authority of the Bible or of Christ; but there is a recognition that the Bible and Christ are at one with all the other great facts of life, in bearing witness to man's spiritual nature and divine relationship. The fellowship of the body, instead of growing weaker from the abolition of dogmatic tests, has grown warmer and closer since only a "unity of the spirit" has been sought. The experiment has shown that in religion, as in other departments of life, a very real unity may exist without definitions.

The men who feel themselves at variance with the Christian spirit naturally drop off from the Unitarian ministry, if they find themselves in it. But it is yet to be seen whether that body can rise above its greatest weakness hitherto, by carrying the gospel to the common people as well as to the educated. That is a question almost of life or death for the Unitarian churches. A form of religion that cannot adapt itself to plain, unintellectual men and women has small occasion to exist anywhere, and the very smallest occasion in this American community. Men whose bent is iconoclastic, like F. E. Abbot, or speculative and rhetorical, like O. B. Frothingham, seem to drift outside of the Unitarian ranks, though remaining on such friendly terms with their old associates as to make sometimes a neighborly call,—which ought hardly to disturb so catholic and sweet-spirited a man as Dr. Bartol. But whether the body is to be a living and growing force in American society must depend largely on whether its young men take their inspiration chiefly from the high intellectualism of Concord and Cambridge, or from such men of the people as Robert Collyer and Edward E. Hale and Charles G. Ames.

However this may be, one fact is clear. Intellectual freedom is not the foe, but the friend of religious life. These two bodies, the Episcopal and Unitarian, though both of them small in numbers among the great sects, represent in a special sense the elements to which religion must growingly appeal. The Episcopal church stands for worship in its most attractive form, the Unitarian churches for reason in its freest exercise. Both stand for unselfish service among men and devout aspiration toward God. And both have found this, their essential work, to be better done when they forbear to press authoritative restriction upon the belief of their members. The Unitarian body has made the bolder advance. It has met the question, May faith and freedom marry? with a square Yes,—quite undeterred by the discovery that the parties are near of kin.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Dec. 28.

A REMARKABLE DECLARATION.

At a recent "inquiry" gathering of a religious society here, when the subject for consideration was "Special Providence and Prayer," and after it had been fully, thoroughly ventilated by the members present, a Mr. Norton, a quite thoughtful man, long esteemed by our citizens as a model person, as he was often referred to, was urged to give his views, which he declined, saying he had not the faculty of hastily formulating and extemporizing his ideas, and afterwards again declined, by suggesting that his views were so very different from those that had been presented and which seemed to be generally, if not unanimously, entertained by the persons present, that he felt assured they would not be acceptable. But a provocative in the way of an interrogation as to whether he accepted certain points brought him out, when he replied as follows:—

"I am in no sense a believer in any 'special providence.' I believe all things are indivisible parts of the great 'cosmos,' 'natural law,' so called, in the absence of any precise or better term to express the order of the universe. I am impressed that we—the race of humanity—are portions of the great universe of matter-substances, or, if you please so to designate it, spirit, which by some is termed the 'real essence.' I know nothing about any providence as applied to a personal deity; and though through the force of early training, influence, or education, I may sometimes be engaged in hoping for some sort of a future, I have no belief in any, and no particular aspirations or desires in that direction; for reason, gathered from the facts of life, seems to assure me that death ends all that now is in active and vital form, and called mortal here.

"If there is a 'spiritual' or 'superior essence' that survives the fleshy organism,—and I have no evidence of any such existence,—that becomes an 'immortal unity,' enters into some other form of intelligent life, but unlike that I possessed here, I have no particular interest in it; for without identification there can be no recognition of worldly associates, and in that is all the pleasure I could think of as a connection with this life. I regard the different forms of worship as so many relics of barbarism. The shrines, temples, cathedrals, rituals, bells, organs, prayers, or supplications, as have been alluded to, as mere reminders or imitations of an uncivilized or unenlightened past, all well enough for their different periods, from the fetishism of the Congo or Bushman to the more elaborate worship and rituals of the Catholics in the edifice of St. Peter's at Rome, Milan, Cologne, etc., and all destined to be swept away as civilization advances and common-sense shall hold supremacy over superstition, bigotry, prejudice, and fanaticism. The supplication, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' referred to by the last speaker, may be uttered by any indolent tramp or dead-beat, but not by any man of sense, honor, or energy. Prayer is rubbish to me.

"I off coat, ply my trade, and earn bread enough for a family of six persons. Frederick Douglas says he prayed earnestly for freedom, but never effectively until he prayed with his legs, and then he escaped, and reached the dominions of anti-slavery.

"I have no religion, and want none; for I regard religion as a disease. Those who have the malady severely—as we find from the public statistics—make up the majority cases of the insane asylums.

"I have nothing to ask for, no gift to pray for. My occupation gives me the food, raiment, education, and necessary recreations myself and family require.

"I make the best of the life I know of, and try to live squarely, and not in any way to impose upon or annoy my fellows, but always to treat them with kindness, charity, and fairness.

"Of the 'life to come,' so urgently and expensively impressed upon humanity, I have no knowledge, and, I may say, no belief. If it comes, well; if not, well also; but I make no investment in any speculation, idealisms, or theories of a 'future existence,' only treat those I meet with as pastimes in the sea of religious literature, but unworthy much serious thought or investigation. But in the effort of humanity to perfect itself, to live in accordance with the laws of nature, to secure character in the place of the dross of mere profession, to inform society how best to obtain the highest and purest enjoyment from the life that is, there I see plainly a duty, and there I shall endeavor to exert myself."—Madison (Wis.) Democrat.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 15.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

W. O. Mack, $5; J. Sullivan, $15.07; J. D. Frost, $20.10; Seth Hunt, $10; Charles Post, $33; J. E. Curtis, $1; W. F. Chambers, $20.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 20, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged May 6.....	$2,165.00
ARTHUR H. CUTLER, New York.....	1.00
DR. J. GOLDMARK, " ".....	10.00
WM. PAULSEN, " ".....	5.00
ADAM JACOB, " ".....	5.00
FRANK L. POPE, " ".....	1.00
DR. J. M. MEMMINGER, " ".....	1.00
WM. BOYER, " ".....	1.00
CLARENCE COOK, " ".....	5.00
H. W. JOHNSON, " ".....	5.00
MRS. LEWIS STINE, " ".....	1.00
HERMAN BEHER, " ".....	1.00
G. OBERMEYER, " ".....	1.00
WM. KURTZ, " ".....	5.00
MRS. J. E. SUITERLIN, " ".....	2.00
THEODORE P. JENKINS, " ".....	1.00
DR. D. C. WHITE, " ".....	1.00
Geo. W. SELIGMAN, " ".....	25.00
PHILIP HEIDELBACH, " ".....	5.00
EMIL UNGER, " ".....	1.00
DR. H. MENNINGER, " ".....	1.00
DR. ROSENBERG, " ".....	1.00
F. HUESMAN, " ".....	1.00
Z. A. HUESMAN, " ".....	1.00
FRANCIS PARES, " ".....	1.00
Total.....	$2,251.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Ninth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 5, 1880, at 2.30 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows: Business session, for election of officers, hearing and discussion of reports, etc., Thursday, May 27, 7.45 P.M., at the Parker Fraternity Hall in the Parker Memorial Building, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets.

Convention, Friday, May 28, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M. in the Parker Memorial Hall. At the morning session, an essay will be given by Francis E. Abbot on the question, "What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?" In the following addresses, the discussion will range under the general subject: "Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and the Step Next." In the afternoon, the subject is to be "Liberal Principles as opposed to Sectarianism in Education," to be opened with an essay by John H. Clifford, of North Andover. Prof. Felix Adler, Wm. H. Channing, Rowland Connor, Mary F. Eastman, Francis Tiffany, and Gustavus E. Gordon are among the speakers expected, most of them being positively promised.

Social Festival, Friday evening, in the same place, using both upper and lower halls. There will be music, brief addresses, refreshments, and opportunity for social greetings and conversation.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE UNITARIAN BOUNDARY.

CASE OF REV. GEORGE CHAINEY, OF EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.

An article from the New York Sun, and a paragraph from the Springfield Republican, printed elsewhere in this issue, notice the remarkable case of a recent convert to Unitarianism becoming a convert to Ingersollism, and resigning his pulpit on that account. It is no more than fair to give here some statements of the other side, to show how the Unitarians themselves look at the affair.

The Boston Christian Register, in its issue of May 1, had this item of news:—

A Remarkable Resignation.

The Unitarians, both East and West, have had another lesson of human instability—and perhaps several other valuable lessons—in the defection of Mr. George Chainey, who for three years has been the minister of the church at Evansville, Ind. On the 18th of April, after an address in which he committed himself fully to the position of agnosticism, proclaimed his acceptance of science as a substitute for religion, and denied with a good deal of sentiment the value and validity of what is called spiritual sentiment, he offered his resignation in a letter in which he disclaims belief in God, calls hymns of praise "meaningless compliments offered to infinite silence and nothingness," and declares that to him "the rite of prayer" is "a hideous mockery."

A curious part of the proceeding is that, having taken this leap into the abyss, he reminds his congregation of their right of independent action as a Unitarian church and beckons them to follow! As a matter of "common honesty," he tenders his resignation because he sees that a man who cannot call himself a Christian has no business to be the minister of a Christian Church. But, as a matter of uncommon honesty, he makes this resignation take effect June 1, 1880, and proceeds to announce a series of six Sunday evening lectures on "The New Gospel." Imagine Robert E. Lee announcing that his sense of honor and loyalty to Virginia would compel him to go over to the Southern Confederacy; but that he would hold his place and commission in the army of the United States six weeks longer to carry on a short campaign in the interest of secession!

How could it happen that the building dedicated to the worship of the Ever-living by a society organized on the basis of "love to God and man," and aided by the contributions of Christian people, should thus be deliberately held and used for six weeks by an avowedly anti-Christian teacher and non-believer in God? Probably the explanation appears on the pamphlet which contains the "copyrighted" sermon and letter of Mr. Chainey; namely, "The congregation, having been gradually prepared for this step by Mr. Chainey's previous discourse, almost unanimously sustained him." There is room for comment, but no need of it.

So far we had seen solely in the light of Mr. Chainey's pamphlet. But here come Evansville papers, reporting lively proceedings at a meeting of the Unitarian Society. A question was raised as to the lawfulness of using the church property for a purpose contrary to the original intent; a minority wished Mr. Chainey's resignation to take effect at once; but the prevailing voice was for letting him go on. A number of new members wished to vote: they all appeared to be his partisans. Did they join a religious society in order to help pervert the organization and the property to the uses of atheism?

Mr. Chainey, who was formerly a Methodist, had won favor and confidence by his apparent devotion to the spirit and work of religion; only a few weeks ago he accepted for his support an instalment from a fund raised "to promote a pure Christianity"; and the course he has now taken will cause the more surprise and sorrow, because it looks like the betrayal of a trust.

In its issue of May 15, the same journal contained the report of a meeting of the American Unitarian Association, at which this case was considered, as follows:—

American Unitarian Association.

The monthly meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the Unitarian Rooms, 7 Tremont Place, Boston, on Monday, May 10. Present, Mrs. Ames and Mrs. Lowe, and Messrs. Bigelow, Brown, Chaney, De Normandie, Fox, Gaffield, Guild, James, Kidder, Shippen, Tyler, Whitney, Willson, Wood, and Woodbury, Mr. Kidder presiding. . . .

The Western Committee presented the following letters:—

EVANSVILLE, IND., May 2, 1880.

REV. R. R. SHIPPEN:

Dear Sir,—Enclosed, please find copy of a clause in the will of Mrs. Ann Maidlow, late of Evansville, deceased, in relation to the building of a Unitarian Church in Evansville, Indiana. The will bequeaths $2,000 and a lot of land for the erection or support of a church of the Unitarian denomination.

The Trustees named in the will were Rev. John H. Heywood, Louisville, Ky., and Philip Hornbrooke and Jonas Smith, Evansville, Ind. The trust was accepted, and carried out in good faith. The church was built, and completed three years ago last March, and Rev. George Chainey called to the pastorate. The Society has been gaining ground, and for the past year we have felt much encouraged.

For the past few months we have seen that Mr. Chainey has been growing more and more radical, and sometimes the Trustees have felt that he would have to check up or lose his balance.

Robert G. Ingersoll, Esq., lectured here last winter, and Mr. Chainey seemed to be infatuated with him, and delivered a course of lectures on this gentleman as a reformer, religionist, etc. His radicalism finally culminated in a complete renunciation of Christianity.

A majority of the members go with Mr. Chainey in his wild vagaries; but they are mostly young persons who have but recently joined, and are of the German element.

The Board of Trustees consists of five persons, four of whom are opposed to Mr. Chainey.

Mrs. Maidlow, to whom we are indebted for our church property, was a consistent Unitarian Christian, and made the bequest for building a church of that faith. Now we claim that to continue Mr. Chainey as pastor, after his change of belief, would invalidate the title to the same. We have been informed by some of the best legal talent in the city that such would be the case. It looks now as if Mr. Chainey's adherents may try to hold on to the church property.

We should like, therefore, to have your opinion in the matter as to the proper course of procedure. If we (the Trustees) should be obliged to contest the matter, would the Unitarian Association assist us in the suit? The property is worth, at least, $8,000, with mortgage on the same of $1,000.

Yours truly,
JONAS SMITH,
For the Trustees of the Church of the Unity, Evansville, Ind.

The Committee also presented the following letter, written by the Secretary previous to the receipt of the above:—

AMERICAN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, }
BOSTON, May 5, 1880. }

REV. GEORGE CHAINEY, EVANSVILLE, Ind.:

Dear Sir,—I invite your attention to the following statement: As minister of the Unitarian Church at Evansville, reporting large opportunity and need of missionary work in your vicinity, you solicited aid from this Association, which, by its fundamental article, is formed "to promote the interests of pure Christianity." Presenting yourself as one devoted to this work, and commended to us by trusted friends whose confidence you held as a Christian minister, you obtained a grant of $200, to be paid quarterly during the current year. At the first of April, with no intimation to us of any change in your opinions, you sent for your quarterly instalment. Following your letter within a few days, comes to me a printed sermon and letter addressed to your congregation, in which you declare Jesus "a foe to liberty," prayer "a hideous mockery," "hymns of praise to a Creator meaningless compliments to infinite silence and nothingness," and add that you consider yourself "not a Christian."

Allow me, therefore, to make this inquiry: While, unknown to us, you are in your own locality making the public declarations above quoted, do you deem it consistent with truth, honesty, and honor silently to draw funds given as a sacred trust for the purpose of promulgating "pure Christianity"?

Respectfully,
RUSH R. SHIPPEN,
Secretary of the A. U. A.

After brief discussion, the following resolutions, offered by the Committee, were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That this Board heartily approves of the letter of the Secretary, dated May 5, addressed to Rev. George Chainey, Evansville, Ind., and in view of his present position, as stated in his printed sermon and letter to his congregation, the vote of July, 1879, appropriating to him $200 for missionary work in Southern Indiana, is hereby rescinded, and further payments discontinued. And the Trustees of the Unitarian Church, Evansville, have the entire approval of this Board in their purpose to contest before the courts, if found necessary, the claim to the church property.

Under the hope that this would not be found necessary, the Secretary was directed to confer further with the Trustees as to their future.

It is apparent that questions of personal honor are involved in this case, no less than questions of theological belief. The Unitarians have an indefeasible right to use their denominational funds for denominational purposes alone; they have an indefeasible right not to be deceived by false representations in the appropriation of those funds; and their executive officers have not only an indefeasible right, but an imperative duty, to administer their trust according to the understood policy of their sect. So far, all is clear. Facts are alleged, however, in the above statements, which should not be accepted as correct, until Mr. Chainey has had an opportunity, in the same columns, to state his own case fully and fairly. It is impossible for us to form an opinion on these alleged facts, or their bearings, until we know more about them; and we therefore propose at present neither to attack nor to defend Mr. Chainey in his action, viewed simply as a matter of ecclesiastical ethics or personal integrity. What we have to say here is on other points, more public in their character, and more important in their relation to Unitarianism itself.

1. Mr. Chainey, it appears, is a recent convert to Unitarianism from Methodism. What did he suppose he was embracing?

Unitarianism has always professed to uphold the right of perfect spiritual freedom,—the right of following out honest, earnest, truth-loving thought to its natural conclusions, be these what they may. These traditional professions, so alluring to all liberal minds, especially to minds made impatient by the long constraint of Orthodoxy, have been really to some extent neutralized by the famous preamble of the National Conference, which binds all its members to believe in the Lordship of Jesus Christ. But this preamble is half-apologetically kept in the background, not boldly put forward and emphasized, as it ought to be so long as it is retained. Hence Unitarianism presents itself to progressive young Orthodox ministers as far more free and liberal than it really is; and if, after once joining the denomination, in innocent unconsciousness of the "rod in pickle" reserved for spirits who are logically too sequent and practically too bold to be easily held in check, they construe their new-found liberty too broadly, then they discover suddenly and not pleasantly that the limitations of their liberty are no dead-letter, but serious and formidable reality. Mr. Chainey has gone no farther than he had an undeniable right to go within the Unitarian fellowship, if these ancient Unitarian professions of perfect freedom have any other than a purely Pickwickian sense; the present indignation against his bold course has no justification, except in the unconfessed restrictions of perfect freedom contained in the phraseology of the preamble, old trust-deeds, etc. He has exactly as strong a case against the Unitarians as they have against him. If they accuse him of violating the pledge to work for a "pure Christianity," contained in the old articles of the American Unitarian Association, he can accuse them of keeping their dogmatic construction of "pure Christianity" carefully out of sight, and of professing to the world that "pure Christianity" and "perfect freedom" are entirely compatible. He has only taken Unitarianism at its word; what is all the fuss about? If his honest thought carries him outside of Christianity and outside of Theism, what is that to them, if they really guarantee perfect liberty of thought? Why can he not turn round and accuse the Unitarians of having enticed him into their denomination by false professions, inasmuch as they promised him perfect liberty in words, and now deny him the enjoyment of it in fact? We do not say that either he or they would be justified in making such accusations; probably one party is as honest and honorable as the other; but it behooves them both to be very cautious how they charge bad faith in this matter. Mr. Chainey may have been inconsistent; the Unitarians have been inconsistent beyond a peradventure. Inconsistency is no sin, when it is the result merely of confusion of thought; but we seem to see more confusion of thought in the Association than in Mr. Chainey, and more inconsistency too.

2. Simply for declaring himself "not a Christian" and following this up by the preaching of non-Christian doctrines, Mr. Chainey is now punished by the American Unitarian Association, and his stipulated instalment is withheld by them. This is perfectly right, provided the understanding was that he should preach certain stipulated doctrines—in which case "pure Christianity" would not be even pretended to be compatible with "perfect freedom." But it is totally wrong, provided the understanding was that he should simply preach the truth as he sees the truth—in which case "pure Christianity" would be indeed identified with "perfect freedom." We are blaming nobody; we only plead for a fair and honest understanding on this vital point of liberty between Unitarianism and the world at large. Let the present painful and misleading and humiliating ambiguity in the attitude of Unitarianism be abolished; let it be either one thing or the other—either Christian or free. Both it cannot be; and the endeavor to be both is infinitely harmful. If the preamble means anything, let it be bravely lived up to, and let the hollow pretence of "perfect spiritual freedom" be forever dropped. But, if the preamble means nothing, then let it be as bravely thrown overboard, to the end that Unitarianism and Free Religion may be one in profession, as they are already so largely one in spirit.

Is there a single Unitarian so obfuscated as not to see that this punishment of Mr. Chainey for telling the truth as he honestly sees it is a glaring denial of spiritual freedom? His new views are not ours; we consider his present Ingersollism as more crude, raw, and one-sided than his old Unitarianism; we are not pleading our own case in pleading his. But we do believe in his right to proclaim his Ingersollism without loss of spiritual fellowship among those who love freedom; for fellowship ought to be a matter of "spirit and life," not of mere belief. The treatment he is now receiving from Unitarianism ought to make visible to every one the undeniable, impassable, dogmatic boundary which it sets up about its fellowship; and there ought to be an end forever of the sadly untrue claim that "pure Christianity" and "perfect freedom" are compatible. Freedom unrestricted and fellowship unbounded are compatible on the principle that the "spirit and life" are the one thing needful; but any and every attempt to realize this principle in Christianity is a foredoomed failure. Let the only division be between those who live and work upwards and those who live and work downwards; and then the triumph of truth, righteousness, and love is assured in this world of ours.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

I have been lecturing the past six weeks in Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, and West Virginia. Nearly a week I was in debate at Scranton, Iowa, with Rev. Frank Evans (Methodist), one of the ablest ministers of his denomination in the West, an experienced and skilful debater and a fair-minded man. He had been a whole year preparing for this debate; and, although the arguments he advanced were old, they were quite ingeniously presented. The concessions that he made were quite a surprise to the Orthodox Christians generally, although only such as are now made by all the more advanced theologians. The debate was held in the Methodist church, which had been dedicated only a few days previously; and the attendance, from beginning to close, was large and the interest well sustained. These debates enable us to reach a class which but for them would never become acquainted with our positions and principle, and, when conducted in the right spirit, are a means of much good.

The case at Irwin Station, Pa., where two years ago I was arrested, with two other gentlemen, for occupying a school-house for "immoral purposes," has been decided against us, and damages found to the extent of $150, which with costs amount to $500. When it is remembered that my lecture was simply a presentation of the teachings of modern science in contrast to the fancies of theology, given at the invitation of the liberals of that place; that I spoke in a building which had been obtained for the purpose from the president of the school-board, with whom it had been customary to rent the hall, and who gave, on this occasion, written permission for its occupation; that I found the hall open at the appointed hour, and received not a line or a word from anybody that its use would be deemed illegal; that the lecture was given without opposition or even interruption, and no damage of any kind, so far as I know, was done to anybody or anything,—when these facts are remembered, it will be seen that this is a case of pure persecution. Acquittal seemed inevitable, until the judge, a very zealous devotee of the Church, charged the jury. He told the jury that Christianity is part of the common law of the State of Pennsylvania, and said that, if they believed the lecture anti-Christian, they must regard it as illegal; and in that case the refusal of the building was justifiable, even after the president of the school-board had granted its use.

Thus everything depended upon the legality of the lecture, and, since that was anti-Christian, the jury were bound, by the instruction of the judge, to decide the case against us. From what I hear regarding the jury, I infer they were quite willing to render the verdict they did, and to make damages as large as possible. The case has been appealed to the Supreme Court. The secular press of Pennsylvania, and of the country generally, so far as I have observed, takes a reasonable and sensible view of this case, regarding it as an exhibition of bigotry and intolerance. I am glad that this instance of religious intolerance does not represent the average sentiment of the country, and I trust it will find its fitting rebuke in a reversal of the unjust verdict in the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

I am receiving applications from various places to give the lecture for which I have been prosecuted, and I shall repeat it at Florence, Mass., May 16.

B. F. U.

THE NECESSITY OF PROTEST.

One E. C. Walker, notorious for his advocacy of free-love and "anti-Comstockism," writes to the Mirror of Progress (a so-called liberal journal published in Missouri) in strains of gushing admiration of "the hero of the century." This effusively absurd outburst begins as follows: "This day, April 29, the martyr-hero, D. M. Bennett, steps forth from his prison cell a free man, his name rendered forever illustrious and his character unstained!"

Some person or persons unknown to us have just published a tract containing the passages of Bennett's letters which were too foully obscene to be published by the Religio-Philosophical Journal last autumn, and have circulated it, apparently for the purpose of showing the public to what inconceivable depths of vileness this "unstained character" has sunk. Walker evidently considers such obscenity as no "stain" upon "character"; and the same conclusion must be drawn as to his other loud-mouthed champions since his exposure by Col. Bundy.

The ostentatious publicity of the adulation now heaped upon Bennett proves the fixed resolution of the free-love rabble to drag on the entire body of liberals into open or silent submission to their control, and to identify free-love with liberalism itself in the public mind. All they want of the better class of liberals is unprotesting silence now; they only want, like the rebels of twenty years ago, to be "let alone." How long will this unprotesting silence endure? The protest of THE INDEX has been made, sternly and powerfully; and it will yet be remembered as the one redeeming feature of liberalism that can be pointed out, as a matter of public record, during the past two years.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

THE FRANK LESLIE will be still in court.

IT IS REPORTED that George Eliot has become Cross.

MR. W. D. HOWELLS, the editor of the Atlantic, has recently been a guest at the White House.

H. R. H. PRINCE LEOPOLD is coming. He contemplates a visit of about four months with us.

MR. GEORGE VANDENHOFF, the well-known actor and elocutionist, sailed a few days since for Europe.

SECRETARY SCHURZ writes that, if needed to take a hand in the anti-third-term cause, he will be ready for duty.

MR. E. G. PINKHAM, late of the Commercial Bulletin, Boston, has begun the publication of a trade paper in New York, called Cotton.

PROFESSOR JOHN M. COULTER, of Wabash College, has been appointed instructor in botany at Harvard. It is not often that an Eastern college goes so far west for its teachers.

COMMODORE NUTT, the dwarf, has opened a saloon in New York. It would be a terrible temperance lecture if while drawing beer he should fall in the glass and be drowned.—Philadelphia Chronicle Herald.

A VERY COMPLICATED astronomical clock, for which the owner, Felix Meier, has been offered $45,000, is exhibited in Rochester. Meier passed ten years of constant labor making it, and it is described as a wonderful piece of mechanism. A skeleton strikes the hour.

MISS EMILY FAITHFULL, who is about to revisit America on a lecturing tour, is the daughter of a clergyman, and is forty-five years of age. She at one time enjoyed the pleasures of fashionable life, but soon became devoted to improving the condition of working-women. She is a favorite of the Queen.

PROFESSOR GEORGE L. VOSE, of Bowdoin Col-

Communications.

THE KING OF SIAM AND BUDDHISM.

The expected visit of the youthful king of Siam to the United States, during the approaching summer, will naturally excite considerable curiosity in the public mind touching whatever relates to the ancient or contemporaneous history of that most interesting of the lesser kingdoms of Asia, over which he holds absolute sway. The event will also renew and intensify the interest which was created by the publication, in 1870, of that graphic narrative of Mrs. A. H. Leonowens, in which she relates the incidents of her six years' experience as governess at the royal palace of Bangkok.

It will be recollected that the then Prince Somdetch Chulaf Chulalokorn, now supreme king of Siam, was a pupil of hers, and was regarded by her as a lad of excellent parts and of high promise. We have reason to believe that her hopeful anticipations concerning him will not be disappointed.

The late Hon. William H. Seward, ex-Secretary of State of the United States, and ex-President Grant, in the course of their respective journeys around the world, visited the capital of the kingdom of Siam, and were cordially and most hospitably entertained by their royal host, the king, at his palace at Bangkok. It is understood that the proposed visit of the young king will be made upon the invitation, or rather at the suggestion, of General Grant. Be this as it may, there is no doubt he will be received officially and unofficially with that courtesy and kind hospitality which are due to his character and rank, and which are characteristic of the American nation.

That the readers of THE INDEX, who may not have enjoyed the pleasure of a perusal of Mrs. Leonowens' delightful narrative, may learn from her pen somewhat of the king's characteristics, as they were manifested to her during his pupilage, I have transcribed for republication two or three detached passages from the chapter under the caption of "The Heir-Apparent." They are as follows:—

"The Prince Somdetch Chulaf Chulalokorn (the present supreme king) was about ten years old when I was appointed to teach him. Being the eldest son of the queen consort, he held the first rank among the children of the king, as heir-apparent to the throne. For a Siamese, he was a handsome lad; of stature neither noticeably tall nor short; figure symmetrical and compact, and dark complexion. He was, moreover, modest and affectionate, eager to learn, and easy to influence. . . .

"From his studies, both in English and Pali, he derived an exalted ideal of life, and precocious and inexpressible yearnings. Once he said to me he envied the death of the venerable priest, his uncle: he would rather be poor, he said, and have to earn his living, than be a king.

"'Tis true a poor man must work hard for his daily bread, but then he is free; and his food is all he has to win. He can possess all things in possessing Him who pervades all things,—earth and sky and stars and flowers and children. I can understand that I am great in that I am a part of the Infinite, and in that alone; and that all I see is mine, and I am in it and of it. How much of content and happiness should I not gain, if I could but be a poor boy!"

"He was attentive to his studies, serene and gentle, invariably affectionate to his old aunt and his younger brothers, and for the poor even sympathetic, with a warm, generous heart. He pursued his studies assiduously, and seemed to overcome the difficulties and obstacles he encountered in the course of them with a resolution that gained strength as his mind gained ideas. As often as he effectually accomplished something, he indulged in ecstasies of rejoicing over the new thought, that was an inspiring discovery to him of his actual poverty of knowledge, his possibilities of intellectual opulence. But it was clear to me—and I saw it with sorrow—that for his ardent nature this was but a transitory condition, and that soon the shock must come, against the inevitable destiny in store for him, that would either confirm or crush all that seemed so fair in the promise of the royal boy."

These brief quotations will suffice to show that the "royal boy" was well endowed by nature with those mental germs which, under happy influences,—such as appear to have envied him,—might be expected to develop into an admirable fruitage. Of his career, since his accession to the throne of his father, the writer knows but little, but from certain intimations believes him to be an upright and able ruler, as well as a progressive man. Being only about twenty-eight years of age, and therefore impressionable, and being desirous also to advance the well-being of his subjects by the introduction among them of Western ideas and arts, we have much cause to hope that his proposed tour will prove to have been of great advantage, both to himself and to his people.

In connection with his expected advent upon our shores, it may not be amiss to allude to another matter, of scarcely less moment. I refer to the recent publication of Edwin Arnold's charming narrative poem, under the title of The Light of Asia. In this remarkable little volume, we have a poetic rendering of the principal incidents in the life of one of the world's greatest benefactors, Sakya-Muni, the Buddha, or Asian Christ. He was the founder of that great Oriental religion which, though since monstrously perverted, even as the Christian religion was by those who made commerce of sacred things, in order to fatten upon the spoils wrung from ignorance and superstition, is yet embraced by more than a third of the population of the globe. Differing in form in the different empires of the East, and in the various petty provinces of these, wherever it is dominant, it still retains some of the leaven of its originally beautiful spirit. It sprang from a pure fountain, which, broadening as it flowed down the declivity of time, over the vast region of the Orient, fructifying whatever it touched with its beneficent influence, became, in the lapse of centuries, corrupted by Egyptian, Greek, and Indian mythologies, so that, at the present day, we behold it divested of much of its original beauty, and impregnated with that which is gross and forbidding. Nevertheless, there may be seen, even now, vestiges of the Buddhist religion which are entitled to the world's regard. To exemplify this, I need offer no apology for appending hereunto Mrs. Leonowens' interesting description of a visit she once made, in company with one of the king's wives, to the royal private temple, Watt P'hra Kéau, to witness the service held there on the Buddhist Sabáto. I am sure the reader will be impressed with the thought that, however absurd the ceremonial observed may seem to have been, in its devotional aspect, the service held in that Pagan temple would not suffer by comparison with that which may be witnessed in our Protestant Evangelical churches every Sunday in the year; and that, in respect of its religious rites, it is less open to the charge of mummery than are either the Greek or Roman Catholic forms of worship.

Omitting, for lack of space, much that is interesting in Mrs. Leonowens' description, I quote the following:—

"The renaissance of Buddhism sought to eliminate from the arrogant and impious pantheisms of Egypt, India, and Greece, a simple and pure philosophy, upholding virtue as man's greatest good and highest reward. It taught that the only object worthy of his noblest aspirations was to render the soul (itself an emanation from God) fit to be absorbed back again into the divine essence from which it sprang. The single aim, therefore, of pure Buddhism seems to have been to rouse men to an inward contemplation of the divinity of their own nature; to fix their thoughts on the spiritual life within as the only real and true life; to teach them to disregard all earthly distinctions, conditions, privileges, enjoyments, privations, sorrows, sufferings; and thus to incite them to continual efforts in the direction of the highest ideals of patience, purity, self-denial.

"Buddhism cannot be clearly defined by its visible results to-day. There are more things in that subtle, mystical enigma called in the Pali NIRWANA, in the Burmese NIBAN, in the Siamese NIPHAN, than are dreamed of in our philosophy. With the idea of Niphan in his theology, it were absurdly false to say the Buddhist has no God. His decalogue* is as plain and imperative as the Christian's:—

"I. From the meanest insect up to man, thou shalt kill no animal whatsoever.

"II. Thou shalt not steal.

"III. Thou shalt not violate the wife of another, nor his concubine.

"IV. Thou shalt speak no word that is false.

"V. Thou shalt not drink wine, nor anything that may intoxicate.

"VI. Thou shalt avoid all anger, hatred, and bitter language.

"VII. Thou shalt not indulge in idle and vain talk.

"VIII. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods.

"IX. Thou shalt not harbor envy, nor pride, nor revenge, nor malice, nor the desire of thy neighbor's death or misfortune.

"X. Thou shalt not follow the doctrines of false gods.

"Whosoever abstains from these forbidden things is said to 'observe Silah'; and whosoever shall faithfully observe Silah, in all his successive metempsychoses, shall continually increase in virtue and purity, until at length he shall become worthy to behold God and hear his voice, and so shall obtain Niphan. 'Be assiduous in bestowing alms, in practicing virtue, in observing Silah, in performing Barana, prayer; and, above all, in adoring Gaudama, the true God. Reverence likewise his laws and his priests.'

"Many have missed seeing what is true and wise in the doctrine of Buddha, because they have preferred to observe it from the stand-point and in the attitude of an antagonist rather than of an inquirer. To understand aright the earnest creed and hope of any man, one must be at least sympathetically en rapport with him,—must be willing to feel and to confess within one's self the germs of those errors whose growth seems so rank in him. In the humble spirit of this fellowship of fallibility, let us draw as near as we may to the hearts of these devotees and the heart of their mystery.

"My interesting pupil, the Lady Táláp, had invited me to accompany her to the royal private temple, Watt P'hra Kéau, to witness the services held there on the Buddhist Sabáto, or One-thu-sin. Accordingly, we repaired together to the temple on the day appointed. The day was young, and the air was cool and fresh; and, as we approached the place of worship, the clustered bells of the pagodas made breezy gushes of music aloft. One of the court pages, meeting us, inquired our destination. 'The Watt P'hra Kéau,' I replied. 'To see or to hear?' 'Both,' and we entered.

"On a floor, diamonded with polished brass, sat a throng of women, the élite of Siam. All were robed in pure white, with white silk scarfs drawn from the left shoulder in careful folds across the bust and back, and thrown gracefully over the right. A little apart sat their female slaves, of whom many were inferior to their mistresses only in social consideration and worldly gear, being their half-sisters,—children of the same father by a slave-mother.

"The women sat in circles, and each displayed her vase of flowers and her lighted taper before her. In front of all were a number of my younger pupils, the lege, Maine, who is regarded as an authority upon such subjects, says that over two hundred railroad bridges have fallen within the past ten years. He attributes these "accidents" either to the selection of bad material, faulty construction, and imperfect supervision, or all of these causes combined.

* Translated from the Pali.

"THE NUMEROUS Detroit acquaintances of the young princes, Albert Victor and George, midshipmen and sons of the Prince of Wales, will be pleased to learn that their wages have been raised. Instead of twenty-five cents a day, the youngsters now get forty-three cents. It is to be hoped the advance will not make them unduly proud."—Free Press.

MR. CHARLES FREDERIC ADAMS, who is known to the readers of THE INDEX by his occasional communications to its columns upon economic subjects during the past year, has gone to Paris to conduct there a branch of the law firm of Coudert & Brothers, of New York, with which he is connected. It is possible, should the situation prove an agreeable one, that he may remain abroad some years.

STATISTICS HAVE recently been taken in respect to the religious proclivities of Harvard students, with the following results: "Of 943 Harvard students who were graduated between 1869 and 1875 inclusive, 360 were Unitarians or liberals, 217 Episcopalians, 126 Orthodox Congregationalists, 46 Baptists, 25 Presbyterians, 16 Methodists, 12 Swedenborgians, 8 other Trinitarians, 2 Quakers, 15 Catholics, 2 Jews, 1 Mormon, and 113 undecided.

THIRTY-EIGHT Greek ladies living in London have addressed a letter to Mrs. Gladstone, in which they "beg to be permitted to offer to you, on your happy return to town, our warmest congratulations on the signal triumph of your illustrious husband, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and our hearty good wishes for his health and welfare," and say, "as Greeks we owe a debt of gratitude to the great statesman who, in befriending the unhappy and persecuted Christians of the East, promulgated a policy of justice, beneficence, and progress, which has received a supreme sanction by the votes of the British people." To this Mrs. Gladstone replied as follows: "I received with gratitude last night your beautiful present of flowers, so sweet and so rare in themselves, and such a pretty proof of affection, but doubly acceptable from bringing with them the letter which we so highly prize, with prayers and sentiments so precious and gratifying. Will you, madam, accept for yourself and convey to all the ladies the sincere thanks of my husband and myself? If he needed any reward, he has it abundantly if only he may have been permitted to be, in the slightest degree, the instrument of doing some good to your country and race."

FOREIGN.

THE ST. PETERSBURG correspondent of the Standard says he is in a position to confirm the reports of the expulsion of Jews from St. Petersburg. A Bavarian Jew has just been expelled.

A PARIS DESPATCH to the Times says: "Fifteen acres of firs in the Forest of Fontainebleau have been burned. The fire was caused by the carelessness of a smoker. None of the old, picturesque trees suffered."

THE CLERICAL ORGANS in the provinces announce a grand campaign of lectures and banquets against the decrees of the 29th of March in all points of the French territory. It is stated in the morning journals that the Archbishop of Avignon, while on a visit, refused to accept the usual honors prescribed by the Concordat, saying that he did not wish to listen to the hymn so dear to the drunkard, meaning the "Marseillaise."

VICTOR HUGO's hats have commenced a career among historical curiosities already. At a recent sale in Brussels, a straw hat formerly worn by the author of Les Misérables brought seventeen francs. It belonged to M. Camille Barru, proprietor of L'Indépendance Belge, who came into possession of it in the following manner: When, in 1870, Victor Hugo returned to Paris, he went to say farewell to his friend. M. Barru proposed an exchange of hats. The poet willingly consented, and wrote in the crown of his, before parting with it, "Victor Hugo dedit (6 September, 1870)."

THE "CHILDREN'S PINAFORE."—Benedict Tagcagni, aged six years and seven months, died on March 26 of acute rheumatism. He was the Midshipmite in the "Children's Pinafore" at the Opera Comique; and his clever performance had elicited commendation from, among others, their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Princess Mary Adelaide. He was taken ill on Saturday, March 20, the last day of the season, and was given up by his physician on Monday night. During the delirium consequent on his illness, he continually sang snatches of the "Pinafore" music, the last audible sounds he uttered being his childish version of "For he is an Englishman." He was buried at Kensal Green.

THE RECENT Liberal triumph throughout the country has sorely troubled the Rev. Canon Codd, of Salisbury. "There are measures in prospect," he says, "which make one tremble for the Church and Nation. The extension of the County Franchise,—can it possibly mean that the rich, the great, and the noble are to be gradually subordinated to the many? Alas, if it does. Nevertheless, there is One that ruleth on high in the kingdoms of men." He pulleth down one and setteth up another." Does the reverend gentleman mean that the "One that ruleth on high" has pulleth down the Tory Government, and replaced it by a Liberal one? If so, why this lamentation at the "work of the Lord"? If the Canon does not mean this, the ruling on high has been superseded by the ruling below.—Secular Review.

royal children, in circles also. Close by the altar, on a low square stool, overlaid with a thin cushion of silk, sat the high priest, Chow Khoun Sâh. In his hand he held a concave fan, lined with pale green silk, the back richly embroidered, jewelled, and gilt. He was draped in a yellow robe, not unlike the Roman toga, a loose, flowing habit, closed below the waist, but open from the throat to the girdle, which was simply a band of yellow cloth bound tightly. From the shoulders hung two narrow strips, also yellow, descending over the robe to the feet, and resembling the scapular worn by certain orders of the Roman Catholic clergy. At his side sat seventeen disciples, shading their faces with fans less richly adorned.

"We put off our shoes, my child and I, having respect for the ancient prejudice against them; feeling not so much reverence for the place as for the hearts that worshipped there, caring to display not so much the love of wisdom as the wisdom of love; and well were we repaid by the grateful smile of recognition that greeted us as we entered."

"We sat down cross-legged. No need to hush my boy,—the silence there, so subduing, checked with its mysterious awe even his inquisitive young mind. The venerable high-priest sat with his face jealously covered, lest his eyes should tempt his eyes to stray. I changed my position to catch a glimpse of his countenance: he drew his fan-veil more closely, giving me a quick but gentle half-glance of remonstrance. Then raising his eyes, with lids nearly closed, he chanted in an infantile, wailing tone."

"That was the opening prayer. At once the whole congregation raised themselves on their knees, and, all together, prostrated themselves profoundly, thrice touching the polished brass floor with their foreheads; and then, with heads bowed and palms folded and eyes closed, they delivered the responses after the priest, much in the manner of the English liturgy, first the priest, then the people, and finally all together. There was no singing, no standing up and sitting down, no changing of robes or places, no turning the face to the altar, nor north, nor south, nor east, nor west. All knelt still, with hands folded straight before them, and eyes strictly, tightly closed. Indeed, there were faces there that expressed devotion and piety, the humblest and the purest, as the lips murmured, 'O thou eternal One, thou perfection of time, thou truest truth, thou immutable essence of all change, thou most excellent radiance of mercy, thou infinite compassion, thou pity, thou charity!'"

"I lost some of the responses in the simultaneous repetition, and did but imperfectly comprehend the exhortation that followed, in which was inculcated the strictest practice of charity in a manner so pathetic and so gentle as might be wisely imitated by the most Orthodox of Christian priests."

"There was majesty in the humility of those pagan worshippers, and in their shame of self they were sublime. I leave both the truth and the error to Him who alone can soar to the bright heights of the one and can sound the dark depths of the other, and take to myself the lesson to be read in the shrinking forms and hidden faces of those patient waiters for a far-off glimmering LIGHT,—the lesson wherefrom I learn, in thanking God for the light of Christianity, to thank him for its shadow too, which is Buddhism."

